MONROEVILLE CIRCUIT—Rev. W. P. Miller, writes: "The Lord has visited us indeed with the outpouring of his Spirit on this Circuit, over one hundred have been added to our Church within the last three months and there have been a great many conversions. The work is still going on at several appointments."

Mississippi Conference.

BLACK HAWK—Rev. D. W. Dillehay, writes: "We have had an interesting meeting here for several days past, the old Church walls rang again with the shouts of happy converts"

Louisiana Conference.

MINDEN CIRCUIT—Rev. A. E. Goodwin, writes: "We have had a very interesting and profitable meeting at the "Cold Springs camp-ground," eight miles North of Minden, Claiborne Louisiana; it commenced on Friday night October 24th, and closed on the Wednesday morning following, forty-seven persons joined the Church and fifty-two professed conversion. The result of the first meeting at our new camp ground was very encouraging to all, and before separating the tent-holders held a meeting and resolved (D. V.) "There will be a camp-meeting held at the 'Cold Spring camp-ground' commencing on Friday night before the last Sabbath in August 1859." We adjourned from the tented grove to Minden, and commenced a protracted meeting, which lasted about two weeks, and resulted in accession of twenty-nine members and in thirty conversions, the people of God are greatly revived, and there seems to be a deep and general interest in the community, on the subject of religion. We are now enlarging and finishing our Church, at a cost of about a thousand dollars. The Missionary collection thus far has been better responded to here than ever before. God's ministers are well sustained and the cause of religion prospers on this work."

WINNSBORO CIRCUIT—Revs. T. H. McClendon, and T. J. Upton, write: "We have just closed a meeting of ten days, at "Magnolia Chapel," where God was pleased, in answer to many prayers to shower down his blessings upon the people. The Church was greatly revived, a great many penitents were at the altar, about ten of whom were through faith in Christ Jesus, justified before God who "sent forth his spirit into their hearts, crying Abba Father." Twenty-three accessions were made to the Church, the spirit of Christianity seemed pervaded the whole settlement, also $1,250 was raised for the erecting of a Methodist Episcopal Church."

VERMILLION CIRCUIT—Rev. W. P. Kimball, writes: "I see Brother White has given you an account of the interesting meeting he held for us in the Tawa of Vermillionville, and I will add that is not the only point at which the Lord has been pleased to visit us with the manifestations of his love, and the outpourings of his grace and Spirit. At Queue De Tortue, on last Saturday I commenced a meeting which progressed with increasing interest up till Tuesday night. Though we were without any ministerial help, yet the Lord was pleased to come to our aid forcing his truth upon the hearts and consciences of the people; there were twenty-four received on probation, several who had long since joined the Church as seekers were enabled to realize for themselves that Christ hath power upon earth to forgive sins. I believe there was great and lasting good accomplished, sinners convicted, mourners converted, backsliders reclaimed and the Church abundantly built up; a strong evidence of lasting good is that the people not only saw that they need a larger house of worship, but resolved to build it. The day after the meeting closed, I started round to see what they could do, the first brother I approached gave three hundred dollars, the next one hundred, the third the same, the fourth one hundred, and a widowed sister fifty. I think we shall raise enough to build one of the largest and best churches in the country. The Lord bless, prosper and save the people of Queue De Tortue."

CALCASIEU CAMP MEETING—Rev. B. F. White, writes: "I had the pleasure of attending the Calcasieu camp-meeting embracing the third Sabbath in October, we had the best order, about twenty-five conversions, twenty-eight baptized by pouring, of which about fifteen were children. Brothers Parrish and McBeath are doing a good work out there. Brother Parvin the pioneer of Methodism in Calcasieu, was there in charge of the meeting; that is an interesting field, and promising."

CALCASIEU—Rev. R. Parvin, writes, "The friends of Zion will be interested in hearing from Methodism in Calcasieu; we closed our meeting yesterday October 19th, there were twenty-five or thirty conversions, several joined the Church. The power of the Lord was felt and feared."

Ecclesiastical and Religious.

Canadian Methodism.

The London Watchman says that the extent, increase and developement of Canadian Methodism are suprising: and to this branch of our Church the British Conference seems to look for sending out missionaries to the new Golden-colony on the Pacific. It is at least significant, and most appropriate, that the reference to British Columbia should be found in the address of the Wesleyan Conference to the Wesleyan Methodist Conference in Canada.

Christian Slaves.

The following figures show the number of slaves at the South, who are Church members, and the Churches they belong to:

Connected with the Methodist Church, South, are	200,000
Methodist, North, in Virginia and Moryland	15,000
Missionary and Hard-shell Baptists,	175,000
Old-School Presbyterians	12,000
New School Presbyterians, supposed,	8,000
Cumberland Presbyterians,	20,000
Protestant Episcopalians,	7,000
Campbellites, or Christian Church	10,000
All other Sects combined,	20,000
Total colored membership South,	468,000

The Patagonian Mission.

We rejoice to hear from the best authority that the affairs of the Putngonian Missionary Society, in South America, are prospering to the extent which could be expected in the time and under the circumstances of their course. Their agents have found two advantageous openings in the Brazils among the Indians—two on the Rio de la Pluta—one in Putagonia—three in Tierra del Fuego. From the last named their missionaries have just brought, as most willing visitors, to the mission-station in the Falklands, Jemmy Button, with his wife and family. This man was bought by Captain Robert Fitzroy, for a button, brought to England in the Beagle, kept some months here, taught English, and, twenty-six years ago, returned with the same well known naval officer to Woolya, his native place. The missionaries report the difficulty to be, not to persuade Fuegians to come to their station, but not to come. They say they could have brought their ship full.

The American Sunday School Union.

In noticing, on recent occasions, the amount and value of the Philadelphia Book trade, we omitted the publications of several religious societies and boards. Those of the American Sunday School Union, the oldest of the Philadelphia religious book concerns, form no inconsiderable item in this department of our commercial activity. The catalogue of books published by this society numbers over one thousand, the largest list, by far, of any in the country, if not in the world. Although most of these volumes are small, yet many of them sell largely, and the aggregate of the entire sales is large—not much less the present year, we understand, than a quarter of a million of dollars. The activity of the publishing department of the society is indicated by the fact, that they are now publishing a new volume every Saturday morning. The embarrassment produced by the unfaithfulness of one of their officers last fall, seems to have offered only a temporry check to their business. The loss itself proved to be much less than was originally estimated. The creditors of the society trusted them with great liberality and forbearance, and the promptness with which the managers came forward, to make up, out of their own pockets, all the actual loss of their unworthy officer, has created for the society a very general feeling of kindness and sympathy. Besides, the books which it is their business to produce are among the growing wants of the community. The consequence of all this is, that their business as a publishing house has never been so full of life and activity as at the present time. Philadelphia Ledger.

A Good Pulpit.

A marble pulpit has been presented to the Congregational Church, of Brandon, Vt., by a proprietor of one of the marble quarries in that vicinity. It consists of a platform of about fifteen feet by six, and some two and a half feet in height, with massive balustrades and stairs at the ends, and a reading desk of beautiful design, set forward and supported by brackets in the center. The whole is of snow-white, polished marble, and the effect is singularly appropriate, presenting in its chaste design and luster a most impressive type of the sanctity of its purpose.

Catholic Missions to China.

A letter from Rome, in the Brussels Independence, states that the opening of China to Christian missionaries is the absorbing theme at Rome; and the Pope, it is added, is about to organize a grand collection throughout Catholic Europe on behalf of special missions.

Wonder if this item will stimulate Protestant Churches which have missions in China to enter vigorously into that immense country, now fully open to them!

New Church History.

It is stated that the first volume of Dr. Schaffe's Church History is in press, and will appear in a few weeks.

Literature, Education and Art.

A Vulgar Perversion.

That portion of the money-made, mushroom aristocracy of this country, who think it vastly esthetical to have their houses and grounds decurated with naked statues and Statuettes of human beings, will probably be edified by the following, from Prof. Westmacutt's "Lectures on Sculpture," taken from the London Athenæum:

"After the time of Phidias an innovation was introduced that greatly affected art for all time. Hitherto the female figure had been represented appropriately and modestly covered with drapery. Then, at first a comparative slight change was attempted, and the figure was only partially draped, from the waist downwards. This succeeding, a further license was taken; and, it is believed it was at this time, and not before, that the female form was first displayed in sculpture, entirely naked. This was the second phase of sculpture during its zenith, and the fatal descent was begun, by making art appeal to the grosser senses. These innovations caused a total revolution in the principles that had previously influenced art; and from which, it may be observed, Greek art never recovered. It was no longer to be of that high esthetical character that had hitherto dignified it."

It would have been well for public taste and modesty had such views generally prevailed, before the "Greek Slave," and other things like it, were exhibited naked to men and women promiscuously assembled, all over the country.

Astor Library.

Dr. Cogswell says, in the Post, that "no book has been published since Gibbon's History, that is so remarkable for the wide range of its citations, as Buckle's "History of Civilization;" it is learned, in the broadest sense of the word; and that this book might have been written by the aid of the Astor Library, will be evident to any one who should undertake to verify its references there."

"The last fact is, that the whole work, thus far, of forming the library, classifying, arranging and catalogueing it alphabetically, systematically, and for the press; filling all its shelves, and constantly keeping its classification undisturbed, while it was daily receiving great accessions, has been done in less time and at less cost, than ever before placed a library of equal extent in the same condition. A comparitively small portion of my part of the work remains to be done. When I shall have finished the catalogue, the printing of which has been suspended for a time, on account of the rapid additions which were being made to the library, I shall consider that my duty to the kind friend and great public benefactor, who entrusted it to my care, has been performed. For ten years it has demanded incessant labor, which for much of that time has been so exacting as to compel me to neglect all other duties."

The Very Latest Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

New York, Oct. 31.—Continental Banks.—The Bavarian Bank had advanced the rates of Discount to five per cent. The Prussian Bank also advanced their rates to 5 per cent.; and Leipsic Bank to 4½ per cent., owing to the resumption of specie payments by the Bank of Austria.....The revenue of the French Government, up to the month of October, exceed by 5,000,000 the amount received for the same period last year. Increase, chiefly sugar duties.....Atlantic Telegraph Shares are at £300 @ £350 per share.....It is denied, a coolness exists between the Archduke Maximilian and the Austrian Government.....Spain and the United States.—The Spanish Government has issued a decree to the effect, that all steamers running between Cuba and the United States shall have the same privileges as English steamers, and may carry six tons of merchandize without paying light-house dues.

DOMESTIC.

The United States Treasury.—Washington, Oct. 28.—The balance in the Treasury on the 25th inst. was $7,589,000. The receipts for the week were $650,000. Amount of drafts paid, $1,542,000; and the amount issued, $1,728,000—which is a reduction of 1,671,000 on the previous week.....Commodore Breese has been appointed to the command of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.....Our Government is preparing a reply to the British proposal, in relation to suppressing filibustering expeditions to Central America.....St. Louis, Oct. 28.—Leroy denies the report of his withdrawal from the Congressional contest in Illinois.....New York, Oct. 29—The New York Times reports that our Government have received dispatches from our Central American Minister, Mr. Lamar—who states that Costa Rica promptly retracts the offensive language used in the famous Belly (bully) treaty; and says, such language would not have been used had Mons. Belly been as well known as he now is.....The lake boats were proceeding up the river without interference.....A Hartford letter, from Gen. Tyler, dated Alec Mission, Washington Territory, 16th Sept. says that the Spokan and Pelnse Indians have been defeated, after two days' hard fighting, without any loss by our forces. The Chief of the Spokans was captured; nine hundred horses, and the plunder taken at Col. Steptoe's defeat has been recovered. The Indians were anxious and begging for peace. They were ready to comply with all the demands of the officers. The war is considered at an end.....Washington, Oct. 30.—The success of our troops in several engagements with the Indians in Washington Territory, has been officially confirmed in Gen. Clark's report to the War department. Gen. Clark is confident that peace will soon be established.....The Washington Union of this morning, speaking by authority, represents that it is not policy for the United States to acquire any portion of Central America; but holds, that it is our duty to open the transit routes, and keep them open and free to all nations.....Costa Rica has made ample apology for the insolent language used in the Belly treaty.....Gen. On Thursday there were eleven deaths; and Friday fifteen, instead of twenty-one, as reported.....Vicksburg, Nov. 1.—H. B. Marsh, manager of the telegraph office in this city, and telegraph reporter for the N. O. Press, died of the fever this morning at 7 o'clock.....Washington, Oct. 26.—President Buchanan has issued a proclamation declaring the objects of the proposed emigration from Mobile to Nicaragua, about the middle of November, under the auspices of Gen. Wm. Walker, to be hostile to the government of Nicaragua. He further declares that all persons will be prevented from entering Nicaragua, unless they are provided with passports from Nicaraguan authorities residing in the United States, or are simply passing from ocean to ocean. He cautions all persons not to engage in the projected pacific expedition, and enjoins upon all officers of this Government to be vigilant and active in their efforts to suppress these illegal enterprises.

The Paraguay Expedition.—Seventeen vessels are now engaged for the expedition, including three frigates, which will proceed to the mouth of the Paraguay, and transfer their crews to the smaller vessels. The impression prevails that Lopez will fight. There is information that tribes of Indians opposite Paraguay are hostile, and disposed to take part against Lopez. But so far they have not been encouraged by our government. They may be used to prevent obstructions from being placed in the river.

From the Plains.—The Santa Fe mail arrived at St. Louis on the 20th. The reported second battle with the Navaje Indians is confirmed. The Indians have had formally suspended his relations with them. He states that they own 250,000 sheep and 60,000 horses, which, if seized or destroyed, will drive them to desperation, and occasion a second Florida war.

Critical Condition of Sherrard Clemens.—The Petersburg (Va.) Press, of the 25th ult., says: "We are sorry to be informed that the condition of the Hon. Sherrard Clemens is most critical. This statement to us precludes all hopes of his recovery, and it is even possible that while we write he has breathed his last."

San Casualty.—While the steamship Calhoun was lying at Apalachicola a child of Mrs. Hazard, of Mobile, fell overboard, when three or four gentlemen sprang overboard for the purpose of rescuing the child, in which they succeeded, but one of the gentlemen, Mr. Thomas Balizel, civil engineer, a resident of Pensacola, was drowned.

Rio Grande and Mexico.—The fever had abated at Brownsville—42 had died out of the garrison at Fort Brown, being 50 per cent. Fever still raging at Matamoras, there having been 370 interments up to noon on the 26th. The deaths at Brazos had amounted to 11 out of a population of 25. Deaths at Point Isabel 15.....Vidaurri had issued a proclamation calling on several merchants along the frontier to pay sums annexed to their names, amounting to $150,000, or to remove with their goods from the country, although the goods had paid hard duties. The proclamation states: "I will give no explanation nor wish no questions, but enforce on you (the officers) to see this carried out." Many foreign and American merchants were preparing to remove their goods, when he revoked the decree and left for parts unknown.....In the battle with Miramon the Liberals lost 35 pieces of artillery, some 50 to 60 wagons, had some 1500 taken prisoners and 400 killed.

Yellow Fever.—At last accounts, it was abating at Galveston, and increasing at Houston.

LOCAL.

City Benevolence.—Now Orleans, while it is liable to several academies than any other city in the Union, has more and better supported, and more munificent, benevolent Associations than any other.

Besides these, there are numerous other associations. Such care of the indigent, the suffering, the bereaved, the widow and the orphan, in so large a city, we have never seen.

A Sad Story.—A young Englishman, Mr. B., landed in New Orleans not long since, with an interesting young wife and little son, of seven years. He died of the fever—and she, alone and friendless, took lodgings, without knowing the character of the place, at a sailor's boarding house. What she passed through, there, none but Omniscience knows but not long since, she was taken before one of the Recorders, having been found intoxicated and half-crazed in the street. Her husband having been a Mason, that fraternity took charge of her. But since then, she has been again arrested, having made a desperate attempt to commit suicide by leaping into the river. This is one of the incidents connected with the fearful epidemic of this season.

A Strange Story.—A well to-do gentleman of the interior, whose testimonials are good, was last week arraigned before one of the Recorders, charged by a shoe merchant with having stolen a lot of shoes from his store; it turned out that he had loaned the merchant a considerable amount, and had been on the most confidential terms. Although an awkward position for the gentleman, it is more so for the shoe-merchant.

Sons of S. S. Prentiss.—In the proceedings of the Board of Trustees for the First District school in New Orleans, (free school) published in the papers of the city, we find the following paragraph:

"Mr. Salomon informed the Board that he had given permission to the friends of the two sons of the late S. S. Prentiss, now living with their grandmother on the other side of the river, to enter them in one of the First District Schools during the coming session, and asked the Board to confirm that permission. It was confirmed unanimously."

A Shameful Story.—A man, discharged a few days since from the Charity Hospital, where he had apparently recovered from the fever, went to board at the Morning Star Coffee house, on Front street, between Lafayette and Poydras, where he took a relapse. Last Thursday night, about 12 o'clock, when the death struggle was upon him, the keeper of the house called a cab and told the driver to take him to the Charity Hospital. While being placed in the cab it was discovered that he was dying—froth issued from his lips, and his eyes became set. Some one said it was no use taking him to the Hospital, as they would not receive a man so far gone, and the cab-driver becoming frightened, took him back into the saloon. The proprietor of the house was urged to have the dying man taken back to bed, but he positively refused. went out, and gave another cab eight dollars to take him away. The cab-driver placed him in the vehicle, and brought him to the First District station-house, when it was found that he was dead.

Yellow Fever at Carrollton.—The fever is reported to have been very bad at Carrollton, within the last week. Bad as it may have been or is, it cannot remain bad long.

Good News.—End of the Epidemic.—The Howard Association held a meeting last Monday evening, and, in view of the small number of applications they had received for relief during the last few days, voted that the fever was no longer epidemic, and agreed to suspend operations for the season.

COMMERCIAL.

Tuesday Evening, November 2, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	6 @ 7¾	Good Middling	12 @11¾
Ordinary	8¼@ 9¾	Middling Fair	— @—
Good Ordinary	10¾@11	Fair	— @—
Low Middling	11¼@11½	Good Fair	— @—
Middling	11½@11¾	Good and Fine	— @—

We take from the New Orleans Price Current, the following summary of the week's business up to Friday evening. The sales of Cotton for the three days, ending Tuesday evening, the 27th ult. were about 17,500 bales, with but little activity to the market. On Wednesday, there being a better supply on factor's tables, and although still fuller prices were claimed, the sales of the day reached fully 13,500 bales, closing with an advance of about ⅛c. on most qualities. On Thursday 9000 bales were taken at a further improvement. On Friday, with still firmer pretensions on the part of holders, the market closed feebly with sales of about 5000 bales. The sales of the week, to this (Friday) evening, amount to 45,000 bales; exports, to 33,946; and the stock not cleared on the 29th ult. to 194,930 bales. Sugar, with increasing receipts, has receded ¼@½c. P lb. The week's sales ending 29th ult. were about 2700 hhds. and the receipts to 3001 hhds. Molasses—The sales of the week amount to 8800 bbls. and the receipts to 6520 bbls. In Western Produce, the business has been of quite a moderate character.....On Saturday, the Cotton market continued dull, the sales barely reaching 5000 bales, with Prices rather in favor of buyers.....The weekly statement of the Banks shows a redundancy in their vaults—viz., over $12,000,000, specie; over $17,000,000, deposits and Exchange balances have reached a high figure. On Monday about 7500 bales were taken, prices irregular and more in favor of buyers.

Sugar—Prices are lower, and we quote 5 @ 5¼c per lb for Fair to Fully Fair.

Molasses—A further decline of 3c P gallon has taken place. Sales have taken place at 24 @ 28c P gallon.

Tobacco—Small sales on private terms.

Flour—Is dull. We quote St. Louis superfine and fancy at $5; Choice, Extra, (Union) 7 50 P bbl.

Corn—Sales of mixed at 66c. and 70c for white.

Pork—Sales at $17 50 P bbl.

Bacon—A fair demand at 9 @ 9½c P lb.

Lard—Retail lott at 12½ @ 13c P lb.

Coffee—Ranges from 10¼ @ 10¾c P lb.

Marriages.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

Married—On Thursday, the 18th of September, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. John Williams, by the Rev. J. W. Phillips, Rev James L. Harris, Pastor, in charge of Robinson's Mission, Madison county, to Miss Jane S. Williams.

On the 28th ult. in Griffin, Georgia, by Rev. Chas. R. Jewett, Mr. A. Munroe Chapman, of Mansfield Louisiana, and Miss Sallie F., daughter of the late Wm. Freeman, of Griffin, Georgia.

Died

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

CHILDREN'S EDITORIAL.

We are glad to be able to present to our children—all who read our children's column are our children—the "Sunday Morning Dialogue," to be found lower down in the column. If the children like this piece, the same writer will give them more after awhile. We know they will like it.

We cannot spare the children a whole column this week.

A SUNDAY MORNING DIALOGUE.

My little friend, where are you going this fine morning?

"I am going to the Sabbath School in the church yonder."

Well, can you tell me what day of the week this is?

"Well sir, it is Sunday."

Did you ever think how much Sunday time, all men have in their lives?

"No sir, I never thought about that."

Well, can you tell me, how many days in a week?

"Yes sir, seven."

How many Sundays in a week?

"One sir."

Now if one day in seven is Sunday, how much of the time is sunday time?

"Well sir, I have studied Arithmetic, let me think; 1-7th, (one seventh.")

That is right, and so one seventh of all the time in this world or in life is Sunday time. Now, when a little child is seven years old, how much Sunday time has it had?

"Why, one seventh, that is one year—one whole year."

How much Sunday time, has that girl had who is fourteen years old?

"She has had two years."

And when she is twenty-one years old, how much Sunday time then?

"Three years."

How much Sunday time has that man had who is twenty-eight years old?

"Why, four years, four whole years; what a long time."

Yes, indeed, and if we were to improve only our Sunday time as we might, how good we might become, and how much we might know. The difficulty is, we do not improve our time as we should. We take a long time on Sabbath morning to sleep, and then a long time to dress; and then if we spend an hour in the Sabbath School, and an hour in Church, that is only two hours; and nearly all the rest of the day is wasted in talking about the sermon, or the people's fine clothes or some other light, uninstructive, or foolish subject; or we sleep and are lazy. O, what a pity that we waste so much precious, holy time. Now can you tell me how many years of Sunday time that man has had who is seventy years old?

"Yes sir, I think I can, let me see; one seventh of the time is Sunday time; one seventh of seventy is ten; ten years; yes ten whole years, who would have thought it was so much?"

Yes, you are right, ten years of Sunday time; in that time, a man could learn all of the Bible by heart, and read all the books of sermons, all the commentaries and all the other good books in the world. He could also pray a great deal and become a very good man. Will not you and I promise to improve our Sunday time better hereafter?

THE HOME CIRCLE.

"Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee."

ANGELA.

Her brow is set in mallow light,
Young Angela's! The happy mind
That dwells within is raying out
Its beauty; and as fruits behind
Her bower ripen, so her face
And form grow perfect to the mind.

Oh, ever so, through days and nights,
Be clear and smooth that rounding brow!
And ever, moulded from within,
Glow brightly pure and mild as now
The loveliness where soul is all
Upon the snowy polish'd brow!

Her braidless hair swims down her neck,
Sweet Angela's! No tresses on
The richest tropic tree that drinks
The golden breath of the central sun,
Can vie with all that curled wave
That sways her bended neck upon.

Oh, soft and deep, on cheek and neck,
Fall ever so the peerless brown!
No rougher air than floats to-day
Disturb it as it clusters down:
Nor earth disdain with sadder tint
The glossy crest of golden brown.

Her drooping eyes are full of dreams,
Rapt Angela's! The dawy eyes
Of those bright buds her hands are in,
Upon her lap, in all their dyes,
Have not a match for their serene
And holy blue—my dreamer's eyes.

Oh, let them droop, and melt, and dream,
Blue eyes! And let her hands be hid
In blossoms! May no touch of pain
Bedim a marble, silky lid,
Nor stir with need to dry a tear,
A rosy palm in roses hid.

Her down-tipped lashes quiver oft,
Bright Angela's! and melts a smile
Around the temples, down the cheek
And chin, and bathes the lips awhile;
Till, past the gold drops in her ears,
The white neck steals the sildlug smile!

Oh, like the circles on a stream,
That pass from touches of the flowers
Upon the bank, may smiles play on
About her heart, through all her hours,
And o'er her face, as now within
Her Summer-arbor fawn'd with flowers.

Her lips begin to murmur now,
Child Angela's! The lisping words
Are full of music, like the low,
Soft whisperings of dreaming birds;
And with her tiny foot, the time
Is beaten to the measured words.

Oh, ever be so near to soothe
Her soul, some poet's sweetest song!
And never harsher note afflict
Her ear; but, all her life along,
Be round her steps, and in the air,
When rain is mute, an angel song!

She knows not of my watch of love,
Dear Angela! And soon away
From this deep hillock-girded glen
Must pass the heart that beats to-day
So near her; but her picture throbs.
Forever in it far away.

In lustrous midnight of the south,
When star-shine sleeps among the vines,
And silver'd ripples crown the lakes,
My thoughts shall soar across the lines
Of Alps, and seon's of earth and sky,
To hear from out the land of vines,

A WONDERFUL BABE.—The medical faculty and curious wiseacres can now view the most singular freak of nature among the human species ever witnessed in New York. A child with four legs, three arms, two bodies and a perfect head, with beautiful features. Profs. Drs. Holmes of Montreal; Fremont of Quebec; Valentine Mott, Halstead of New York, and a host of others pronounce it the greatest living wonder, exceeding that of the Siamese twins.

PATENTS IN ENGLAND.—During the seventeenth century, the patents granted for inventions in England were 250; in the next hundred years they amounted to 2500; and in the first fifty years of the present century they had exceeded 250,000.

Family Failings.

The habit of viewing every thing in a ridiculous light, is one of the family failings that I would warn against.—It too often leads to an unamiable desire to detect and hold up to ridicule the faults of others, and it almost always destroys the finer feelings of admiration for what is beautiful, and the tender and more loveable qualities of putting the best construction upon the actions of others, etc. A critical, censorious, fault-finding woman is a most unamiable being; and let us not conceal the true odiousness of such propensities in ourselves, under the guise of the ludicrous. In many families, however, where both love and good temper prevail, there is what may be called an irksome, rather than a sinful mode of carping and contradicting one another. No harm is meant, and no offence is taken; but what can be more irksome, than to hear two sisters, for instance, continually setting each other right upon trifling points, and differing from each other in opinion for no apparent reason, but from a habit of contradiction? and such a habit does it become, that one may sometimes see persons who have acquired it, contradict their own statements just made, the moment any one advances the same opinion. It is generally on such trifles that this bad habit shows itself, so that it may seem needless to advert to it; but it is a family fault, and should be watched against, for it is an annoyance, though but a petty one, never to be able to open your lips without being harassed by such contradictions as, "O no, that happened on Tuesday, not Wednesday," or, if you remark that the clouds look threateningly, to be asked with a tone of surprise, "Do you think it looks like rain? I am sure there is no appearance of such a thing.' Narrate an incident, every small item is corrected; hazard an opinion, it is wondered at or contradicted; assert a fact, it is doubted and questioned; till you at length keep silence in despair.

Friend's Intelligencer.

Religion at Home.

"Let them learn first," says Paul, "to show piety at home." Religion begins in the family. One of the holiest sanctuaries on earth is home. The family altar is more venerable than any altar in the Cathedral. The education of the soul for eternity begins by the fireside.—The principle of love which is to be carried through the universe, is first unfolded in the family.

The First Boston Woman.

Mrs. Anne Pollard was the first European female that stepped her foot on Boston Common. She lived 105 years, and left 130 descendants. She said in her old age that she came over in one of the first ships that arrived at Charlestown; that in a day or two after her arrival, on account of the water there being bad, a number of the young people, including herself, took the ship's boat to cross over to Boston; that as the boat drew up towards the shore, (she being then a romping girl) declared she would be the first to land, and accordingly, before any one, jumped from the bow of the boat on to the beach, and was, moreover, according to her own statement, and the belief of Mr. B., the first European female that stepped her foot on Boston ground. She described Boston at that time as very uneven, abounding in small hollows and swamps, and covered with blueberry and other bushes. A portrait of Mrs. Pollard, taken at the age of 103 years, is at the Massachusetts Historical Society's Rooms.

How Much to Eat.

As to the quantity each man should eat when unrestricted, it is to be determined by himself alone. We all, notoriously, eat too much, and consequently waste much food, even when we do not injure ourselves. Our sensations are the surest guides, yet they do not always tell us with sufficient distinctness when we have had enough: one thing is very clear, that to force the appetite—to continue eating after the stomach has once suggested 'enough'—is sure to be injurious; and hospitable hosts, no less than anxious parents, should refrain from pressing food on a reluctant appetite, for it is not kindness, although kindly meant.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Horace Vernet.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Picayune gives us a portrait of this renowned French painter, now seventy years old. We present our readers an outline.

M. Horace Vernet has a great painter of battles. He belongs to a family which has held the pallette and pencil for now four generations. His great-grand-father, Antoine Vernet, having been an eminent decorator of carriages and bath-chairs, (a branch of art which, before the French Revolution, flourished with great vigor, and required great talents in its artists,) at Avignon. Antoine's son, was the celebrated Claude Joseph Vernet, the painter of the ports of France, commanded from him by Louis XV., and which every visitor of the Louvre has seen and admired. M. Horace Vernet has made an incident in his grand-father's life the subject of a pleasing picture. He made a voyage from Leghorn to Marseilles; a terrible storm arose, which, in its fury, menaced the lives of every body. Joseph Vernet made the sailors lash him to the mast, that he might witness a storm at sea in all its horror, without being washed away by the waves, which swept the deck every moment. Claude Joseph Vernet was the father of Carle Vernet, who at an early age evinced a happy turn for the arts—and in the nine and twentieth year of his age, painted a Triumph of Paulus Æmilius, which instantly opened the Academy of Painting to him. His venerable father, (Joseph Vernet, was then seventy-three years old,) "received" him as a member of the Academy, and lived until 1789.

Carlo Vernet was the father of the celebrated painter of battles, Horace Vernet, was born in the Palace of the Louvre (it cradle!) the 30th June, 1789; he is consequently in the seventieth year of his age. You would never suspect it were you to see his active step and iron-knitted body on the Boulevards. It has been the custom of the Crown, since the days of Louis XIII, to lodge in the Palace of the Louvre eminent artists. The father and grand-father of Horace Vernet lived there.

Horace Vernet early gave proof of great sprightliness and of talents for art. He was exceedingly handsome, and his nurse used to take pleasure in tucking up his clothes, in the garden of the Tuileries, and making everybody admire him.

Horace was sent to the College des Quatre Nations, and continued to study art while he pursued his classical studies. He soon received a place under Government (Keeper of the drawings of the war office) and obtained orders from the Empress Marie Louise and King Jerome for paintings for which were paid him between eight and ten thousand francs. He painted at the same time a great many portraits, contributed to the Journal des Modes, and became quite popular as a caricaturist. It is well to call the attention of novices to the low work even a great artist is obliged to do at the commencement of his career; for there is no more pernicious error than the delusion that genius at its birth possesses full plummed wings, strong enough to bear it to the sun. Eaglets themselves invigorate the pinions by short flights from low rocks. Youthful genius, aiming too high and failing, becomes discouraged, and abandons all studies because their advantage does not immediately appear.

M. Horace Vernet's fame suffered something of an eclipse at the commencement of the restoration—not from his indolence, or temporary want of talents, or mere caprice but because he was fond of painting battle-scenes and episodes of the imperial history.

M. Vernet refused to accept a peerage, offered him by Louise Philippe. He visited Russia upon the invitation of the Czar, and made an immense deal of money in St. Petersburg. His price for an equestrian figure (portrait) was $5000, and he refused more orders than he executed. He received from Louis Philippe $600,000 for his labors at Versailles. He returned from Russia on the death of the Duke of Orleans. Louis Philippe ordered him to paint "La Prise de la Smala," the largest painting in the world; it covers 16 square yards of canvas! It is said M. Vernet became pale the first time he entered his studio after this canvass had been stretched on the frame for painting. It took him, however, only eight months to paint it.

He is fond of the Bible, and keeps it always with him, even in his travels on horseback. He is a passionate lover of hunting and of horses. He is a man of iron constitution. He went with the Czar Nicholas to the Caucasus; the suite was of 500 persons; when they returned to Warsaw the Czar and M. Vernet were the only persons in perfect health." M. Vernet has every order in Europe at his button-hole. He possesses a fine mansion in Paris, and is immensely wealthy.

Last week his wife died. She had been with him in his hours of glory, and in his hours of wretchedness—for even he has not escaped the virulent attacks of the envious and enemies. She had tasted more of those objects, for which men struggle, than falls to the lot of most persons, even among those born in wealth. Would you know her sentiments? She was tired of fame and flattery and art; she had ever on her tongue, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity and vexation of spirit;" and she met death as a friend, rather than an enemy—as a friend, who smoothed for her the easiest of all beds, the grave. Such is the great lesson of life. Happiness dwells neither in hovel, visited by wretchedness, nor in gilded hall where flatterers fawn; it haunteth rather the abodes of mediocrity—homes removed both from excessive poverty and exaggerated wealth, and therefore within the reach of every body.

Maunsel White.

"Among the survivors of the battle of New Orleans, says De Bow's Review, is Maunsel White, now eighty years of age. Born in Ireland, and springing from a family which traces its pedigree honorably back to the days of the Protector, Col. White reached the United States when quite a youth—repaired to the great West, and descended the Mississippi to New Orleans, making his first appearance in that city in 1800.

"The account which he gives of this visit to New Orleans, in a letter published in 1845, is quite interesting. Steamboats being then unknown, he descended the Mississippi from Louisville, with a party in flatboats, making the voyage in sixty days! He says:

"The population of New Orleans was rated at that time at about six thousand, including blacks and whites. There was not to be seen on the banks of the Ohio, from the foot of the Rapids to the mouth, but a small settlement, called Red Banks; another called Yellow Banks, Fort Massac, and a cabin below the Rock and Cave. From the mouth of the Mississippi to Bayou Sara and Point Chicot on the right, Brownsburg, Natchez and Fort Adams on the left, were all of human habitations that were seen; until you arrived at Pointe Coupee and the coast. All the rest was a dreary waste, over which the bear and the crocodile held their sway, unless interrupted by the occasional sojourn of an Indian tribe."

Becoming at once actively engaged in commercial pursuits, Col. White continued, for almost half a century, to hold a place among the most respectable merchants of New Orleans. In the zenith of its prosperity, no house was wider known throughout the valley of the Mississippi; and in no period of its history was its credit or character tarnished by a breath. The word of Maunsel White was his bond! The result of this prosperous commerce was the accumulation of an immense estate, reaching, at one period, nearly two millions of dollars. As nothing, however, can be more uncertain than the fortunes of men engaged in active business, these accumulations have been reduced to a moderate, but still ample fortune, by a series of losses, which brought the house to the verge of bankruptcy after the withdrawal of its head from the control. The writer of this sketch well remembers the noble fortitude and Roman virtue which were exhibited by Col. White, when offering over $800,000 worth of property for the satisfaction of the commercial creditors! With ordinary men such reverses must have crushed and overwhelmed; but with him, elasticity and faith survived the shock.

If we had the materials for a full biography, it would hardly be necessary in New Orleans, where Col. White is so well known, to write it. He was at an early period a member of Council, and head of the Fiannee Committee, and in that capacity suggested the plan which has worked so well of making property contribute to the expense of paving the streets, and also a plan for protecting the city from inundation. Had the latter been adopted, the subsequent insecurity and losses of the city would have been prevented. As head of the Finance Committee, he was succeeded by our late worthy citizen, Samuel J. Peters; to whom he pointed out treasury errors, which that gentleman with characteristic zeal, investigated, exposing in the result some very serious defalcations. In 1846 he was elected to the State Senate from the Parish of Plaquemines, and served during four years, occupying prominent positions on the Committees of Finance and Commerce, and very frequently the Presidency pro tem. of the body. He was appointed by Governor Johnson one of the administrators of the State University, and served for several years very faithfully and assiduously—donating liberally to the institution.

During the invasion of Louisiana by the British, Col. White, at the head of one of the city volunteer companies, repaired to the standard of General Jackson, and was present in most of the engagements which conferred so much honor upon that officer, and upon our gallant citizen soldiery. General Jackson, to the close of his life, remembered kindly, and often adverted to the services rendered by him—there having sprung up on the battle-field an acquaintance between them which ripened into friendship, long and uninterrupted. Perhaps one of the very last letters written by the old hero was to Col. White. We have seen this letter, and many others, which breathe sentiments of the highest esteem and affection.

A more convincing proof still of the estimation which Gen. Jackson entertained for him, may be found in the fact that Col. White was made one of the Commissioners who were sent soon after the battle, to negotiate with Admiral Cockburn for an exchange of prisoners, and a restitution of slaves.

The Colonel's reminiscences of the condition of affairs at and near New Orleans during the memorable period of 1814 '15, are of the most interesting character, and are given with great vividness in conversations with his friends. The battle was fought in immediate proximity to the family seat of Gen. De la Ronde, who was an intimate friend of Gen. Jackson, and whose daughter Col. White married.—Among the prisoners was a Captain in the British service, who, being wounded, was nursed and watched over with brotherly affection at the residence of Col. White. On his return to health, he was furnished with the means of returning to his home—and an affectionate correspondence was the result, which lasted for a quarter of a century.—Learning, long afterwards, that pecuniary distresses impended over this officer, and that a large family was dependent upon him, Col. White, through a business correspondent, caused all of the mortgages which hung over his estate to be satisfied. Was ever enemy more generous?—Does the desert of war present often such an oasis as this?

Col. White was also the friend and correspondent for many years of General Zachary Taylor, and was the acquaintance of his boyhood.

Col. White is at present one of the largest sugar planters of Louisiana. His estate, about forty miles below New Orleans, is one of the most beautiful and extensive on the whole Mississippi coast. It is in the highest state of improvement, and has upon it about two hundred slaves. Order and system, health and contentment, reign throughout its limits. Genuine and most unaffected hospitalities crown its board.

Bishop Morris.

The Northwestern Advocate says that "Bishop Morris has held, of the Northwestern Conferences, the Minnesota, West Wisconsin, Wisconsin, Upper Iowa, Iowa, Illinois, and Southern Illinois. This is no small work, but we are rejoiced to learn that our venerable senior superintendent has enjoyed remarkable health, and we are sure his Western tour has been a blessing to the Churches and the ministry. May his life long be spared, and his counsels long be given to the Church."

The Bronte Family.

The readers of the "Life of Charlotte Bronte" will be glad to learn that the Rev. P. Bronte is still living at Haworth. The reverend gentleman is in his eighty-second year, and preaches once every Sunday. Mr. Nicholls (Charlotte's husband) resides with him as his curate. The servant Martha, who is often mentioned in the work, still lives at the parsonage, and is a comfort to her aged and venerated master.

Death of Surenne.

The Scotsman announces the death, in Edinburgh, of M. Gabriel Jacques Surenne, the author of the "French Dictionary." His age was 80. M. Surenne was a native of Compeigne, was educated in the Ecclesiastical College of St Cornell, and entered the army of Napoleon in 1793, serving through the Italian campaigne. In 1816 he became a teacher of the French language at Edinburgh, and continued in that city until his death. His contributions to educational literature were numerous.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. LEANAH ROBERTSON, wife of Joseph W. Robertson, deceased, and daughter of Evan and Elizabeth Harvey, born in Hinds county, Mississippi, 6th January, 1820, died on the 20th ult at her residence on Deer Creek, Issaquena county, Mississippi. The death of her husband left her a widow in May, 1857—with whom she had lived most happily; a woman of great benevolence of heart, she was esteemed and loved in all the relations of life. She was an affectionate mother, a kind mistress, and as a neighbor and friend, perhaps no one was ever more highly or generally esteemed. For many years she had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in her life were exhibited the virtues that adorn the Christian character. The impression was on her mind for some time previous to her death, that her stay in this world would be short; she talked frequently and calmly of her approaching departure—saying she was prepared, and had no fear of death. In her last illness, she assured her friends that "all was well!" And, when the final conflict came, without a struggle or a groan, she yielded her spirit into the hands of Him who gave it

Deer Creek, Miss., Oct. 2, 1858. W. D. BROWN.

ROBERT HENRY, was born in South Carolina about the year 1777, served God in the M. E. Church, about fifty years. A man of undoubted probity, and uncompromising stability, his life was exemplary and his end peaceful. He fell a sleep on third of August 1858, of cancer of the face; the memory of his oldest children cannot go back to the time when he did not hold family prayer. He lived to see all his children grown, and members of the Methodist Church. He was visited a few hours before his death by father Gillon, a faithful aged local minister, to whom he spoke freely of his approaching dissolution, and with a confidence that gave to his friends the most comfortable assurance of the peacefulness of his end. He however, was suffering much from the disease. He requested father Gillon to pray, and while all knelt, the Spirit of God came in much power, comforted the hearts of his children to overflowing, and called forth from the dying veteran, responses of the most hearty, cheerful character. From that moment there was a composure and quietness, that told much of the triumph of grace over the pain of death. The sting of death is sin and the strength of sin is the law, but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

A. D. GILLARD.

MRS. MARY QUELLMALZ, wife of Rev. C. Quellmalz, German Methodist Pastor in Mobile, departed this life October, 10, 1858. She was born in Choctaw county, Ohio. She united herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, in early life; and was until death a consistant and devoted follower of the Lord Jesus. She was a victim of the prevailing epidemic. She evinced a good degree of Christian courage, mingled with extacies of joy even in deaths fearful trials, by singing and shouting the triumphant song. She leaves a husband, who has charge of German Mission here, and three children to mourn their loss, but her infinite and eternal gain.

MISS CAROLINE MIXON, daughter of William Mixon of Coffee county, Alabama, died October 15th, aged about twenty years, and about eight years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was a very promising young lady, mild in temper, and obedient to her parents. Her disease—was a soreness and swelling of the throat, extending quite over the face. She died in the faith, perfectly in her senses till the moment of her departure. She was enabled to praise God the evening before she died. Bright was the testimony she left behind of her hope of heaven.

ROBERT SMILIE.

MRS. SOPHIA WISEMAN, died in peace at the residence of her son in law, Samuel McClellan, near Rocky Springs, Claiborne county Mississippi, on the 2d inst., who had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, more than forty years, in the seventy-ninth year of her age.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for purifying the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, private hospitals. It removes all obnoxious odors immediately. It cures burns, bites, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at, J. WRIGHT, & CO'S, Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. s.22

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA

AND

IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a PANACEA or CATHOLICON than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colmbet, Berzu, Bardsley, Manson, Ricord, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc. He is a nature of Scrofula or King's Evil, Whites, Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Ulcers, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints; Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas, Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck (Scrofula) cheek, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen; Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Forcyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

THE GREATEST

Medical Discovery

OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.

Asthma is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor it has to start. There are no ifs nor ANIs, humor or he'shunt vanting some cases but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, worry-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored in a perfect state of health by one bottle.

To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed, they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it, on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant encomiums of it that ever man listened to.

Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

WILL EFFECTUALLY CURE

LIVER COMPLAINT, DYSPEPSIA, JAUNDICE,

Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a disordered Liver or Stomach.

Such as Constipation, Inward Piles, to Fullness or Blood the Head, Acidity on the Stomach, Nausea, Heartburn, Disgust for Food, Fullness or Weight in the Stomach, Sour Eructations, Sinking or Fluttering at the Pit of the Stomach, Swimming of the Head, Hurried and difficult Breathing, Fluttering at the Heart, Choking or Suffocating Sensations when in a lying position, Dimness of Vision, Dots or Webs before the Sight, Fever and Dull pain in the Head, Deficiency of Perspiration, Yellowness of the Skin, and Eyes, Pain in the Side, Back, Chest, Limbs, &c., Sudden Flushes of Heat, Burning in the Flesh, Constant Imaginings of Evil and great Depression of Spirits.

The proprietor, in calling the attention of the public to this preparation, does so with a feeling of the utmost confidence in its virtues and adaptation to the diseases for which it is recommended.

It is no new and untried article, but one that has stood the test of a ten years' trial before the American people, and its reputation and sale is unrivaled by any similar preparation extant. The testimony in its favor given by the most prominent and well-known Physicians and individuals in all parts of the country is immense, and a careful perusal of the Almanac, published annually by the proprietor, and to be had gratis of any of his Agents, cannot but satisfy the most skeptical that this remedy is really deserving the great celebrity it has obtained.

Visit to the Tuileries and Louvre—Bronze and Marble Statuary—Charles IX. and the Huguenots—Magnificence of the Louvre—Casket of Mary de Medici—Napoleon's Room—Coffin in Vienna—Versailles—Medallion of the Grand Monarch—Cabinet and Clock—La Vallière—Louis and Mme. Maintenon—Glory Palace and enchanting Grounds—Women of the Court of Louis, their Influence, and what Resulted—The Petit Trianon—Dead Sea Fruit.

THE TUILLERIES AND LOUVRE.—A second visit to this magnificent palace does not detract from the first impressions of its beauty or magnitude, when compared with others we have seen. It forms the centre of attraction, in the very heart of Paris, where all strangers have free access to its magnificent saloons of Fine Arts, and its Museum of Antiquities, without any exactions. The Tuilleries and Louvre form one great building; and it is interestingly connected with modern history, and the Fine Arts.

It stands upon the bank of the river Seine, has a commanding prospect of its waters, and the opposite shore lined with palaces. Fronting, on another side, the garden of the Tuilleries, Place de Concorde, and Champs Elysees—almost a paradise of beauty; here the taste of Louis XIV. was first displayed, in these extensive grounds and gardens; which have undergone, since his time, still further improvements, and are finished in a style of elegance and taste unsurpassed in beauty.

The enclosures are arranged in flower-beds, and kept in the most perfect order, every plant cultivated and trained to the perfection of its growth. A portion of the flower garden in front of the Tuilleries is separated by the private promenade of the household of the palace. In front of the palace, a grove of trees forms a small park in the centre.

Bronze statues adorn the grounds around the palace—where may be seen the classical forms of Laocoon and Diana; and, up the grand entrance, the Sicilian Knife-grinder, and Venus sitting upon a tortoise. Three circular basins, with fountains of water, adorn the public gardens; and, around the centre, groups of marble statuary—the noble form Æneas rescuing Anchises, and leading Ascanius; the death of Lucretia; and Atlas, changed into a rock.

A great variety of statuary adorn all the grounds, scattered among the flowers and gardens, adding elegance to the picturesque beauty, in the refinement of taste which everywhere meets the eye.

The Tuilleries was commenced in 1564, as a residence of that notorious Queen, Catharine de Medicis, whose character is shaded with deeds of the darkest and deepest dye. Louis XIII. and Louis XIV. resided in it. It has been fitted up in a style of royal magnificence for the present Emperor, who occupies it now.

The Louvre, with all its attractive charms, has historical associations of a tragical character; which call up reminiscences of the past, enough to chill the feelings of the stoutest heart, and cause it to quail beneath their influence.

From the Balcony of one of the windows, is shown the place where Charles IX. stood, to fire deliberately upon his Huguenot subjects, and commenced the cruel massacre of that memorable event, (St. Bartholomew) which filled all Europe with astonishment and dismay, and the Protestant world with horror; the recollection of which, now, sends a pang through the heart, of anguish and sorrow.

The imposing grandeur of this edifice, strikes every eye with admiration, while the beauty of its grounds adds to its magnificence, in the delightful contrasts nature affords, controlled by the refinements of taste—shaded walks, groves, fountains and flowers.

The Louvre is appropriated to works of genius—the most celebrated school of painting and sculpture. No Sovereign has resided here since the time of Louis XV. Five galleries on the lower floor are filled with specimens of ancient sculpture. A series of galleries run around the building, adorned with paintings by the first masters; the ceilings, ornamented with most beautiful frescos, with historical associations and classic forms.

The room which contains the royal costume of the Kings and some souvenirs of their Queens, is very interesting—a casket, formerly belonging to Mary di Medici, composed of precious gems very curiously wrought, and worth several thousand pounds; a piece of furniture, formerly the property of Maria Antoinette, made of fine colored wood, inlaid with pearls and jewels; a casket ingeniously ornamented, given by Cardinal Richlieu, to Catharine de Medici; the swords and sceptres of various monarchs, and the crown of Charlemagne, and armor of other Kings.

But Napoleon's room, with his coronation robes and trophies of his military greatness, interested us the most. His simple military costume and the camp-bedstead were there—the room was full of his history. The taste displayed in his royal robes is more chaste and elegant than exhibited by the Kings; a deep border of gold upon a crimson ground, of velvet, the front laid over with a lapel of white satin, embroidered with gold, with a plain ground, to give relief to the exquisite design and workmanship; while those of the Kings are covered with gold flowers all over. All Bonaparte's rich dresses were of the same character. There hangs the wardrobe of his little son, by the side of his infantile bust; and there stands the splendid cradle, in which he enjoyed the slumbers of innocence, with no thought of the future, to disturb his repose, of the dark cloud rising, with its threatening aspect, to burst upon the head of his father, and blight his prospects for ever,

We stood by his coffin, in Vienna, in the vaulted tombs of imperial greatness among the regal dead, with none to disturb him there, until the arch-angel wakes the cold ear of death by the last trump which shall sound. Strange thoughts of life's drama passed before our minds, in that room; and historical events, rapid in their association and of deep and thrilling interest, in which the world at large was involved, arrested our attention; it was as a dark vail thrown over the dazzling splendor of surrounding objects—a drapery of woe, upon human greatness, and brilliancy of the royal diadem—to shroud their glory.

The Louvre is rich in the productions of Raphael, Titian, Guido, Leonardo da Vinci, Corregio, Murillo, and others—which forms a study, of the finest artists of the world; in it, weeks might be spent in examination, and still find something new to gratify the taste. In the upper story, the Marine department is a little world in itself, full of interest.

VERSAILLES.—To speak of this palace, and do it justice, would require artistic skill and powers of analyzation, possessed by few; so inconceivably vast is the plan, so wonderful and complicated the design. Never was a motto more perfectly applicable than the one written upon one of the wings—"A toutes les gloires de la France," for in it, they appear to be concentrated and displayed, to the utmost perfection.

The railing, which surrounds the court, in front, is very beautiful, and, on all its sides, adorned with the statues of eminent statesmen. The halls of the palace are immense; and in number so great, that they appear like a labyrinth of inextricable mazes, where one might be lost, wandering amidst the wonders which surround them.

One, called the Great Gallery, 242 feet long, 35 broad, and 43 feet high; and, in this room, Louis XIV. was daily crowded with courtiers. Here the capricious Monarch felt himself enthroned in a world of his own glory; where his fancy created ideal wants, which he brought out with an ingenuity as astonishing as they were beautiful—works of nature and art, unequalled in the world.

In one room is a cabinet of the King, where are seen his Council-chair and table, and a curious clock, that plays a chime when the hour strikes, being set in motion by a machinery, in which sentinels are made to advance, a cock, flaps his wings, Louis XIV. comes forward—Victory, descending from the skys, crowns him with a golden chaplet. How illustrative of the Monarch's self-esteem and vanity.

A suite of apartments are shown, associated with the memory of the unfortunate Queen, Maria Antoinette; from these apartments she made her escape, when the people burst into her room to seize her person.

In the Chapel of the Virgin, she was married to Louis XVI.

The Salon d'Hercules, was formerly used as a chapel—where the eloquence of Bossuet and Massillon fell upon the ears of the refined courtiers, with all their fascinating power—that the light of the Gospel might shine upon them, and they be left without excuse in the day of judgment.

Upon the ground floor of this palace, in the South wing, are twelve rooms, adorned with the paintings illustrating the political and military career of Napoleon; also, containing busts of the Emperor and his family.

Another, the Hall of Marengo, illustrative of French history, from 1789 to 1814. French history is spread upon these walls, in their various departments; and the mind requires to be well stored with historic knowledge, to receive benefit, or become interested in the representations.

There are five rooms, adorned with different battles fought by the Crusaders—it is unnecessary to particularize the rooms, independent of their treasures of art—to walk through them is to read its revolutions and character. The scene which transpired in the Court of Louis XIV. when the beautiful LaValliere adorned those halls with her unrivalled charms, elegance and grace—whose sad history is told by years of penitence and grief, secluded in a convent; while the capricious Monarch revelled in pleasures, without remorse, with her substitute, Madame Montespan.

The large chapel is magnificent, eighty-six feet high; embelished with paintings—the pavement is composed of rich marble, elegantly wrought in Mosaic. There are seven chapels attached to this edifice.

The theatre is most splendidly and elaborately wrought, with rich gildings and ornamental work, so that when lit up at night, it must have been one blaze of splendor.

The sculpture galleries were large and magnificent—among them a statue of Joan of Arc, designed by the daughter of Louis Phillipe—much admired for its faithful expression and beautiful form.

Among the portraits of literary characters, we saw that of Madame DeSevigne, whose sprightly letters, full of wit and satire—which still retain their position as models of epistolary writing, in purity of style and eloquence of language—did not strike as in an intellectual woman of high order, no more than the bust of Socrates, as a moral philosopher.

This magnificent chateau is a world within itself, almost inexhaustible in its treasures of art—which it would take weeks to study.

The grounds are wonderful. The vast terrace, in front, is adorned with statues, representing Antinous, Silenus, Bacchus and Apollo. The gardens are ornamented with superb fountains, flowing from groups of statuary, in all the variety of gods and goddesses, belonging to Neptune.

Among them is an artificial water-fall, issuing from deep caverns—at the entrance of which are groups of Nymphs. But the most splendid of all is the Basin of Neptune. Around its margin are arranged twenty-two vases; at its sides are groups of statuary—representing Neptune, Amphitrite, Proteus, and the ocean, and two collossal statues repose upon pedestals, bearing Cupids. From these groups, a flood of water is poured forth, increased by magnificent jets in different parts of the basin; when in operation their effect is splendid beyond description.

The grounds and gardens of Versailles, its fountains and statuary, must have exhausted the fertile genius of the most distinguished artists of those times, and taxed their ingenuity and skill to the utmost extent in adding variety to this chateau—where fancy and imagination are displayed in forms of exquisite beauty and taste, in these wonderful creations—to fill out a picture to satisfy that voluptuous Monarch, who spent forty millions sterling, in laying out these grounds and beautifying the palace.

From the Avenue Apollo, a road leads to the Grand Trianon, built by Louis XIV. for Madame de Maintenon, whom he elevated to the position of Queen, from the humble position of teacher to his illegitimate children to become partner of his throne and partial ruler of his Court and Kingdom. Over his mind she held undisputed sway; for, after exhausting all the resources of external pleasures, this proud Monarch in his declining years was thrown helplessly upon the talents of this intellectual woman; and, in a measure, dependent upon her for his happiness—being capable of appreciating in her the mental capacity and resources he did not himself possess.

This is a fairy palace, situated in the centre of a green wood. One of those beautiful creations of fancy, that this voluptuous Monarch knew so well how to form—one-story high, and near 400 feet long; surrounded by a colonnade of most exquisite marble, eight of the Ionic columns are green, the others of variegated Languedoc marble. The grounds are laid out in a style of regal magnificence, adorned with gardens, statues and fountains, arbors and bowers of evergreen shade, bloom in beauty—while the depth of the groves which surround it, forms a still and lovely retreat, with shady walks of rural beauty and sweet repose—to suit the most fastidious taste.

The palace is divided into two parts, by a pavilion. The rooms are finished and furnished in a style of royal splendor, adapted to their design; chaste and elegant, adorned with the portraits of Madame de Maintenon, Maria Lazinski, wife of Louis XV., Maria Theresa, Maria Antoinette, Louis XV. and others of like distinction. We looked at these portraits, not only to behold the beauty of those features which adorned the world, but to read in their presence the history of nations, written upon each brow; for they were involved in their revolutions, and their influence felt to their utmost bounds—for they bore a conspicuous part in those scenes which overthrew France, and deluged it in blood. How powerful is influence—how mighty and fearful its results, from the sceptered throne to the humble cottage—acting upon society in a limited or enlarged scale—to pass, like a wave once stirred, through vast Eternity! How few realize this, in any condition.

This charming residence has been successively occupied by Louis XIV., Louis XV., the Emperor Napoleon and the lovely Josephine—a place of retirement well suited to him who could grasp kingdoms and found empires, and crown the brows of his friends and relatives with kingly diadems, and place in their hands the sceptre of power! This building seemed to be an appendage to the magnificent domain of Versailles in the reign of Louis XIV.

The Petit Trianon, not far from this, is a square pavilion of two stories, elegantly furnished and adorned with paintings. It was once the residence of the Duchess of Orleans.

The gardens were very beautiful, laid out in English style—peculiarly their own, differing entirely from that of the French; we think they excel them in blending nature with art, in its most picturesque forms; and, as to landscape gardening, they surpass all the countries we have seen—as much as the French do in costume, in fitness, style and elegance of taste.

But in these abodes of Imperial splendor, what recollections are called up? What graphic scenes pass before the mind, tinged with every hue; which detracts from their charm of royalty, and gives a sombre hue to all their dazzling glories, so beautiful and fascinating in appearance—like the Dead Sea fruit,

"Which tempts the eye,
But turns to ashes on the lips."

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The Railway and Locomotive—Rate of Travel—Crops—Disease in the Potato, the Cause—Improvements—Changes in the Face of the Country—Kintore—Inverary—Elgin—Tariff—Gordons—Leuchar—Octogenarian Minister—Dee side—Balmoral—Wells of Pananich—Loch na Garr—Braemar—Earl Mar—Farm of Ballatrich—Cairngorm—Cairmulgie—The Queen.

My last, spoke of a purpose to go into the country; and, to carry out this purpose, we must take the Great North of Scotland Railway.

This road connects this city with Inverness, the most Northern city of the kingdom; and generally designated the capital of the Highlands. The distance is about one hundred and six miles, and is traveled at the rate of twenty miles per hour, including stoppages, which are very frequent. The mail trains, of which there are two; daily travel at the rate of thirty miles an hour, including stoppages; though the stoppages are much less frequent than on the passenger trains. The locomotives are massive, powerful machines, generating steam from coke mixed with coal. The alarm is exceedingly shrill. The carriages are much shorter than with you: It would take nearly three of these cars to make one of yours on the New Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad.—There are first, second and third-class cars; and the fare in each is in accordance. The first—easy, single-cushioned seat, constructed like an arm chair, for one individual—with a high back, in which he may sit and sleep, or roll himself in silent, solitary grandeur, as he chooses. The Second, has a comfortable cushion for five, sitting transversely across the car, and having five others similarly situated, fronting them—these are all that are in one apartment, only six in the First, and there are two or three apartments only in one car, generally two. The Third-class cars have plain wooden seats, and though the three apartments in each carriage have divisions between them, yet the division is only half way up, and all the passengers may see each other. Thus, six are visible to each other in a first-class; ten, in a second-class, and thirty in a third-class carriage. The mail carries only first and second-class passengers; but once a day, by act of parliament, every railway in the United Kingdom is compelled to carry parliamentary, or third-class passengers at one penny, (two cents,) per mile. The bulk of the people travel as third-class passengers. The iron on the roads, here, is much heavier, and the guage much wider than with you; though the curves in the road are more frequent and more acute, where they occur. The bed of this road, for about two miles from the harbor, where the terminus is, was previously the bed of the canal; by reason of which, they have without any interruption to business or travel, in passing through the city, a station in the South, and one in the North, for the accommodation of passengers or business. The roads are all fenced in, and where a common road crosses the railroad, it is by a bridge over the railroad—these crossings are very numerous; but, I almost forget that we are out in the country, beholding the face of nature and the luxuriance of the crops.

It is admitted by all, that this has been the most abundant crop of wheat, oats, barley, and all cereal grains, that the country has experienced in many years; indeed, it is doubtful if they have ever had such a crop before in Scotland. The disease is, this year, again in the potatos. This crop, so much relied upon by all classes as a necessary part of daily food, is almost a total loss. It is not yet understood how the disease comes, or by what it is caused. The general opinion leans to its being atmospheric; and, from all I have heard or seen, I should certainly decide it to be so, for it always commences while there is a dense fog. In the course of one night, the angel of death seems to spread his wings on the clouds. The field, which on yesterday was so green and promising, is in the morning as if the frosts of winter had passed over it. The potato at the root begins to have a darkish color, which increases until winter, when it becomes entirely rotten. After the disease commences, they are only used to fatten pigs—for which they are excellent.

Such have been the improvements everywhere on the face of the country during the last thirty years, but that for the everlasting hills and unchanging valleys, one is tempted to believe himself in a different country. The government aided in this transformation, by advancing, according to the value of the place, large sums of money—to erect better buildings, ditch, drain, and trench waste lands; and, in repayment, exacted only six per cent. annually on the amount advanced, for twenty years; at the expiration of which time the principal and interest, if the six per cent. was paid annually, were extinguished.

This was a great accommodation to the proprietor in redeeming waste lands, and of some gain to the government because they could borrow any amount at three per cent. for any period of time.

But we are just passing the royal burgh of Kintore, which gives title to an Earl; and four miles further on, we are at the royal burgh of Inverurry, which gives the title of Lord to the eldest son of the aforesaid Earl. These two burgh-towns, (each about as large as Jackson, Mississippi,) join with Elgin and two other burghs in sending a member to parliament.

We have now arrived at Turriff, the present terminus of this branch of the Great North, is an ancient and very respectable town, where we make no stay, because, with the aid of a dog-cart, we are in an hour more, eight miles further North, and are set down in the town of Aberchirder, which gave rise to the first case of non-intrusion of intrusion, just as you please, that led first to the disruption and afterwards formation of the Free Church of Scotland.

As you are not acquainted here however, I shall not descend to particulars; but, taking the couch, we are in less than an hour and a half at Huntly, on the line of the Great North again, forty miles from Aberdeen, by which we shall return to the place of beginning, having seen a great deal during three days.

Huntly, gives title to a marquis; and formerly belonged to the eldest son of the Duke of Gordon, of this neighborhood; but, as this dukedom is extinct, the marquisate has passed into another branch of the Gordon family—where, for the present let it remain. As there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, so there ought to be but one step from the nobility to meaner subjects, and—accordingly—to dog-carts. This is a conveyance in great use with farmers, sportsmen etc. It is what you call a gig, on two wheels, with seats for four, back to back, and a large opening under the seats for carrying slops. They pay less duty than any other kind of carriage.

But we have returned, and start with the coach eight miles Westwardly; and now our notes will be somewhat reminiscencial.

This is the parish of Skene; and there, on yonder elevation stood the house in which, for upwards of thirty years the family lived, of which one of your correspondents was of the number. Of nine, but four are now in the land of the living—and time has made its mark on the survivors. Progress too has reduced the houses in the village from thirty to three, and the very mill-pond and quagmire adjacent, which were the dread of many a fond mother are now a teeming cornfield. There too at the distance of nearly two miles, are the moor and haughs of Leucher, on which an unwilling wight from nine to eleven years of age, in meeting, his share of duty in the body economic, had, for upwards of two years, to act the part of herdsman. His vocation, his dog, and the pasturage, are all long since gone, and nothing but fertile fields and luxuriant crops, now meet the eye. So great indeed has the change been, that now it has not even the semblance of home. But we must proceed up the Leucher to its source, the Loch of Skene, and there the aforesaid wight with many companions, during the mid-day play at school, took his first lessons in aquatics and naval architecture. It is not averred to what extent on such occasions the science was carried.

We are now at the school-house, and here are the dial, spring and play-ground, as if they were but of yesterday's observation. Other houses have disappeared, but these and the school house remain as formerly. This is the parish church and burial ground, neither of which has undergone much change.

Yonder, in that grave with the fresh head-stone, sleeps the dust of one who was the first and unvarying friend of my life; whose affection ceased only with life itself. "We all shall meet again." But here is the minister, an Octogenarian, yet enjoying a green old age. From his lips, as parish teacher, many a youth received the rudiments of his after education. He did not come out at the disruption—a wife and eleven children were twelve strong arguments against such a step—but he is greatly respected notwithstanding. Had he gone out, he would have carried the whole parish with him. He cannot for the rule of his General Assembly, ask his former pupil to preach in his Church; but he does the next best thing he can, he publicly prays for him. The lack, however, is readily supplied by the Free Church minister; who, having given extensive intification, even the moderate as they are called, flocked to hear what this babbler would say. This occasion brings together elements that have not commingled before, since the disruption in 1843. But our reminiscences will become too protracted, so having returned—we start by railway up Dee-side.

This is the route to Banchory, Ballater, Balmoral and Braemar; and, because the court for six weeks in the year takes this tour, not because of the scenery—though that is picturesque and beautiful—has become the route for all fashionable travelers. This traveling brings all classes and conditions of men together, each suiting themselves in the character of their amusements. The railway is completed to Banchory and will be carried up as far as Aboyne, thirty-two miles from Aberdeen, and the other distances are to be reached by coach. The route is almost directly West. The crops are here even better and earlier than in the direction of Huntly. If Dee and Don are the most fertile portions of Aberdeenshire; Banchory is the summer retreat for the city gentry—many a village, cottage, and mansion is seen along the railway.

The strip of rich country narrows considerably above Banchory; and gradually lessens until at the Linn of Dee it entirely disappers, and is lost in the mountains and heather. Kincardine, O'Neal, and Aboyne are very pleasant country villages—having generally good houses. Here is Loch Cannor, where Malcolm Canmore, one of the great Kings of Scotland is said to have had his residence; and yonder, in the distance, are to be seen Culbleen and Morven, the scenes of former great battles immortalized by the muse of Byron.

Now, we are opposite the farm of Ballatrich, where is yet to be seen the very bed in which the great poet slept—a very wooden and common looking affair. Next come the wells of Pananich, to which invalids resort in great numbers. You cannot get a drink of this water without registering your name and residence. But now we are Ballater, a neat and very thriving town; having, in the meantime, passed several villages of lesser note.

We change coaches here for Braemar, eighteen miles distant, which we reached in two hours and a half without accident. The first place of note, on the way, is Abergehlie, where H. R. Highness, the Duchess of Kent, the Queen's mother, has her summer retreat. This is eight miles above Ballater, and fifty two from Aberdeen, the estate has recently been purchased by H. R. Highness the Prince Consort, together with Birk-hall, an adjoining estate; to form, with the other estate an extensive deer forest.

This, however, brings us opposite to Balmoral, the royal residence of Britain's Queen; and how shall I describe it? I did not seek an admission within its walls as the Commissioner was then absent, waiting on the Duchess of Kent; but I had a capital view of it, while we were changing horses, from within one hundred and fifty yards of the building. It is not an old castle, but an entirely new edifice of hewn and polished granite; of modern, though imposing castle architecture. It is certainly a beautiful residence—but such only as a Queen can afford. It is on the South side of the Dee, and is reached by a new bridge built by the Prince Consort, a short distance below the castle. On this side, near to the bridge, on the hill, is the Church of Crathie, in which Mr. Caird preached that sermon—the publication of which by Her majesty's command—has gained him place, peace, and notoriety. But we must ascend, or the coach will leave us.

It is not possible, for me at least, to describe the mountain scenery around. It is not as grand and towering as the scenery in East Tennessee and Virginia, but the changes are at once bolder and more frequent. You can see a great deal in a short space of time and distance here. Back of Balmoral, and forming a part of the estate is the "Dark Loch-na-Gar."

Three miles above, we cross the Dee to the south side, on a bridge which was erected in the time of the rebellion—a very primitive structure, one arch only. We are now opposite the house of Invercald, the home of the Farquharsons; and, anon, we are at Castleton of Braemar. Here is the castle of Braemar, an imposing structure of the old regime, now used only as a barrack for soldiers. On that elevation, on the banks of the Clunie, the Earl of Mar raised the standard of rebellion for Prince Charlie, in seventeen forty five.

Here the mountain scenery is grand indeed—rising up abruptly on every hand to a great hight, with openings or glens in every direction—east, west, north and south. This is truly the highlands of Scotland. Yonder is Cairntoul; and this is Craignich; here is Ben Macdhui, the highest mountain in Scotland; and there is Cairngorm, from which precious stones were formerly brought.

And now, in the dog-cart, we must still ascend seven miles more, to view as we pass the falls of Corrimulzio; the linn or falls of the Dee, and the falls of the Quoich—but, I cannot stop to tell you of them now, I must hasten my return to Aberdeen, to meet her majesty.

A good sight we obtained of the Queen on her arrival from the south, at the Ferry Hill Station. This station is about three fourths of a mile south of the Aberdeen station, where the track leaves to go up Dee-side. They changed locomotives here, and remained about nine minutes in doing so. I had previously waited on the polite Secretary to request a ticket of admission who gave me the permission of standing inside, on the railway track, to have as near a view of her majesty as possible. He very readily gave me one ticket, and offered me more if I had company with me. At that point there was a triple track, and the locomotive that brought her majesty's carriages from the South, came up on the middle track—coming to a rest just opposite to where I stood, the Queen's carriage a little ahead. The train was past stopping, as her carriage passed very slowly my point of observation. She was sitting at the plate glass in the after part of her carriage looking out. Others said, though I did not see him at that time, the Prince Consort was standing up a little in front of her. I was about fifteen feet distant from the track when the train stopped; and I was consequently within that distance of her majesty, but there was too dense a crowd of favored ones, for me to change my locality advantageously: at last a thousand eager eyes sought to catch a glimpse of their sovereign, while thousands were outside looking over the fence. I waited patiently for the change of slips and locomotives; until the train should re-pass me to take the Dee-side line, a little beyond. As the Queen's carriage was only about fifteen or twenty steps from my position, the train was barely in motion—such, I suppose, had been the orders—when the carriage thus slowly re-passed me. This time, she was standing up at the open window, making her acknowledgements to the assembled multitude. The view was quite satisfactory this time, and very cheap, without money and without price. The Prince Consort was sitting down with two of the children in the same carriage.

Well, what of the Queen? Why, to tell you the real truth, your correspondent thinks that she is a very good looking woman; or, rather, a very intelligent looking lady—and not the dumpy, Dutch-looking personage that so many have described her to be. Those who have seen her before, say that she has improved greatly in appearance. The Prince is an intelligent, easy, good-looking, gentleman, of evident Germanic origin. The children are fair-haired and delicate. I saw other dignitaries but the lesser were lost in the greater. This is enough for one letter.

EAST ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR—It affords me much pleasure to get the New Orleans Advocate each week, as it revolves around. It seems that you are really in earnest in making it one of the best, fairest and most interesting children of the Advocate family. I would not derogate from the value of the others; they are ably conducted, and doing in their respective spheres noble service for the Church and for the cause of christianity: yet, Mr. Editor, I feel a very special interest in the N. O. Advocate; in its appearance, in its character, and in its success. So far, in all these it has given to its friends great encouragement. May its future grow brighter, its dimensions and circulation larger, and may your name live for all time among the benefactors of the race!

Mr. Editor, do you not hail partly from East Alabama? I knew a man of your surname in that region, a few years ago, whose initials were C. C. Said individual conceived the idea of establishing in the beautiful town of Tuskegee a Female College, to be committed to the custody and patronage of the Alabama Conference. The conception was a grand one. Some thought it chimerical, but, wonderful to tell, the dream has been realized, the thought materialized; and, a temple, "beautiful for structure," almost the perfection of architectural art, and dedicated to female education, meets your glad eye as you enter the town; and many are the fair daughters who are there being trained for those high and sacred responsibilities which devolve peculiarly upon the sex, in the relations of daughter, sister, wife and mother. May the nourishing grace of heaven be given it, and may it be a perpetual fountain of good and purifying influences!

On your way to New Orleans, did you not pass through Auburn? Is there not something pleasant and soothing in the name? You call to mind the line in Goldsmith's Deserted Village,

"Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the plain."

No doubt, this suggested the name to the one who christened it. This Auburn is unlike Goldsmith's, in that it has no plain; it is a town of undulations, pleasantly broken and free from the monotony of a level scenery. It is to be hoped that it will be unlike it in its fate, deserted and a thing of song. Its present promises an auspicious future. Its borders are enlarging, and its population multiplying from within and from without.

It has four churches—Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian. The former has much the more handsome and commodious building, and much the larger membership. The edifice of The Church presents a perfect burlesque upon their ostentatious assumptions. It is a little brown gothic structure, adequate to the accomodation of a hundred, or a hundred and fifty. Its minister, of Erin education, and regularly descended from St. Peter, or St. Paul, or St. Patrick, or St.——, visits his flock of half-a-dozen once a month, and delivers them a small, pleasant discourse from manuscript, that would hardly make a ripple upon the calm waters of those hearts, which "are at ease in Zion." O Lord! make the watchmen upon the walls of Zion to see the sword of Thy justice coming, and to cry aloud and spare not, so that their clerical robes may be free from the blood of sinners, hypocrites and spiritual adulterers!

Too many ministers, in all the churches, announce the Word of God in a timid, edgeless style, which makes it, among many, a thing of contempt. The Scriptures represents that truth, as a sword, a fire, a hammer. A sword is to pierce with and to cut assunder; the fire burns and consumes; the hammer drives and breaks to pieces. But alas! for many of our pulpits, they have ceased to be Sinais, where the Divine majesty is felt, and from whence issue the Law, at which men tremble and fear to sin; they have ceased to be Calvary, where before the eye of Faith a crucified Jesus dies, and temple veils rend, and people with smitten hearts cry out "surely this was the Son of God!" They have ceased to be the fires, in which were forged the bolts of truth, which should be launched against the head of error.

The Pulpit should be sanctified—"baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." It should no longer be a bulletin-board for advertisements, or a table of nick-nacks and boquets to regale the dainty taste and smell of amateur church-goers. Let it be the Holy Place where naught shall be heard but the eternal oracles of God—let those who speak, do it with lips touched as with a live coal from the altar of God. May the spirit of a Paul, a Luther, a Wesley, a Whitefield, come upon those who ascend the Pulpit to talk to us about Christ and salvation, about our souls and eternity.

Mr. Editor, see here, I have run off to moralizing, and preaching to the preachers. The Lord willing, I desire to say something more about East Alabama.

A SENSIBLE VOTE.

THE Christian Advocate, Nashville, informs us that "the Holston Conference by a large vote considered it best to have no Depository." That we call a sensible vote. We admire the moral courage of the Holston Conference in venturing to reject the plan of a Conference Depository—regarded as it is, by the Financial Secretary, as inseparable from Church progress; and of which he says, whether by revelation or not we are not informed, "the finger of God is in it." I wonder why every member of the Holston Conference did not feel that, even to approach this divinely projected scheme for curious inspection, was sacrilage. To us, the bare idea of opposing so grand a plan, is frightful; we straightway suspect our love for the Church; and instinctively put our hand upon our heart to feel whether or not it throbs Methodistically. But the Holston Conference has boldly trodden the sacred ground with shoes on; and from their vote, we infer, they thought the Secretary's vision of the finger of God, to be but the dream of an uninspired mortal, fed upon such diet as we ourselves consume. This comforts us. We breathe freer in our investigation. The charity which thinketh no evil, must conclude the Holston Conference still loyal to Methodism, notwithstanding their temerity, in prying too closely into this plan; and therefore we also may dare ask for the sacredness of the thing.

A Conference Depository—what is a Depository? Is it an assembly of immortal minds drinking at the well of religion undefiled? No sir. It is just a Book Depository, whence Methodists books are to be scattered broad-cast over the land. For instance, if established in Mobile, it will sell more Methodist books to the citizens thereof, than the preachers need to sell them—provided the citizens will buy them. Moreover, it will ship sundry boxes of books, as per order, to divers points on the Mobile and Ohio Rail Road, likewise up the Tombeckbee, and Alabama rivers.

Now pray tell the public, Mr. Editor, whether the New Orleans Depository can ship the aforesaid boxes, in the above named divers directions, as easily as a Mobile establishment could. If you think you can do it, then give us such proofs of the fact, as will remove our apprehensions of a dearth of prophetic literature, in case we have no Depository. But if we order books from New Orleans there will be, at least, a whole day's delay in getting them. Ah, indeed. Well that is serious. A whole day to a man in a death-struggle, is a very, very long time. Consequently, it would take a fruitful imagination to tell the evils, which a day's delay in selling books might produce.

But the Secretary must have other reasons for this new movement, than mere facility in selling books. He must surely know he is right, in proposing so great a change in our policy. He probably had safe precedents in our Church history, guiding him in manufacturing his wonderful plan. It is a fair presumption, that he took for his model the great Book Concern of New York, which for fifty years supplied the United States with Methodist reading, and from the profits of its sales, accumulated more than half a million dollars.

Now is it not written somewhere in our Church Chronicles that this great Book Concern had Depositories as plenty as blackberries? And is it not written in some unknown author, that Depositories, planted at all the great cross-roads of the nation, were the secret of the success and great growth of the Concern? I must confess my ignorance, sir; I really never heard of but two or three Depositories. I ask for information.

Seriously, I fear that the Financial plan of R. Abbey has in it elements of ruin to our Church finances. It will drain the resources of the Church for these unnecessary establishments, which means might otherwise be applied to the noble work of preaching the gospel to the heathen, and to the scattering of tracts, and bibles, to the four winds. It will entail upon the Conferences which adopt them a large annual expenditure in supporting them; until, by-and-by, they will be glad to get rid of them, even if they are closed for them by the Sheriff.

However little the Depository scheme will bear looking into, yet on account of its great pretences many who doubt its utility will be induced to support it, lest they be thought luke-warm in the interests of the Church. Already some Conferences have adopted it. The Western Virginia for example, which raised three thousand dollars for Missions, and paid its Conference claimants only twenty per cent last year, now boldly undertakes to raise fifty thousand dollars for a Depository—grand financering that—the Financial Secretary's eloquence must have acted as a charm upon them, and made the whole thing appear "as easy as falling off a log."

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

Mount Minnville, October 27, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: The Tennessee Conference is now in session in this place. Bishop Andrew, presiding, W. C. Johnson, Secretary. The Bishop is in good health, though evidently getting a little older. Business is progressing smoothly and finely. The Conference is increasing in power, influence and usefulness, in every respect.

This, you know, is a very large Conference, consisting of over two hundred preachers. They are mostly present, and compose, certainly, a vigorous and imposing phalanx of the Lord's army.

The question of Book and Tract operation, pursuant to the action of the General Conference, was placed in charge of a Committee, consisting of one member from each District, on the first day of the session; and their report, recommending the adoption of a Constitution for a Book and Tract Society of the Tennessee Conference, with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, was considered and discussed at some length, on Friday and Saturday.

As to the adoption of the general plan, recommended by the Financial Secretary to this and other Conferences, there is no difference of opinion, at least none worth remaining. The difficulty is in adjusting it to the peculiar condition of the Tennessee Conference. This peculiarity is that the Publishing House, itself, is in this Conference. Hence, they do not need, as is thought by many, a separate depository of books.

Here were some questions of expediency, involving some matters of detail in the practical working of the system. The adjustment of these details occupied some time, and were finally acted upon to-day, to the entire satisfaction of all. They propose to raise $100,000; and recommended the appointment of two traveling agents. For this purpose, Dr. A. R. Erwin and W. C. Johnson were selected. They are the choice of the Conference. They were determined to put their very first man into this office. At the close of the Conference this morning, they proposed to receive $100 subscribers, and in a few minutes the list amounted to $7,500. Dr. A. L. P. Green heads the list with $1,000. The Agents think the subscription in the Conference will amount to $10,000; and they feel entirely confident that they will bring up the one hundred thousand dollars by the close of the year.

The enterprise is working well. The one million will be forth coming, I think.

This morning, the vote on expunging the slavery laws of the discipline was taken, as follows—in favor 101 against, 2. The statistics are taken; and show, I am told, a very large increase; but at this moment they are not footed up and I cannot give you the figures.

Since writing the above, the Conference subscription to the proposed $100,000 for Book and Tract Society of Tennessee Conference, has reached the sum of $10,000.

CHINA.

The population of this country, but recently thrown open by treaty to christian missionaries, is so immense that we can hardly conceive of it as shut out from the world until now. It is nearly equal to that of the rest of the globe. The Russian mission, now at Pekin, has, in a recent report, made known the result of the last census, taken by order of the Emperor of China. The present population is said by this document to amount to 415,000,000—that of Pekin being 1,648,814.

This grand opening for missionary enterprise is beginning already to stir the blood of the Christian world. A large caravan of Roman Greek missionaries started a month ago under the Archimandrite Goori for Pekin. Russia will be first in the field of conversion.

Five young Chinese Christians have arrived at Suez, on their way to France, to be educated. They are accompanied by a Chinese Roman Catholic priest, who speaks French and English fluently.

A letter from Rome, in the Brussels Independence, states that the opening of China to Christian missionaries is the absorbing theme at Rome; and the Pope, it is added, is about to organize a grand collection throughout Catholic Europe on behalf of special missions.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the London Missionary Society, gratitude for this opening of providence, and prayerfulness for divine direction, animated the assembly. Two of their missionaries, Dr. Legge and Dr. Lockhart, briefly addressed the meeting. Dr. Legge pointed out that both the Russians and Romanists were about to make new and great proselytising efforts in China; and would the Protestant Churches be left behind? Would the London Missionary Society, and who could name Morrison, Milne, Medhurst, and Dyer as their own, suffer any to take their crown? At present, they had not even a sufficient number of laborers there to occupy all the ground that had been opened to them by the treaty of 1842, and trusted the churches would awake to a sense of the vast responsibility imposed upon them by the throwing open of the whole country.

Dr. Lockhart mentioned several facts in confirmation of the order and zeal of Papists in China. In their diocese of Nankin there were 60,000 professing Catholics, and whole families of Italians devoted themselves to the work of proselytising. At the same time their own missionaries were not unsuccessful; he had just heard of Mr. Shrembach having baptised eleven Chinese at Amoy. And a few years since a colporteur brought a Chinaman from the interior to Hong Kong, who appeared to have come to a knowledge of the truth, and was at last baptised. He went back to his own country, and in nine months afterwards returned with several of his neighbors, men and women, who were all anxious to be baptised; and by the last mail he heard from Mr. Chalmers that he had again returned, bringing still more; and asking that a teacher might be sent back with them. Thus this man had not only maintained his own Christian steadfastness, but had collected a band of some thirty believers out of the heathen round about him.

British Methodism has been not the first, says a correspondent of Zion's Herald, but among the last to send her contingent of militants to China. We have only just gained a foothold in that vast empire; and our five missionaries in their last report gratefully chronicle the fact that the Chinese converts have been increased by two, making a total of five who have "put on the Lord Jesus," and are walking worthy of their calling. But for the gigantic undertakings of our Foriegn Missionary Society in other parts of the world, our force in China would be at once and largely augmented. We are under solemn engagements to send out sixteen additional missionaries to British India, and last week the first instalment of this number, four godly men, took their departure. We have also resolved to establish a mission in the new colony, British Columbia, in consequence of the gold discoveries there, and four missionaries are under orders for this new field. Still we cannot doubt of an attempt to provide means to send a reinforcement to China, for what must be thought of five men only from the most vigorous of the churches of Britain devoted to the evangelization of more than four hundred millions of the human race!

What are the missionary authorities of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, going to do? Will the matter be brought before the approaching Conferences? What says the Secretary? "Put the Board in funds," says the Nashville Advocate. "Give us a special object," say the people. The recent treaty provides for the toleration of the Christian religion in all parts of the empire, and stipulates that missionaries shall be unmolested in their work. Missionaries have been sanguine in the belief that if they could penetrate inland, they would find the people more upright and religiously inclined, and therefore more ready to receive the Gospel. In the commercial cities, where alone it has been lawful for foreigners to reside, the love of money and trade has blunted the conscience, so that missionaries have sometimes doubted if the Chinese as a nation had any conception of a holy God, or any idea of veracity.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

We rejoice a long-wished-for pleasure, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, in taking a seat among the members of this old Conference, Saturday morning, October 23, in McMinnville. It was in its forty-seventh session. This is the Jerusalem Conference—"the mother of us all," in the Southwest. It has sent out members and ministers and wages more extensively into the Connection than any other. What Conference or Church but has one or more members from Tennessee? and when when a matter was in debate, who has not heard how "we did it in Tennessee!"

Age and title of Ministers.

A glance at nearly two hundred showed fewer gray heads than we had expected. Naturally, we had associated the age of the body with the individuals. The almond tree flourishes upon the beautiful gray head of Father Maddin; the hair, what there is of it, on the heads of elders Kelly and Pitts, tells of time. The others have fought Time bravely, or to them he has not yet come, leading Old Age by the hand. No cues, or knee-breeches, or buckle-shoes, and but one straight breast and standing collar, which was worn, a la military, by our excellent brother, Petway, who is as straight as his garment. They are middle-aged and young men of modern style, and strong to labor. And the summing up of the past year shows that they have labored. The justly famed eloquence of the Western pulpit has many representatives among them.

Sons of Prophets.

It is pleasantly significant to see the sons of itinerants joining the itinerancy. At the Holston Conference we saw a son of the fallen Stringfield take his noble sire's place in the ranks. Here, a son of Dr. A. L. P. Green, and a son of W. H. Browning, both presiding elders, were received on trial. The occasion suggested impressive remarks from Bishop Andrew, in the chair, and from members.

Anniversaries.

Dr. Taylor, General Sunday-school Secretary, was present the first days of Conference, and a Sunday-school meeting was held Friday afternoon. The collection was small—$27. Anniversaries of the Missionary Societies were held simultaneously at the Cumberland Presbyterian and Methodist churches on Saturday night. Collection at former, $230; at latter, $206; and a pledge by the citizens for $150 to support a missionary on Collins's river.

Book and Tract Society.

The Conference, after much discussion and reference, got this launched with a heartiness. Two of its best men were designated for agents to collect $100,000, for our publishing interests, and before adjournment, $10,100 of the sum was subscribed. That shows the preachers are in earnest; they believe in tithes. If one-tenth of the entire amount was raised in two days at the seat of Conference, surely the balance can be in twelve months throughout the Conference territory. Tennessee stands up to the trust which the Church has put here. She has resolved right, and now, as St. Paul would say, let her "perform the doing of it."

"METHODIST PRESS."

The Holstan Conference, the Switzerland of our ecclesiastical connection, must be as literary in its tendencies as the real Switzerland. Dr. Patton, of revered memory, originated the Holston Christian Advocate. The conference patronizes the Nashville Advocate. The editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate is from Holstan. Rev. Mr. Hicks, a Presiding Elder of the Holstan Conference, is the editor of the the Herald of Truth. Rev. Mr. Graves, another Presiding Elder of the Holstan Conference, is the editor of the Religious Intelligencer. Rev. A. F. Cox, of Goliad, Texas Conference, but recently transferred from Holstan, is the editor of the Goliad Messenger.

We have often heard, and have written somewhat, of the importance of sanctifying the secular press, at least so far as to have it conducted by christian men. But we had not expected the work to begin after this fashion. But, who knows what is to happen? The last three papers, which we have called secular, are of excellent spirit. What may be the necessity for those of Mr. Hicks and Mr. Graves, we cannot tell; but a pure press in Goliad was, before Mr. Cox took hold, a public necessity. We sincerely hope he may be useful, both as minister of the Gospel and as editor.

We have also received the Centenary Casket, a dainty little paper, conducted by the young ladies of Centenary Institute, Alabama. The Messenger and Portfolio, and the young ladies' paper, is sent us by the young ladies of Columbus Institute, Miss. Youth, hope, and beauty—bright eyes, clustering ringlets, and lily hands are always suggested when we open these papers.

TEXAS MILITARY INSTITUTE.

The advertisement of this institution of learning will be found in another column. It is located at Rutersville, Fayette county, Texas; one of the most beautiful, salubrious, and fertile regions of the State. Prof. C. G. Forshey, formerly of this city, is the Superintendent. One of the first gentlemen with whom we became acquainted upon landing in Galveston in 1854, was Prof. Forshey.—To him, and to his accomplished lady, during the distresses of the epidemic of that season, and in the midst of embarrassments growing out of our new position, we were indebted for a friendship as refined as it was disinterested. The mutual friendship then formed has grown with increasing years.

In the beginning of 1855, the Military Institute was established in Galveston, where it attained a most flattering success in the proficiency of the Cadets. Afterwards removed to Ruterville, its pupils are still witnesses of its high educational advantages. Prof. Forshey is well known as a cultivated and urbane gentleman; and a more enthusiastic and laborious educator we have never seen. With the gifts he passes, and the life-absorbing labor he bestows, he deserves the highest rewards of professional fame and pecuniary success. The culture received at the Institute is thorough, and of high grade—literary and scientific—physical and mental. In regard to the person and manners of the Cadets, it is unsurpassed. We speak from personal knowledge.

RUSSIAN EDUCATION.

Russia is advancing. The great Russian educationalist, M. de Hamel, has just completed his inspection of the two great Normal Training and Model Schools of Ireland, viz: that of the Church Education Society, and that of the National Board. He was commissioned by the present Emperor of Russia to visit the educational establishments of Ireland, with the view of digesting a plan of national education for "all the Russias," more particularly for the serfs of that immense empire, who are about to be emancipated; and he has been furnished with the various publications and reports of both institutions.

M. de Hamel's religious profession is that of the Moravian church, whose rule of faith is the Bible, and it is believed, that as far as in him lies, he will recommend an educational system for Russia which shall uphold the supremacy of God's word. He occupies a high position among the savans of Russia; he is "Conseiller d'Etat Actuel;" he is a member of the Imperial Academy of St. Petersburg, and the author of the German work on education, which Guizot has translated into French under the title of l'Enseignement Mutuel.

REV. L. ROSSER, D.D.

A Correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate says: We have already taken leave of our Presiding Elder, that man of God, that gifted and eloquent soldier of God's battalions, Rev. Leonidas Rosser, D.D. We deeply regret that this beloved brother is to leave the active duties of the ministry to wield the pen. He has fought a good fight, and flashed in the faces of the enemies of the Church and of souls, a brilliant blade. From the blue tops of the Alleghanies, along the plains, among the lowlands, and in the valleys, he has borne the standard of the cross and the banner of the Methodist Church in glorious triumph. In the spirit of a Christian minister he has gone forth ringing in the ears of sinners the sound of the gospel, refuted error in high places, put to flight the enemies of his Church and the institutions of his native land, revived the drooping energies of his people and devoted his whole time to the establishment of true and vital Christianity separate and distinct from the affairs of the world. We hail him as the pioneer of Methodism in the Valley of Virginia.

QUEEN VICTORIA.

After her return from visiting her daughter in Germany, the Queen visited the town of Leeds and inaugurated a magnificent Town Hall there, amid an extraordinary display of popular enthusiasm. She then proceeded to Scotland, and is now spending the autumn at her beautiful Highland home at Balmoral, Aberdeenshire. She is in the habit there, of visiting the cottages of the peasantry. The "gude wives" are on excellent terms with her, and some of them address her as "Mistress Albert." Among the cottages both she and her daughter, (now the Princess Frederic of Prussia,) have been wont to circulate religious serials. The young lady is believed to be a sincere and devout Christian, and last year bade farewell to many of the cottagers with tears in her eyes.

The Church of England is now considerably disturbed by the attempts of certain clergymen to introduce "confession," something after the Romish plan, priestly absolution from sin is also being warmly discussed. The anti-Romanist laity are taking it up against the Romanising tendencies of the High Church clergy. The discussion having increased for years past, and some of the points are likely to increase more; and startling results are anticipated.

CAMELS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Forty-nine of the camels belonging to the United States are now at Campe Verd, sixty miles from San Antonio, Texas. Only one of those imported has died, while ten have been added by birth. These young American born camels thrive well, and promise to grow up equal in all respects to those imported. One hundred and twenty more have recently arrived. These camels are imported on private account, and the owners are ready to sell them either to the Government or to private parties. They are almost the only domestic animal in the Canary Islands for service, and are there used, not only for transporting all burthens, but also for plowing and nearly all other purposes on farms. No carts, wagons or carriages are there used, but the camel supplies their place. It is believed by some that this animal will be found profitable for similar uses in Texas, and the experiment already made by the Government proves entirely successful. But one of those imported two or three years ago has died, while there has been quite an increase by births. The climate and food seem to suit them admirably.

A TEXAS PREACHER FALLEN.

Rev. William F. Hubert, of the Texas Conference, stationed at Lavaca and Indianola, has fallen a victim to the yellow fever.

Upon being told by his physician he could live but a short time, he remarked, "I have been long preparing for this. I am ready at the summons. Death hath no terrors for me. I have a crown of righteousness laid up in heaven."

Bro. Hubert was an excellent young man, of one of the oldest Methodist families in Texas. His brother, Rev. Henry L. Hubert, is a devoted young minister of the Texas conference.

REV. L. B. WHIPPLE.

We rejoice to learn from the Texas Advocate, that Mr. Whipple has recovered from the yellow fever.

He was nigh unto death, for the work of the Lord committed to him, which he could not be prevailed upon to leave at the approach of the pestilence. We join in the fervant thanksgivings of the congregation for his recovery.

Last Phase of the Graves Case.—As we expected, Mr. Graves got a large majority of the late Lebanon Association to stand by him. His party sent up delegates. The majority—the First Baptist Church in Nashville—also sent up delegates to the Association. The latter were rejected, the former received, and Mr. Graves actually made Moderator of the body! Dr. Howell, and those acting with him, have published a strong protest, stating that the action of the Association was against its own constitution, and on a wrong and ex parte showing. Steps are being taken by them to establish another Baptist paper in Nashville.

"The British" seem determined to prevent American philibusters from entering Nicaragua. The West Indian fleet is waiting for them. British rashness stirred up the resistance of the American Colonies; British rashness at Lexington precipitated the war of the Revolution; British rashness roused subdued South Carolina to drive Cornwallis from her borders—and British rashness will make the fortune of the filibusters. Better leave them to the management of the President of the United States.

The Relation of Children to God and the Church is quite a fruitful theme for newspaper writers at present. A great many crude and wild views are being offered. We wish it distinctly understood that neither our church, nor the editor of this paper, is responsible for any mans' opinions uttered herein. We do not object to the discussion, however. We, also, shall have something to say after awhile.

Mrs. Read's Female Seminary.—We have received the Catalogue of this institution, located at Baton Rouge. In case of an epidemic, it is removed to Greenwell Springs, a beautiful pine woods situation, nineteen miles distant. There is a full corps of teachers, and the institution is represented as of the most excellent character. Rev. Dr. Keener, Dr. C. G. Young, and others, have spoken to us in the highest terms of commendation.

Bishop Andrews, after the adjournment of the Tennessee Conference, says the Nashville Advocate, came on to Nashville. He preached in McKendree Church, last Sabbath, to a vast and deeply attentive congregation. We heard an appointment given out for him at the brick-colored Church: he is to preach there to the negroes on Wednesday evening.

Death of Mrs. Sehon—The numerous friends of Dr. Sehon will sympathize in the deep but not unexpected sorrow occasioned by the death of his mother, in Clarksville, Virginia, October 28. This venerable Christian lady has for months been on the verge of death, and her memory is blessed.

Harper's Magazine, advertised in another column, is the great American Monthly. In addition to its literary worth, it is the only Secular Magazine that is perfectly true to the evangelical religious sentiments of this country.

A Writer in the Texas Baptist accuses the Methodists of copying the Catholics, because, they, in the administration of the Lord's Supper, use the very same words the Savior used when he administered to his disciples, except that they say, "The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ," instead of "This is my blood!" What next?

COMMUNICATIONS.

NEW ORLEANS CITY MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor—In my first article on the subject of City Missions, I inadvertently trod upon the toes of a distinguished member of the alphabet family, whose ire was consequently aroused to desperate deeds. That which was intended simply to call the attention of the Church, and awaken an interest in this important work, was by the letter "H," tortured into "a reflection made to dishonor the Church."

It is truly refreshing, to note the pompous air of this would-be defender of the Church's honor; as he, with the courage of a Falstaff, hides himself behind his alphabetical barricade, and pelts the "reverend missionary" with empty words. His rhetoric glitters—with tinsel; his logic is potent, with ignorance of the subject upon which he writes. Had he known better, he would have written differently. As a rule, anonymous assailants are not entitled to honorable notice, but you, Mr. Editor, have given a place in your columns to his personal strictures and unjust censures, and hence I am obliged to notice him.

I did not deem it necessary to inform the readers of your paper, "whom the Conference appointed to this important work," for the reason, that this was published in the Advocate, with the appointments; which, I suppose, was read by all the Church. But your sapient correspondent takes umbrage at the ommission, and gravely gives the information. I am sure your readers must feel obliged! I speak advisedly, in saying that "facts do warrant" the assumption, that the Church has not sympathized with the appointment of the City Missionary this year; whose the blame, remains to be seen. It is with reluctance that I present the following statement of facts, but justice to myself requires it.

As soon as possible, after receiving my appointment, I came to the city, and reported myself to the P. Elder. He, and the preachers stationed in the city, professed to deplore my appointment to this work, declaring their conviction that I would not be sustained by the Church: "The Church had given liberally, to the full extent of its power, and could do no more." At the instigation of Bro. Walker, I agreed to unite the Mission with a part of the New Orleans circuit, which was left "to be supplied," giving my time in equal portions to each.

The Rev. R. J. Harp, who stands alone the pledged friend of the City Mission, advised earnestly against this union, and twice invited the professed friends of the Mission to meet in conference, and organize the enterprise. To these invitations there was not a single response. He soon found that the men for whom he had pledged himself for $1,000, in support of the Mission, did not consider themselves committed to the enterprise.

My first move was to organize a Sabbath-school, in the rear of the First District; but the means were not forthcoming, though frequent application was made to professed friends. What do these facts warrant? Simply a belief that there was a lack of sympathy.

But "H" asks, "what is the fate of the Mission Ship?" And, after a few flourishes, answers the question himself: "She remains as at first, launched by the Conference, without ballast or equipments to get her to sea." This is, at best, a gratuitous assertion, not warranted by facts; and is either wilful misrepresentation, or the result of wilful ignorance. Not only were efforts made to "get her to sea," but efforts are being constantly made to keep her there. But who, I ask, was to furnish the ballast and equipments necessary for the voyage—the Church upon whose sympathy she was cast, or the missionary, with but twenty dollars in his pocket when he landed in New Orleans? If "H," who seems so full of nautical lore, had been placed in command, he would doubtless have experienced some difficulty, in finding ballast, or equipments either, out at sea. But, "what has become of the Mission Ship?" She is upon the waters, sir; and, though frequently thrown upon her beam ends for want of ballast, and her crew nearly famished, (literally,) for want of provisions, yet she floats.

I tell you, Mr. Editor, when I bring to mind the privations which my wife and children are enduring in this work, from want of sympathy, and read this uncharitable and uncalled for assault of your hidden correspondent, I feel ready to stand up in defence of that "degenerate Methodism," reprobated by another of your correspondents. I should have been glad to have exchanged signals with those "Missionary Sabbath School privateers." I would have been assured of sympathy with my cause, if not for myself; but I presume, like "little boats, they kept near shore." Several of those craft were cruising from the Third District, but I never heard of any other.

But, he also presumes to plan work for "an active City Missionary." There is no lack of places to labor in New Orleans—it was to show up this fact that I wrote my articles; but H. is on the wrong track this time; a cotton bale is too high, and a coal boat too dirty for a pulpit—there are more available places than these. Your worthy predecessor on the tripod advised against preaching on the levee; a man can find plenty to do here, besides spinning a rope with sand. I have preached, on an average, three sermons on a Sabbath, until the fever became epidemic. I have visited the sick, buried the dead, and comforted the living. I have "toted," and distributed tracts, purchased out of my own scanty means. I have distributed on steamboats, and in the hotels, cards containing directions to the Methodist churches, printed at the suggestion of the Preachers, and paid for by myself. I monthly distributed fifty copies "Sabbath School Visitor," furnished by Bro. Harp.

That I have been here, laboring to the extent of my ability on the mission, has been known by the Preachers, regular and local, and by many of the prominent members of the church. The amount of tangible sympathy I have received is:

Cash from Rev. R. J. Harp	$300 00
" " all other sources	15 00
Groceries to amount, perhaps	10 00
	325 00

Did "H" wilfully intend to mislead the minds of those who had no opportunity to know better, or was he misled, in summing up the churches in the "nocared for" sections of the city? I have, since writing my first article, found out my mistake concerning the one Episcopal, and one Presbyterian churches, but the locality of the one Baptist, and three Methodist churches, in which regular services are held every Sabbath, is unknown to every body else, but "H."

Can it be that he pretends to misunderstand me, and refers to the churches for colored persons, in which no white congregation ever assembles? Perhaps so! But, verily, his effort to defend the churches which were not attacked, has shown him to be devoid of that "charity which rejoiceth in the truth," Charles J. Hallberg.

THE RELATION OF CHILDREN TO GOD AND THE CHURCH.

Mr. Editor: The above caption contains a question of much importance to every denomination of Christians, and especially to us who "profess to have no confidence in the flesh," but to walk after the Spirit of the Gospel. That is, to discard all useless forms and ceremonies, and to make use of no signs or seals that do not signify or seal something.

Now it seems to me, that in the solution of the above question is involved one of the fundamental doctrines of our Church, viz. Infant Baptism. Other denominations—that have "some confidence in the flesh," "and account him a Jew, that is, one outwardly," profess, by that sacrament to secure to the child a state of grace, or that by it the child is inducted into Christ's militant Church, and into his spiritual kingdom.

But we, as Methodists, believe no such thing. Then the question is, what do we believe? What is the relation of children to God and the Church? And what do we do for them in baptism?

To the first question, we have an answer in our seventh article of religion—"Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam; but it is the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually."

Mr. Adam Clark, after examining critically the many texts of Scripture on the effects of the fall, concludes that, "all are born with a sinful nature, and the seeds of this evil soon vegetate, and bring forth corresponding fruits" and also, that "the original infection or corruption of nature is the grand hidden cause, source, and spring of all transgression; as the various powers of the mind are developed, so it diffuses itself, infecting every passion and appetite through their whole extent and operation." In short, he is convinced of the total depravity of the human heart.

In your paper of September 27th, "Spectator" reiterates his opinion as expressed in a former issue, "that children in infancy, were not in such a state of purity as to become Christians at years of accountability without a change of heart, or new birth."

The "image of God," in which man was created, was "knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness;" but children are ignorant, unrighteous, and unholy. Consequently we conclude that, "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," and that "except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

While considering this part of the question it remains to determine, what was the effect of the atonement in regard to children. That they are brought into a salvable state, and if they die in infancy, they are saved in heaven, is a glorious doctrine, well sustained by divine authority, and a healing balm to many a wounded heart.—But, that those that live are not changed, are not fit subjects for Christ's kingdom or his Church, we have ample and conclusive proof. In answer to the second part of this question—the relation of children to the Church—we will quote from Mr. Watson's Institutes, part fourth, page 717; he says, "admitting that" by "the kingdom of God" or "of heaven," our Lord means the glorified state of his Church; it must be granted that none can enter into heaven who are not redeemed by Christ, and who do not stand in a vital relation to him as members of his mystical body or, otherwise; we should place human and fallen beings in that heavenly state who are unconnected with Christ as their redeemer, and uncleansed by him as the sanctifier of his redeemed. If infants, therefore, are thus redeemed and sanctified in their nature, and are before death made "meet for the inheritance of the saints in light," so that in this world they are placed in the same relation to Christ as an adult believer, who derives sanctifying influence from him; they are therefore, the members of his Church. They partake the grace of the covenant, and are comprehended in that promise of the covenant, "I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." In other words they are made members of Christ's Church, and are entitled to be recognized as such by the administration of the visible sign of initiation into some visible branch of it. Thus we see that Mr. Watson's main argument for infant baptism is, that they are in a state of sanctification, consequently members of the Church, and fit subjects for the sign of grace, and seal of the covenant.

Here too, we have an answer to the question, "What do we do for infants in baptism?" We receive, or induct them into the Church, of which they had already been made members by virtue of the atonement.

We quote again from "Spectator." He asks, "does baptism change the child's relations to the Church? We answer, not; since no change has been effected by this ordinance." "Children unbaptised are not considered fit subjects for Church membership, whilst in years of infancy or unaccountability."

He goes on to speak of the fallacy of taking children into the Church, and very justly remarks that, not one of a hundred thus taken in by baptism or otherwise, will at the age of accountability give evidence of a fitness for that state, without being first converted. I will not recapitulate the facts adduced in this article, but simply point to the caption, "What is the relation of children to God and the Church," and add, what do we do for them by baptism?"

May he who has power to make "crooked things straight," and to "bring light out of darkness," shine into the heart and mind of some one, and inspire him to write, that we may know the truth "of this whole matter."

LETTER FROM EAST TEXAS.

Book Depository again—East Texas Conference—"Brier"

Ma. Editor—The New Orleans Christian Advocate, of October 13th, contains what the writer "Brier," deems an answer to mine of September 8th, on the subject of a suitable point for a Book Depository, to meet the wants of our people in the E. T. Conference. Had you used the same prerogative in the use of your scissors, as you do with long obituaries and lengthy revival notices, I should have had but one point brought before me worthy of a passing notice. Were I to tax myself with the labor and time, to present something like a synopsis of these irrelevant matters, I should have an herculean task before me. Let us sketch:—

"Ask the rivers—rise in the wrong place—run the right way or not at all; old Ocean—Rail-roads—commercial business of the World—where the other tenth go? divided between Jefferson, Shreveport, Magnolia, Sabine Pass and Galveston—inducements to go to any other place than N. O., unless New York."

The above is all out of place—no argument; again, what allusion is there in my communication to the origin of "Texas Advocate?" what did I say about "Soule University?" Did I make any mention about "small pebble?" Not a word! Why does "B" fly off at such a tangent? "Room to air is," and "airier," are all uncalled for. But I will not attempt to follow "B" in his zig-zag course any longer. Why did he not stick to the text, and adduce some arguments to prove that New Orleans would not answer for our point to get books? But we have only an assertion. Why not prove that nine-tenths of the merchants and farmers of East Texas do not trade with New Orleans? Why did he not adduce something like an argument to prove that Galveston could better accomodate us in supplying our demands, by river or rail-road? But no argument is found, simply an assertion.

I will notice one declaration of Bro "B:" "About one-third of East Texas Conference can go no where else, but to Galveston." Well then, one-third is in a fix! No trade to New Orleans? If I am not greatly mistaken, there has been quite a number of boxes of books shipped from Louisville, Ky., and from Nashville, that have been received and sold in that one-third of our Conference; and the Opelousas Rail Road, now rapidly extending into that one-third, will soon get it out of its fix.

As to his prediction—about East Texas refusing further joint co-operation, being a ruinous affair—I am impressed that it will be greatly to her advantage in time to come. As to being "tacked on," I had rather be tacked than tied.

Mr. Editor, I would suggest that East Texas Conference had better keep herself aloof from unprofitable alliances, and look well to her own interests. What are we doing, as a Conference, for the education of our people? I will say, without fear of being scratched by a "Brier," that we are doing next thing to nothing. Look at our Starrville female school, look at Fowler Institute, and I ask what is being done to advance our educational interests? Do I ask what we are doing? We are not "doing." I can hear of no effort. Are we to have the minds of preachers, laymen and citizens now wholly turned to "Soule University;" hundreds and thousands sent off to build up that Institution, while our own houses, built for educational purposes, are rotting down, going to ruin? No, never let it be said that we have filled the treasurer's coffers of "Soul University," while we gaze upon the dilapidated houses of our own Conference. "Charity begins at home," is an old adage. Beginning at home conveys to my mind that home demands—urgent demands—should be met first; and then let her streams flow out to other necessities. Our Conference, in one sense, is our home, and let us look well to the claims of our home, and then help where it is most needed; and if "Soule University" is the most needy, I go in to help her. Come, preachers and members of East Texas, let us look well to the measures we are about to adopt and patronize.

Mount Airy, East Texas, Oct. 1858. PHILO.

BENLOMOND.

In the vicinity of the seat of the Tennessee Conference, there rises a beautiful mountain, overlooking a large extent of country surrounding, which is called Benlomond. It is about three miles distant from the town, and overlooks it most favorably. It is about a mile from the base of the mountain to the summit, up a very steep and rocky ascent.

I noticed, when I attended the Kentucky Conference, that in making the appointments of the preachers they very frequently, if, indeed, they do not generally, put the youngest preachers into the highest positions in the Conference. In Mississippi the rule is different; there, for the most part, the young men are put in the lowest places.

Thirdly. The citizens of the very clean and hospitable town of M'Minnville proposed to the Conference, that on Tuesday they should pay a visit to Benlomond. The Conference assented; and, at the time appointed—the carriages omnibusses, buggies and saddle-horses were in requisition in no small numbers, and the procession moved. At the head of wheel navigation the harness horses were disengaged and hitched to limbs, fences, etc.; the carriages were placed around, like a camp meeting, and the Conference, visitors, townsmen, countrymen, ladies and a few babies, proceeded on Walker's line to the summit.

The view was grand, beautiful, and extensive. After resting a little, all were glad they came; and, after the reading of a piece of original poetry, by Dr. Erwin, made for the occasion, and two or three short and appropriate speeches, and a final benediction by Bishop Andrew, the summit of Benlomond was left to its quiet solitude, and the monotonous eloquence of its stiff and bracing breezes.

In the debates in the Conference, touching the Book and Tract Depository interests, the Tennessee Conference was frequently called the "Central Conference;" whatever may be said with regard to the propriety of this appellation, it cannot be doubted but the Tennessee Conference did, for a time at least, occupy a higher position than any other Conference in the Church.

The summit of Benlomond is intended, at no very distant day, to be the seat of a large watering place; or, I would say, if the good people of M'Minnville have no objections—an airing place.

But alas, for earthly elevation! The Tennessee Conference did not maintain its high position; it was attained too suddenly to last. By about the time of the setting sun we were all quietly and safely back, in as clean a mountain town as the State of Tennessee can afford.

M'Minnville, Tenn., Oct. 20, 1858. B. Abbey.

METHODIST USAGE VS. THE INTEREST OF METHODIST CHILDREN.

While it is not the intention of the writer to arraign before the bar of public opinion the Church of my choice, yet I cannot with my present views and feelings, refrain noticing what I regard a most fatal and egregious error into which we, as a Church, have fallen. I am not ignorant of the fact, that it is a delicate point to come in contact with a long established and popular usage, even though that usage be not founded in law, nor accomplish the ends contemplated; because any attempt at reformation will be regarded, by the masses, as an innovation on the "old landmarks." Still when "old paths" become dim and only impede the march of truth, it becomes necessary to oppose popular prejudices and remedy the evil.

Now, in the absence of all legislation—for, so far as I know, there is no ecclesiastical statute bearing upon the point in question—the Methodist Church has, by a sort of common consent, adopted the most liberal system of Sabbath School instruction ever adopted by any religious organization beneath the sun; a system that annihilates the very objects sought to be gained.

Child that Methodist children as much belong to, and are the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as the citizens of Louisiana belong to and are the property of the United States. Hence, the Church is bound by the highest moral obligations not only to interest them in the word of God, but to teach them the principles, the rules, the laws, by which we as a Church are governed. Why? because, we believe our polity is right, approaching nearer to, and more consonant with the word of God than that of any other denomination. If then we are right (and so we preach and so believe) why so careful to exclude our Discipline from our Sabbath Schools? Why not adopt it as a text book and teach it to our children? At least, why not have a catechism setting forth our "articles of faith?" An objector is ready to answer; "because it would be too sectarian; let us rather teach our children plain Scripture truths and leave Church policy for them to learn after they shall have come to years."

Here is the usage ever pursued by our Church; and what are the results? Thousands of Methodist children after they have grown up, have been prejudiced against the Church within whose pales they have been reared, by designing men whose business is to proselyte from other Churches, and thus estranged from the paternal fold: And further, nine out of every ten that join our Church are as ignorant (and what is still more lamentable, they remain so) of our creed almost as an Arab. But suppose we were to teach them our doctrines if not our Discipline, the results would be vastly different. Then they could meet and successfully repel at every point any attack that might be made by our most subtle enemies.

As it is however, not only does the interest of Methodist children suffer, but the great interest of our Church. This is specially true in our own beloved Conference. Here we regard Sunday Schools as the great nursery of the Church—the hope of Methodism. How important then that our doctrines, yea, our creed, be taught the children that come within the scope of our instruction.

If there is nothing in the Discipline to bar it, I hope our approaching Conference, will take into consideration the propriety of having a catechism prepared, which shall contain our "Articles of Faith."

Would like to hear the views of brethren generally, and of our worthy Editor specially upon this subject.

Paris, Tennessee, Oct. 21, 1858. J. W. Johnson.

THE SABBATH SCHOOLS.

They are there so few Sabbath Schools, while all admit the vast importance of training the young? Is this an important question? The church will not have done her duty until a change is wrought here. The preachers will not have discharged their vows before God and the brethren until they have made a sincere effort to start a Sunday School where "ten children can be collected." They will not have discharged their duty until they have preached on the subject "at least once in six months in every congregation."

Where is your conscience, Brother? Does it not resemble the "aspen leaf" when you think of this? Have you not "come short" of your promise, your duty, your privilege of doing good for the young? You tell of your difficulties—you have too much to do. What can you do, more important? Better neglect other things, than this—the most promising part of your crop—the richest and earliest yield—the easiest to cultivate—and producing the most permanent and by far the surest crop.

The old may heed, and repeal—the child, led in the right path, "will not depart from it," since the morals, save the souls of the rising population—and you strengthen, extend, and crown the church with victory, and lay the track for the Millennial ear. Juvenis.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

Admitted on trial, fourteen; Re-admitted, three; Discontinued, one; Received in full connection, seventeen; The following laymen were announced as the District Stewards to act in conjunction with the Conference Stewards, according to the finance plan of the Conference, viz: Isaac Litton, Paschall P. Hudson, D. M. Southard, B. S. Hardaway, T. B. Miles, James H. Scruggs, H. M. Welch, G. W. Petway, W. M. Voorhies, Samuel M. Byrn, H. F. Beamount. Traveling Preachers elected and ordained Elders, six; Local preachers elected and ordained Deacons, eight; Local preachers elected and ordained Elders, six; Deaths: three beloved brethren died during the past year—James W. Allen, Aaron J. Gilmore, John K. Woodson. These all died in faith. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. S. D. Baldwin before a large and sympathizing congregation. C. D. Elliot vs. J. B. McFerrin: extract from the Journals, October 25, 1858: the name of J. B. McFerrin was called, William Burr, acting for the presiding elder, who was absent on account of sickness, stated that he knew of nothing against him. The Bishop stated that he had received a printed document, signed C. D. Elliott, in which there were complaints against J. B. McFerrin, this printed document was read. J. B. McFerrin replied to the complaints made by C. D. Elliott. A preamble and resolutions, offered by F. S. Petway and W. H. Browning, were read. Remarks were made by A. L. P. Green, and further by J. B. McFerrin. Whereupon said preamble and resolutions were adopted unanimously by a rising vote, as follows, and were, on motion, ordered to be published in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

Resolutions.

"Whereas, Collins D. Elliott has sent to the Tennessee Conference complaints against the course pursued by J. B. McFerrin, in reference to said Collins D. Elliott and his connection with the dancing taught and practised in the boarding-house of the Nashville Female Academy:

"Therefore resolved, 1. That the complaints are not sustained by the facts in the case.

"2. That we approve of the conduct of J. B. McFerrin in the premises.

"3. That the character of J. B. McFerrin pass.

"Signed, F. S. Petway, W. H. Browning."

VOTE ON EXPUNGING.

The vote on the recommendation of the General Conference to strike out the Rule on Slavery was 112 yeas, 2 nays.

"To spread Scriptural Holiness over these Lands."

Mississippi Conference.

SCOTLAND CIRCUIT—REV. J. B. HOWEN, writes: "We commenced a meeting at Brandywine Springs, 23d October, and continued until the 31st.

"The Lord was with as in great powor—a deep interest was manifested by the whole community. Up to the time of our leaving, there were fifty accessions—thirty-two of them whites; eighteen colored; twenty-five clear conversions among the whites. Several heads of families joined who promise much good to the church. The membership are all how in a flame of love. The young converts have gone to work in earnest; one day a propnsition was made to raise money to build a church—in a few minutes $1000 was subscribed; and shortly after, more than $500 promised; a committee of responsible men at the head of it, will soon have a good church at this point.

"Conference collection, $11,60. The preacher will receive liberally, with other good causes. We left a large number of mourners at the altar—may the Lord convert and save them.

"We have just closed our accood protracted meeting at Nebo, which lasted six days, and resulted in the accession of four persons and five conversions. The fruits of our past revival are still manifest; among the converts, were mourners that have been seeking religion for many years—ons of them, for eleven years, received the witness of the Spirit, and now rejoices in the God of our salvation.

"We have yet one more protracted meeting on the Scotland Circuit, and another round yet to make. Up to the present, there has been one hundred and twenty-five accessions, and near that number of happy converts, several have made a profession of "perfect love," and a good number of backsliders reclaimed. Our missionary and conference collection have not been neglected, neither has the interests of the Advocate.

"The preacher will get his allowance—we hope, to have the work in a good condition for the new preacher."

TALLULA CIRCUIT.—REV. R. W. LAMBERTH, writes: "Our presiding elder, brother Wm. H. Hines, has been with us for three days past, holding a meeting. Thank God! it was a meeting—a meeting with Jesus. The power of God was with us. It is true, only two were converted, one reclaimed, and three accessions to the church, which would appear, to many of our brethren, who have populous circuits, to be a cold, and almost unprofitable meeting—but with us, in a sparsely settled country, where people, being highly blessed in their temporal interests, place the affections of their hearts upon their accumulated wealth, it is regarded a glorious time—the best ever known or felt here. May God prosper the cause of Zion among this people, and build them up in a most holy faith. Brother Hines was called off by the illness of his family, and with regret, he parted from us, while we were loath to give him up. In consequence of my own physical inability, I was unable to protract the services. Our membership amounts to thirty-six whites, and over seven hundred colored. The principal portion of my labor is among the latter.

"Upon my arrival here last winter, I met with great difficulty in getting a house—this aroused the kind feelings of the people, who have determined that their minister shall not be thrown under such embarrassments, and manifested that determination by their liberality in subscribing to the erection of a parsonage; two acres of land have been given, and more than seven hundred dollars have been subscribed, while much more is promised by persons whose names I have not yet obtained. Our quarterly conference proposed a division of the work, that the people may be more frequently accommodated with preaching; all are anxious in the upper portion of the work for the division, and promise to erect a parsonage if you will give them a preacher. Brethren, this is a kind hearted, generous and hospitable people—willing their ministers' wants should be supplied, and willing to supply them. The sickness we have here is generally mild in its character, but little that is fatal, being mostly chills and fever.

"May the Lord be with this people, and grant that a minister may be sent them next year who may be instrumental in the hand of God, in converting them from the error of their way."

Alabama Conference.

CATOMA COLORED MISSION—REV. J. W. BROWN, writes: "You will permit me through your paper, to give account of my work and to make in addition a few suggestions. I was appointed for the present year to the Catoma Colored Mission, which I found by hunting it as I had neither plan nor instructions. And having served the same work about eight years since for two years in succession, I concluded to adopt a new plan and to make an effort at concentration; I had a number of applications to preach on the plantations, but would not accept of them. And continued to urge the importance of concentrating at some point; and finally succeeded in concentrating at two points and two only. And these are the only appointments on the work; now to an advocate of the old plan this seems like doing nothing. But let us look at the true merits of the case. These two Churches are in densely populated neighborhoods, and, say, from sixteen to twenty plantations are served, and this every two weeks, with regularly organized societies and comfortable houses of worship, where the owners of the slaves, and overseers with their families, may meet and worship God. Now you will readily see that upon the old plan of plantation preaching it would require from eight to ten weeks to serve these sixteen or twenty plantations, with all the inconveniences peculiar to this plan; such as little dirty houses, or under a tree in the yard, or in the sun, with many of the slaves badly dressed, which would not be the case under the plan which we propose. And in addition to all this many of the negroes think that their owners employ the Missionary in order to keep them at home, which puts them in a bad condition for hearing and appreciating the Gospel; and more still, as the work now stands generally within the bounds of the Alabama Conference, it is subject to perpetual change—such as the change of ownership on plantations, and not unfrequently, the mere change of an overseer affects this work seriously. Where, if we had the houses built it would give permanancy to this work. Such would be the fact from various considerations. Such as confidence being established in the owners of the slaves, as to the work being permenent; and also confidence in the agency that when they join the Church they are in the Church, which they do not feel as they should, as the work now stands. And furthermore, the minister who serves these people has some claim to respectability, or should have, and also to comfort. But as the case now stands he scarcely knows his whereabouts, after going at half speed all day on Sunday—and at night feels more like dying than living, without any sort of comfort of having accomplished any good during the day of confusion which he has passed. Now I will ask any one to look at our Missionary work, as it now stands in the bounds of the Alabama Conference; and say, after the thousands of dollars and tens of thousands, with the sweat and toil, and loss of life of our dear brethren, in this work, if it has not been almost a failure. And such is the fact in my humble opinion from the above mentioned difficulties. And I would suggest that some plan be adopted at our next Annual Conference, by which to establish this work. Now would it not be better to make an appropriation from the Missionary Society to build Churches, Mission Churches; than have the work as it now is? I think so, even if the number of appointments be less, which would have to be with such appropriation, as many of the appropriations are now made. But such appropriation is not nedessary if we could get concentrated action in the premises. Buy an agent, to collect from the planters to build Mission Churches in their own neighborhoods; or if you prefer it, a superintendant of Missions to do this work. I am simply making suggestions because I desire action and immediate action in the premises. The work can be done, and must be done."

LINDEN CIRCUIT—REV. J. W. SHOMES, writes: "I am closing my labors on the Linden Circuit, with gratitude to the great Head of the Church, for his goodness, and wonderful works among us. The revival spirit has pervaded almost the entire Circuit for two months; and the Gospel of Christ has proved the power of God unto the salvation of many souls. We have received into the Church since the last quarter, about one hundred persons who say they enlisted for life. We have tried to keep the door closed against all but "life-time volunteers." How far we may have succeeded in this respect, must be determined by the future fidelity or infidelity of this band of young Christians. Our Conference and Missionary claims on this circuit will be fully met; and upon the whole, Mr. Editor, I am closing two of the happiest years of my itinerant life. I shall soon be again on the itinerant wave, not knowing whither I shall be drifted, nor what things shall befall me there; but I shall leave my present field of labor with a fervent prayer, "that God may bless all the people of Linden Circuit, Amen."

COOKSVILLE—REV. W. C. HEARN, writes: "We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Cooksville, of fourteen days continuance; forty professed the religion of Jesus, forty-one whites and nine blacks were added to the Church, adding these to others reported, we have had one hundred and twenty-seven converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Louisiana Conference.

EVERGREEN—REV. D. S. WATKINS, writes: "The shower continues held a meeting at Evergreen, eight joined the Church. Several converted. Thanks to Rev. J. Landrum, for faithful service done."

VIENNA—REV. R. C. GOODSON, writes: "We are in the midst of a protracted meeting at this place, much good being done; some twenty-two have been annexed to our society at this place; the number of conversions I have not ascertained; the prospect is growing better daily."

Texas Conference.

HELTON CIRCUIT—REV. T. B. FERGUSON, writes: "We have had glorious revivals in Texas; this year I have taken in "my work" one hundred and eighteen members. The Indians are committing depredations on our frontier constantly."

The Very Latest Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

LIVERPOOL Oct. 25.—The sales for two days, amount to 11,300 bales. Of this amount 1600 bales were sold to speculators and for exportation. The market on Monday closed with a declining tendency, and quotations were irregular. In some instances a slight decline was submitted to. Holders were offering their stock freely, but showed no disposition to press on the market. Middling Orleans is quoted at 7 3 16@7¼. The advices by the Arabia had a tendency to depress the market, which closed dull.

NEW CODE SECURITIES.—The British war steamer Horcon, of the late telegraph fleet, had arrived at Liverpool from Fayal. She has been taking soundings for another trans-Atlantic telegraph, from New Foundland to the English Channel, via Fayal. No report of these soundings have yet been made.

THE PORTUGUESE QUESTION SETTLED.—PORTUGAL YIELDS.—The Portuguese Government have yielded up to the French Government the slaver which has been so long the bone of contention between the two Governments; but in yielding to the demands of France, the Portuguese Government declare that they do so not from a conviction of the justice of the claims of the French Government, but yield only to threatened force.

TELEGRAPHIC CABLE BROKEN.—The Dover and Calais submarine telegraph cable is broken, and communication by that route will be suspended until a new cable can be laid.

PRUSSIA.—The Prussian Chamber of Deputies have unanimously affirmed the necessity of the Regency, and legalized the power of Prince William, the brother of the King.

A general convention will meet at Baltimore in June next, to devise a system to present to the Legislature of Maryland for the better regulation of the negro population of the State. A committee was appointed to address the people upon the grievances of the Eastern Shore slaveholders.

COMMERCIAL.

TUESDAY EVENING, November 9, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	—@—	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	8½@ 9¼	Middling Fair	—@—
Good Ordinary	10⅜@10¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	11 @11⅜	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	11¾@11⅞	Good and Fine	—@—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, gives the market receipts, sales, etc., viz: For the first three days the Cotton was dull, about 20,600 bales were disposed of, closing with a decline of ⅛@¼c. ₱ lb. in low and middling grades. On the 1st inst. about 5500 bales at previous rates; the day ensuing, operations were checked by the reported dull market of Liverpool, with a decline of ¼d. which unsettled our market, and confined sales to about 4500 bales, with a decline of ¼c. Offers were made on the 5th, mostly below the views of holders, 9,500 bales were disposed of at irregular prices, and still more in favor of buyers. The decline for the week has been ⅜@½c. ₱ lb. This paper further says—The past week has been a period of but moderate activity in the market, generally. Cotton has given way somewhat, under the pressure of free receipts and adverse foreign advices. In Sugar and Molasses there have been some recovery within the past few days, from the depression of the first part of the week. Tobacco maintains a firm position, though with limited transactions. In Western Produce there is but a limited business going forward, the transactions in most articles being confined to small parcels. Sales of the week, 40,000 bales; receipts, 65,780—since 1st September, 373,950; and the exports of the week were 45,581 bales. The supply of money is not only unusually abundant, but is also on the increase, and owing to the diminished amount of paper offering, capitalists have some difficulty to finding employment for it.

A considerable business, says the Picayune, was transacted in the general market to-day. What with large arrivals of cotton, produce, etc., there is an immense activity on the Levee.....The Money market is far less active than other departments. Paper continues scarce, and when offered is quickly taken at 6@8 per cent. The Banks all have large reserves, and a perfect plethora of bullion.....Stocks are generally in good request at full rates. For some securities the tendency is upward.....The market for beef cattle was active, and but few good Western remain on sale. We quote good Western Beeves at 8@—c ₱ lb. net, and Texas, etc. $14@$32 ₱ head.....Hogs, held mostly at 9c and small parcels 9½c ₱ lb. Near 600 head on the market.....About 550 head of sheep remain on market—held at $2 50@$3.....Milch Cows, at $10@$36 ₱ head.....Veal Cattle, 200 head received—prices $7@$11 ₱ head.

The sales of Cotton on Saturday amounted to 10,500 bales. On Monday the demand was quite active, and fully 14,500 changed hands.

SUGAR—We notice an active demand, with sales of about 1800 hhds. We quote fair to fully fair, 5¾@6c ₱ lb.

MOLASSES—Demand active, and some 2000 bbls. sold at 26@26½c for prime and choice; common at 25@25½c.; fermenting, 24c; and hf-bbls at 28c ₱ gallon.

TOBACCO—250 hhds were sold on private terms, and a lot of 3 hhds. at 6c. ₱ lb.

FLOUR—There has been some demanding, with sales of about 3500 bbls. including 460 unbranded at $5@$5 50; 100 St. Louis superfine and 150 fancy at $5; 540 Indiana extra at $5.25; 150 country do. at $5 62½; 200 Plant's, also in lots, at $7 50 ₱ bbl.

CORN—No change. Sales of white at 70c, and 500 sacks at 68@70c ₱ bushel.

PORK—Sales at $12 ₱ bbl.

BACON—We quote at 9@9¼c ₱ lb.

LARD—Some inquiry, but at rates below the views of holders.

COFFEE—Ranges from 10½@11¾c ₱ lb.

INDUCEMENTS.

I. COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE, being the largest School in the State, and one of the largest in the country, can afford to, and does pay such salaries as to secure the services of the very best of Professors and Teachers. No gentleman in the Faculty receives less than $1200 per annum, and the ladies are remunerated in the same proportion. It is confidently believed that no Female College in the United States has more liberal provisions for securing the highest order of talent in the board of instruction.

II. The location is remarkably healthy, there never having been a single death among the pupils boarding at the Institute since its establishment, twelve years ago.

III. The location is peculiarly fortunate, in the fact of the refinement and intelligence of the community, and the strength of its moral and religious sentiment.

IV. The additional building now in progress will render the Schooledifice equal in any other in point of commodiousness and adaptation to the wants of such an institution.

V. The large number of pupils enables us to accomplish a most complete classification, and dispose the labor of the teachers in the highest possible advantage. [nov10

HARPER'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.—EACH number of the Magazine will contain 144 octavo pages, in double columns, each year thus comprising nearly two thousand pages of the choicest Miscellaneous Literature of the day. Every Number will contain numerous Pictorial Illustrations, accurate Plates of the Fashions, a copious Chronicle of Current Events, and impartial Notices of the important Books of the Month. The Volumes commence with the Numbers for JUNE and DECEMBER; but Subscriptions may commence with any number.

TERMS:—The Magazine may be obtained of Booksellers, Periodical Agents, or from the Publishers, at THREE DOLLARS a year, or TWENTY-FIVE CENTS a Number. The Semi-Annual Volumes, as completed, neatly bound in cloth, are sold at TWO DOLLARS each, and Muslin Covers are furnished to those who wish to have the back numbers uniformly bound, at TWENTY-FIVE CENTS each. The Eighteenth Volume commences with the Number for December, 1858.

The Publishers will supply Specimen Numbers gratuitously to Agents and Postmasters, and will make liberal arrangements with them for circulating the Magazine. They will also supply Clubs, of Two Persons at FIVE DOLLARS a year, or Five Persons at TEN DOLLARS.

CLERGYMEN and TEACHERS supplied at Two Dollars a year.

From the Methodist Protestant (Baltimore).

No Magazine in Europe or America is so well known; none has half as many readers; and, we may safely say, none has received so large an influx of circulation from the cultivated classes, that delight in a healthy, diversified, elevating periodical literature. It not only covers a broader ground than any similar publication, but it is more distinctly planned as a popular educator in all the departments of an agreeable and instructive miscellany than any work of which we have knowledge. In the fresher forms of history, in articles of illustrated travel, in biographical portraiture, in every variety of essay, from the graceful sketch of miscellaneous columns to the elaborate position of great moral topics, in pleasant stories and animated narratives, it is the foremost Magazine of the day. The fireside never had a more delightful companion, nor the million a more entertaining friend than Harper's Magazine.

From the Rev. President of Tuskegee College.

Each month it gladdens us and our household, to say nothing of the neighbors who enjoy it with us. Twenty-five cents buys it—the cheapest, richest and most lasting luxury for the money that we know. Three dollars secures it for one year, and what three dollars ever went so far? Put the sunin amount in clothes, eating, drinking, furniture, and how much of a substantial thing is obtained? If ideas, facts and sentiments have a monetary value, above all, if the humor that refreshes, the pleasantries that bring a gentle smile, and brighten the pas age of o truth to your brain, and the happy combination of the real and the imaginative, without which no one can live as a life above the animal, are to be put into the scale opposite to dollars and cents, then yob may be certain that if Harper were three or four times as dear, it would amply repay its price. It is a Magazine proper, with the idea and purpose of a Magazine—not a book, not a scientific periodical, nor yet a supplier of light gossip and chatty anecdotes—but a Magazine that takes every form of interesting, dignified and attractive literature in its grasp.

From the Southern Christian Advocate.

Each number rivals its predecessors in attractiveness. To the general reader it is the delicæ literarum. The Editor's Drawer, etc., make it more attractive and useful. It is conducted with markod vigor and decided taste, and is worthy of the vast circulation which it enjoys.

From the Wesleyan Banner.

This Magazine has surely the pre-eminence of all the others: it is clear, rich, useful and attractive.

From the Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

We doubt not, from the numbers before us, the character of the publishers, and the opinions of that portion of the press in which we have confidence, that this Magazine is destined to take a high rank among similar publications, whether in the Old or New World.

From the Philadelphia Christian Advocate.

Replete with interesting and useful reading matter well illustrated.

From the New York Christian Advocate and Journal.

This popular Magazine, while it does all that is lawful to court popularity, never descends to cater for it by administering to opinions or propensities injurious to good morals or social order. Though not exclusively a religious work, it is always auxiliary to Bible truth and sound morality. * * * It is one of the excellences of this Magazine that it does not seek the marvelous, but the true; so that young readers are not misled either in history or philosophy. That which they learn may always be taken for all that is known on every subject treated of.

From the Methodist Quarterly Review.

Its Monthly Record of Current Events is prepared with great skill and judgment; and the Literary Notices are both impartial and discriminating, while the Editor's Drawer, etc., is very attractive. In a word, as we have said, Harper's New Monthly has achieved its great success by deserving it.

From the Southern Methodist Quarterly Review.

It is elegantly executed, replete with the most curious information, and beautifully illustrated.

From the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Our estimate is unabated of its substantial literary merits. It is one of the wonders of this printing age that so much first-rate reading matter, so handsomely gotten up, can be furnished for twenty five cents.

From the Western Christian Advocate.

The literary character of this Magazine is higher than any original publication can hope to maintain. The pieces are almost infinitely diversified.

From Zion's Herald and Wesleyan Journal.

There is a large amount of not merely entertaining, but of really useful reading in this work, and its vast circulation cannot fail to render it an agent of great, if even national utility.

From the Southern Methodist Pulpit.

The reasons for its unprecedented success are simply merit and cheapness. Each number is a book. The Monthly Record of Current Events alone is worth 25 cents. We are free to say that if just such a monthly record were published at $3 00, we would readily subscribe. In every intelligent family it ought to be carefully read. We study it.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Of permanent value, and worthy of preservation. The Editor's Table is better than money; it is full of suggestive thought.

From the Texas Christian Advocate.

At the head of our Magazines. The Publishers' choice of articles and authors is proof of the high price they pay for the best productions.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

This "Prince of Monthlies" reads well, and is as interesting and instructive as ever.

From the Northern Christian Advocate.

This valuable Monthly maintains its usual interest. It abounds with profitable and entertaining matter.

From the Baltimore Christian Advocate.

Contains as ever a great variety and amount of excellent matter. We are glad to see such articles as "The Trial and Execution of John Huss," and "Providence in American History."

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

GOOD NIGHT.

"Good night!" said the plough to the weary old horses,
And Dobbin responded, "good night!"
Then, with Tom on his back, to the farm-house he turned,
With a feeling of quiet delight

"Good night!" said the ox, with a comical bow,
As he turned from the heavy old cart;
Which laughed till it shook a round wheel from its side,
Then creaked out, "good night from my heart!"

"Good night!" said the hen, when her supper was done,
To Fanny who stood in the door;
"Good night!" answered Fanny, "come back in the morn,
And you and your chicks shall have more."

"Quack, quack," said the duck, "I wish you all well, Though I cannot tell what is polite."
"The will for the deed," answered Bonny the brave,
"Good night, madam Dockey, good night.

The geese were parading the beautiful green,
But the goslings were wearied out quite;
So, shutting their peepers, from under the wing
They murmured asleepy "good night."

Now the shades of evening were gathering apace,
And hiding the last gleam of light;
So to father and mother, both Fanny and Ben,
Gave a kiss and a hearty "good night!"

LITTLE RAIN-DROPS.

Oh! where do you come from,
You little drops of rain,
Pitter patter, pitter patter,
Down the window pane?

They won't let me walk,
And they won't let me play,
And they won't let me go
Out of doors at all to-day.

They put away my playthings
Because I broke them all,
And then they locked up all my bricks
And took away my ball.

Tell me, little rain-drops,
Is that the way you play,
Pitter patter, pitter patter,
All the rainy day?

They say I'm very naughty,
But I've nothing else to do
But sit here at the window—
I should like to play with you.

The little rain-drops cannot speak,
But "pitter patter pat"
Means "We can play on this side,
Why can't you play on that?"

A TRUE STORY.—BY ONE WHO LOVES THE CHILDREN.

Bettie and Alice were two sweet little girls; gentle, loving, and obedient. Bettie had rosy cheeks, fair complexion and dark curling hair. Alice was a brunette. What a joyous creature Bettie was! She had never known sorrow, and being innocent she dreaded no evil for the future.

It may be, that Alice remembered the cold, pale features of her father, or perhaps the wail of mother when she consigned him to the grave, had made a lasting impression on the child's mind, for her countenance wore when at rest, a tinge of sadness. But this fled away at the approach of her friend Bettie, like mist before the beams of the morning sun, and she would join in the childish merriment of her schoolmate, with all the glee usual to one of her years.

They loved their school, for there they met each other. There they studied and recited together, there they played, gathered wild flowers, and Autumn leaves; there they were together, and that was happiness.

How beautiful was their innocent love! Having neither brother nor sister, their young affections twined around each other with a strength not to be severed by death itself. Sickness came, and death then; little Alice went to heaven, for she loved Jesus and he invited her "to come unto" him.

Bettie returned from the funeral feeling lonely and sad; and strange as it may seem, she felt that she too would like to go and be with Alice, even if she had to be laid in the cold ground by her side. The next day she was taken ill, and although the doctor gave her nauseating medicine, and her parents, and kind friends nursed her carefully, yet soon all saw that little little Bettie, too, must die!

Calmly she awaited death. Her father offered her more medicine. "Why must I take it father?" asked the child. "That you may get well, darling." "And why do you wish me to get well?" "Because if you die mother and I will have no little daughter to love." "But father if I die now, when I'm only seven years old, I'll go straight to heaven, but if I get well and live to be grown I might be wicked and never get to heaven!" Her father was hushed and was turning away to conceal his feelings, when she added, "Give it to me father, I'll take it if you wish," and the useless potion was swallowed. In a few days little Bettie bade all farewell. Distributing her little trinkets to those she had loved best and requesting to be buried beside Alice, she resigned, without a struggle, her spirit to Him who gave it. Soon, no doubt, was she clasped in the arms of her friend, and now they can walk the golden streets of the new Jerusalem, or wander on the banks of the river of Life and talk of Jesus, love. Children, "do you want to go there too?" Then pray to Jesus to make you gentle, loving, and obedient like little Bettie and Alice.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

"Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee."

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

TO S. M. T.,

ON THE DEATH OF HIS INFANT DAUGHTER, TWO YEARS OLD.

And art thou listening still
That little step to hear,
Which thro' thy bosom sent a thrill,
Like music to thine ear!
Hark! a sound of rustling wings,
Is heard above thy head—
Among bright forms in triumph sings,
Thy darling, which has fled.

Fix not on this vain world thine eye,
Her infant voice would say,
But to the spirit's home, on high,
Where I have passed away;
Most sweetly tuned my golden lyre,
Without a jarring string,
In harmony with Heaven's own choir,
Which makes its arches ring.

That lovely brow, where Hope's bright beams
In fancy's visions played,
To fill up life's perspective scenes,
Is veiled in death's dark shade;
But, now released, her mental powers
Unfold in clearer light,
Where beauty blooms in fadeless bowers;
No more for death to blight.

That tiny hand, once clasped in thine,
Is led by Angels now,
Around the Savior's hallowed shrine,
To wreath His glorious brow.
On earth, He blessed her—now, in Heaven,
He folds her to His breast:
A pledge of love, divinely given,
To link thee with the blest.

Paris, France, June, 1858. S. B. THOMAS.

Fiction and Wives.

By what fatality is it, that the married lives of our ablest writers of fiction are so generally unfortunate and unhappy? Dickens, Bulwer, Herbert, are sad illustrations. It might not have seemed surprising, perhaps, in regard to our old style of novelists. The author of Peregrine Pickle, Roderic Random, or of Tom Jones, might have been supposed not so well calculated for domestic felicity as they really proved. But no one can be surprised that the author of Don Juan was unhappy in his home relations; or, that even his daughter by no means adores her father's greatness. So, too, all feel that the tragedy which closed Shelley's first marriage was the result of his misconduct. But there was Coleridge, the most philosophical, the most pure and sentimentally profound of dreamers: why could not he and his wife live happily together? Why must she go about abusing him as a mere idler, and he declare that she was fit only to scrub pots and kettles?

The Reason.

One reason is, of course, that poets, and all the imaginative classes of men, are very apt to be the complete dupes of their own imaginations. They dress up the first pretty face they meet with all imaginary virtues and excellencies, and fall in love with an ideal and not the real character. The least touch of truth wears off the delusion. It was thus with Walter Scott, full of common sense, objectivity and practical wisdom as he was in most matters requiring it. His wife, though most respectable and decorous, according to Lockhart, had no sympathy with him or with his writings, not even taking the trouble to cut open the title page of the works that were filling Europe with her husband's fame, but living in utter apathy and selfishness. Charles Lamb never married, and Miss Bremer, who makes domestic life so amiable to all others, is also single. One would have thought they, at least, were each calculated to enjoy home life. Yet Lamb's sad habits would, perhaps, have broken a wife's heart; and Miss Bremer has done well, to let well alone in regard to her condition.

Dickens.

But Dickens whose genial philosophy and imperturbable good humor, have, for twenty-five years, sent every man on the two Continents to bed at night with a better opinion of his fellow creatures and better disposition to do good himself—Dickens, the author of Little Dot and of Little Dorrit—that he and his wife should separate! Alas, for the day! As for the idle gossip about a young actress, we may well hope, and believe most firmly, that this is all gossip and slander. And we may as well make up our minds to believe the least objectionable rumor afloat, that his wife's orthodoxy and his heterodoxy are the only known causes of the separation. But still the question rises, like Banquo's ghost, if some deeper than this accidental cause does not lie at the bottom of all these cases, Other Unitarians have Presbyterian wives, and get along amiable enough, without dividing their households.

Bulwer.

The case of Bulwer and his lady at this time, suggests still more pointedly, the same idea of a deeper cause than any supposed even by the parties themselves. Here is the man whose portraiture of human character is certainly the most felicitous of that of any writer of fiction—living or dead—whose conceptions, at least, are more lofty and instructive than those of any author. And yet he, who can portray a Guy Darrell, turns pale, and more, actually beats a retreat before his own wife, and she takes his place upon the hustings, to address his own electors against him! Nothing can be clearer, than that there lie deeper causes underneath all these occasions, of which they are only the accidental developements.

The Germs Irritable.

If a man is in a consumption, he may very likely tell you that he was getting over one cold, but took a fresh one the night before through sitting out in the damp. But you know very well the cause of his cough is nothing but the occasion. If he had not sat out of doors something else would have brought it on in a day or two. The disease was in the man, and had to come out of him.

So it is with the poets and fiction writers. They all belong to the genus irritable. It is not only that they select superficially, in choosing their wives, but that ever afterwards they see a wife's faults and defects more actually than others, and magnify mole-hills into mountains. They are to themselves as changeable as the chameleon, and ought to have as many wives as humors; for it is impossible for one and the same woman to love them through all the different phases of character they assume. They become different men to all intents and purposes, and the very woman who most adores them in one character, is sure to quarrel with them in another.

Hearts Divided.

Then, too, these men put all their strength into their writings, and exhaust themselves so completely as to exhibit an inconceivable degree of weakness and irresolution in home matters, and the little things that make domestic life most agreeable. Few women have wisdom enough to overlook and forgive all this. They, feeling fresh and healthy, are really stronger in mind and will than their husbands, thus utterly exhausted. And such parties, grow more and more apart if they do not grow together. These are the real causes of these domestic troubles, that have led to two separations becoming so notorious, and one suicide, in the last six months. Patience, forbearance, and the virtues of living Christianity, alone are the remedies. [Philadelphia Ledger.

"The Land of the Living."

That was a beautiful idea expressed by a Christian lady on her death-bed. In reply to a remark of her brother, who was taking leave of her to return to his distant residence, that he should probably never again meet her in the land of the living. She answered: "Brother, I trust we shall meet in the land of the living. We are now in the land of the dying."

SKETCHES, ETC.

Piccolomini.

New York is alive with the admiration of the new singer, Piccolomini, who has recently made her debut. A correspondent of the Delta thus describes her: The case has proved one of the very few in which the anticipations have not exceeded the reality. The gentlemen are all completely captivated, and declare her "charming," "bewitching," and "a little enchantress." The ladies, also, (for a wonder,) are not, or do not appear to be, the least jealous, but amid their falling tears at the pathos of her Violetta, call her a "dear little pet," and the "sweetest darling." And in this lies the secret of her attraction, the extreme ardor and sympathetic reality of her organization, and the whole soul which she throws into her voice and action. Her face is also very sweet and expressive, her motions extremely graceful and high-bred, her hands and arms exquisite.

There is, therefore, nothing to restrain the entire pleasure with which one can not help giving oneself up to the magic of her influence; her petite person, so perfectly formed and elegant in its miniature proportions, adding another charm, and making her appear like a little bijou, a pocket edition of a woman.

Her voice is not of extraordinary power, but it is of wonderful sweetness and mobility, especially in the lower notes, and has a mournful wail, like the sobbing of the South wind, or the fitful music of an Eolian harp, when expressing the touching sadness of the heart-breaking Traviata. She has the rare gift of what the French call tears in the voice, and her wild sorrow is even more touching than her pretty coquetries are attractive.

In person she is small, but beautifully formed, with a clear brunette complexion, dark sparkling eyes, and rosy mouth. She is a perfect costumer, every detail of her toilette being arranged with exquisite taste.

Bulwer and Disraeli.

Professor G. H. Fillmore has contributed a very intesting letter from London to the New York Christian Inquirer. We select therefrom the following allusion to well known public men:

Among the Cabinet Ministers, Bulwer and Disraeli, who sat side by side, (and took snuff from the same box,) interested us much. Both won fame first by their romances; Disraeli is about the same size and figure of Frank Pierce, though not so graceful in his carriage. He speaks in a conciliatory manner.

Bulwer is small and spare, with profuse light hair, whiskers and moustache, with a high forehead, aquiline nose and eagle eye. He is now, as most of your readers may be aware, Secretary for the Colonies, and like all the cabinet ministers, has a salary of £5000 per annum. Though now fifty-five years of age, he seems to be in the prime of life, and with scarcely any of the marks of age, excepting a slight deafness, which leads him to put his hand to his ear to enable him to hear better. His wide reputation as a linguist, novelist, poet and historian, is alone sufficient to make him a man of mark, to say nothing of his statesmanship. We thought, while looking at him, how much wiser had been his interpretation of life than was that of Byron, with whom he is often compared.

The Sultan.

Abdul Medjid, whose recent reforms we have noticed, is thirty-five years old, having been born April 23, 1823. He came to the throne on the demise of his father, Mahmood II., July 2, 1839. The Turks, with a fondness for epithets which characterizes the Orientals, whether from the condition of the Empire at the time it passed into his feeble hands, or with reference to his horoscope, styled him Abdul the Unfortunate; a pregnostic which has been too truly realized in the history of his reign thus far.

YELLOW FEVER—A Preventive.—The Rev. C. W. Thomas, who is now furnishing the readers of The Southern Christian Advocate with his interesting reminiscences of a cruise on the coast of Africa, writes: "The experience of English explorers on the coast and rivers of Africa shows that small portions of quinine in wine, taken twice a day, is a preventive of African yellow fever, which is but an aggravated type of ours. The experiment was entirely successful in the late expedition up the Neiger—not a man was lost!. The stomach is the seat of these fevers, and the tonic and anti-febrile properties of quinine are universally admitted."

NOTICE TO MARINERS.—A dangerous rock has recently been discovered off the entrance to the harbor of Portsmouth, N. H., with only six and a half feet of water on it at mean low tide. Its position is indicated by the following data: The monument on York Ledge bears north 29° 15 east, distance one and three-quarter nautical miles. The light on Whale's Back bears south 78° west, distance four nautical miles. Boon Island is six and a half nautical miles distant, and with Whale's Back on the range will nearly include the rock, it being 9° 30 to the southward.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. ANN JANE, wife of Thomas W. Scott, aed only daughter of Rev. H. H. Schrock, died at Sharon, Mississippi, October 23d, of typhoid fever, aged about thirty-one years. To know her intimately was to love her, and they who know her best, loved her most; in all the relations of daughter, sister, friend and wife engraven on their hearts are the records of her virtues, and enshrined in their bosoms, the memory of her moral, social, intellectual, and religious worth. They are treasures too sacred to be paraded even in a religious Journal, and too highly valued to be shared with strangers. She adorned in an eminent degree the difficult and responsible station of a "step mother," and her step daughters and sons, both single and married, loved her as their own mother. If love could have disarmed death, then she had not died, but lived to bless and foster, as only a mother can her own precious little sons, and cheer the declining years of her, now, desolate and deeply afflicted. HUSBAND.

Sharon Mississippi, October, 20th, 1858.

MRS. RACHEL M. MENEFEE, died on the 7th of October, at the residence of her uncle, H. Hooks, Pike county, Alabama, in the sixteenth year of her age. She was the daughter of Charles M. and Arien Hooks, and consort of S. J. S. Menefee. In early life, the subject of this notice was deprived of a father's love and care, and while she was still young her mother too was called away from earth, and she was left to the cars of others, who were faithful to the trust committed to them. Mrs. Menefee entered upon life with bright prospects, the future presented to her view all that heart could desire; she did not dream that death would so soon come and destroy all her hopes and expectations on earth. Thus she expressed herself, but she had scarcely begun to drink of the pleasures of life, ere they were past, and she was forced to try the solemn realities of eternity. Death did not, however, find her unprepared. She had long accustomed herself to secret prayer; and in August last, at a revival, she fully gave herself to God, and was made to rejoice in the hope of heaven. She returned home and was immediately taken sick. Only seven weeks elapsed, and consumption to which her father also fell a victim, finished its work, and the loved one was consigned to the grave. A short time before she died, in reply to questions respecting her future welfare, she said that she was not afraid of death, that she would soon be at rest. JOHN M. LOCKHART.

Pine Grove, Alabama, October 20th, 1858.

MRS. MALISSA WOOTEN, wife of brother Simeon Wooten, died 31st of August, 1858. Sister Wooten was born April 18, 1824, in Monroe county, Georgia; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life, and professed to find peace in believing. She has ever since lived a consistant member, until death summoned her away. On the 16th of October, 1845, she and Simeon Wooten were married, and lived together for nearly fourteen years; during which time she discharged the duties of a wife, a mother, a Christian and a neighbor. Her illness lasted twenty-nine days, her sufferings were intense but she bore them with Christian fortitude and resignation. During her illness her youngest child Thomas Adderson, aged one year and eight months died, this seemed not to terrify her in the least, but her acts all seemed to say the will of the Lord be done. While she was suffering so intensely, she requested those who were her attendants to sing the Old Ship of Zion, and would sing the songs of Zion herself though her voice was faint and weak; when life was sinking apace and death was drawing near, her husband approached her and asked her of her prospects; she informed him that Jesus was with her; after calling her sorrowing children to her bedside and delivering to them her dying charge, she then told her husband to meet her in heaven, and requested him to inform all of her relatives who were far away that she was gone to rest, and that she wished them to meet her in heaven. Thus passed away one of earth's brightest treasures, and has no doubt reached the climes of everlasting felicity, where sickness, sorrow, pain and deathlore felt and feared no more. And in the morning of the first resurrection, will shout redeeming grace throughout endless eternity. She has left a husband, five children and a large circle of friends to mourn her irreparable loss; they however sorrow not as those who have no hope. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. E. B. NORTON.

M. V. B. DYE, son of John M. and Mary Dye, was born on 15th, day of August 1832, in Amite county, Mississippi, and died at the same place on the 9th day of October, 1858. The history of this young man is of some interest; he left home at the age of sixteen years and labored here and there for some length of time, until able to go to school a while, learned rapidly and then went into business; and thus onward, until his genius led to the construction of a wooden machine by which he learned the secret of Telegraph operating, upon which business he entered and followed until disabled by the affliction that proved fatal to him, inflamitory abcess in the left hip. He was a young man of fine manners, esteemed highly, and really on the way to renown, but God calls and man must obey. The last month his afflictions were most intense; he often was heard to say; "O that I could die and be at rest." He was exhorted and counselled by the pious of the neighborhood who visited him in his distresses, and he gave the greatest evidence of penitence, and importunately sued for mercy, and I trust has gained it eternally, for this evening previous to his death, I asked his present feelings; he answered, that he did not feel right; I asked if he could not trust Jesus for all things, he remarked that he could trust all to him. Said I, just believe, "and thou shalt be saved," saith the Bible; he smiled into tears, and pressed my hand gently and would say no more to me. I left him for home, and next morning was sent for, that he was dying; but before I reached him, he was dead. His struggle was light, he called his mother to turn him in bed, she did so, and immediately his breath began to shorten, he gave his faithful mother his dying embrace.

N. T. MCDOWELL.

MRS. FRANCES E. MULLINS, consort of Rev. E. Mullins, was born in Jefferson county, Mississippi, in 1831, was married in 1848, and died September 27th, 1858. She joined the Methodist Church in 1849, and professed religion in 1854. Since that time, she has lived an exemplary member of the Church, beloved by all who knew her. She sustained an unsullied reputation, in all the avocations of life—being a kind mother, an affectionate wife, and a lasting friend. She leaves a sorrowing husband, three interesting little boys, and many near and dear relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She was confined to her bed several months previous to her death, and suffered great pain, but with little complaint. She seemed buoyed above the fear of death, by a fixed hope and an abiding faith in the atoning sacrifice of her Divine Master. Shortly previous to her death a most affecting scene occurred. She and her friends believing she was about to die, she called for her eldest son; and made him a present of a Bible and Hymn-book as a token of her love, to be remembered by him; and gave her dying charge to him to meet her heaven—she did the same with her second son. She then called for her babe, and, while she embraced him, with a heart full of love and confidence, she exclaimed, "I will give you to the Lord!" She next called her husband, and exhorted him to be faithful in the discharge of all his duties. She bade her friends an affectionate farewell, hoping to meet them in a better world. The final summons had not gone forth, she was reserved for further trial. On remarking that her feet were cold, she remarked calmly, that they would soon be cold, cold in death; that "she would never more be free from pain till Jesus came." She seemed ready and willing to die. She was asked if all was well with her: but she was unable to speak. Then she was requested, if all was well with her to raise her hand; she held one hand up, and attempted to raise the other but could not. A lovely smile played over her countenance. She seemed to realize that "Jesus can smooth a dying bed," and, as if pillowed on his breast, she without a struggle passed from time, into that great eternity. The bereaved, if faithful to the discharge of every duty, are cheered with the bright prospect of forming a family again, where partings are unknown.

J. B. H.

MRS. MARY HEARN, wife of Rev. Ebenezer Hearn, died at her residence near Camden, Wilcox county, Alabama on the 14th instant, in the fifty-eighth year of her age. She was the daughter of Rev. Joseph Walker, born in the State of Georgia, December 14th, 1800. At an early period of her life she professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1817 Brother Walker removed to Shelby county, Alabama; where they were for a while deprived of those means of grace with which they were associated in the country they had left behind; but this privation in their Christian enjoyments was not suffered to continue long; for in the spring of 1818, Brother Hearn the Missionary, appointed to that region of country for that year, soon searched them out and supplied them with the word of life. Brother Walker's family was the first to step forward, and form the front rank in planting Methodism to that new section of country; and the subject of this notice, not the least in avowing her attachment to the Church, and love for the cause of God. Here brother Hearn first became acquainted with her, who was afterwards the sharer of the joys and sorrows incident to a long, laborious, and self sacrificing itinerant life. In the fall of 1822, they were united in marriage, and for the next two years, the work among strangers, and the most of the time absent from her husband; this no doubt was to her a trial, but her faith was not, and it was to her a trial only of that faith which worketh patience. We hear from her no complaint, no murmuring, no reproaches cast upon her husband for leaving her, but instead of this "go and fill your appointments, and don't neglect your work for my account!" And although she was cast among strangers, her mild, quiet, Christian spirit and deportment, secured to her the love and confidence of those with whom she was associated; and no doubt many of those who now survive her, yet cherish for her Christian virtues the fondest recollections, particularly the family of Winans, at whose house she boarded, as also others with whom she became acquainted during her stay in that part of the work. In the early part of 1825, they settled in Dallas county, Alabama, where they lived until 1837, when they removed to Wilcox county, and settled the place at which she died. During this time, and while she lived, she was local, staying at home "taking care of the stuff," while her husband continued in the itinerant work, travelling throughout the bounds of the Alabama Conference; and in the day of final reckoning when God will say, "Call the laborers and give them their hire," doubtless sister Hearn will be there, and receive from the mouth of God—"Well done good and faithful servant, for as much as thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Sister Hearn's character, as a Christian, a wife a mother, a mistress, a neighbor, a friend of the poor, and a member of society, needs no eulogy, it is read and known of all who knew her. Her babe is endeared to all with whom she has been associated, in the various relations which she occupied in life. In prosperity humble—and when the chill hand of adversity pressed heavily upon her, she murmured not. In short she possessed in an eminent degree that charity "that believeth all things, hopeth all things, and endureth all things." She attended a Quarterly Meeting at Oak Hill, on the fourth Sabbath of September, where for the last time on earth she commemorated the death and sufferings of her blessed Lord, a season which she always enjoyed; from this meeting she went home on Monday, much indisposed, took her bed, and for eighteen days suffered intensely. During the whole time, she was calm and resigned, and her mind continued clear and rational. She employed much of her time in supplication and prayer, and remarked to her husband "all was well." Thus has passed from our midst, a mother in Israel. The Church in Camden has lost one of her best members; the community a bright and shining light, the servants a kind mistress, the husband the companion of his bosom, the children have lost a mother! a mother! Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. A. C. RAMSEY.

TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS!

Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is to obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately from the sick chamber, hospitals, etc. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at, J. WRIGHT, & CO'S. Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. a.22

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND
IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from FRESH ROOT, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is more PALATABLE and CATHOLICON than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Angel, Colndet, Baron, Bardsley, Manson, Ricord, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Limbago, Chronic throuchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Forbyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dymenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

MCGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR.—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, etc.

MCGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

MCGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL.—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

MCGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

MCGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

Agents—J. Wright & Co., and Sickles & Co., New Orleans; J. Hannay, Galveston, Texas; S. W. Ruff, Warrington, Florida.

Other responsible agents wanted.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of biles.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rhumm.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no IFS nor ANDS, limit nor limits about it salting some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, worny-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.

To those who are subject to a sick headache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of natura, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone, you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant absurdities of it that ever man listened to.

Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

POETRY.

CHRISTIAN MUSINGS.

This Hymn was found in a chest in an English cottage. The author's name is unknown.

In the still silence of the voiceless night,
When, chased by airy dreams, the slumbers flee,
Whom in the darkness doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee?

And if there be a weight upon my breast,
Some vague expression of the day foregone,
Scarce knowing what it is, I fly to thee,
And lay it down.

Or if it be the heaviness that comes
In token of anticipated ill,
My bosom takes no heed of what it is,
Since 'tis thy will.

For O, in spite of past and present care,
Or any thing beside, how joyfully
Passes that almost solitary hour,
My God, with thee!

More tranquil than the stillness of the night,
More peaceful than the silence of that hour,
More blest than any thing, my spirit lies
Beneath thy power.

For what is there on earth that I desire
Of all that it can give or take from me,
Or whom in heaven doth my spirit seek,
O God, but thee?

THE DESERTED WIFE.—James G. Percival.

He comes not—I have watched the moon go down,
But yet he comes not. Once it was not so.
He thinks not how these bitter tears do flow,
The while he holds his riot in that town.
Yet he will come and chide and I shall weep;
And he will wake my infant from its sleep,
To plead its feeble wailing with my tears.

O! how I love a mother's watch to keep,
Over those sleeping eyes, that smile, which cheers
My heart, though sunk in sorrow, fixed and deep.
I had a husband once, who loved me—now
He ever wears a frown upon his brow,
And feeds his passion on a wanton's lip,
As bees from laurel flowers a poison sip.

But yet I cannot hate. O! there were hours
When I could hang for ever on his eye,
And time, who stole with silent swiftness by,
Strewed, as he hurried on, his path with flowers.
I loved him then—he loved me too. My heart
Still finds its fondness kindle if he smile;
The memory of our loves will ne'er depart;
And though he often sting me with a dart,
Venomed and barbed, and waste upon the vile
Caresses which his babe and mine should share—
Though he should spurn me—I will calmly bear
His madness; and should sickness come and lay
Its paralyzing hand upon him, then
I would with kindness all my wrongs repay,
Until the patient should weep, and say,
How injured and how faithful I had been.

LETTER FROM PARIS.

Fontainbleau—Historic Associations—Separation of Napoleon and Josephine—Napoleon's Abdication—Horse of Marcus Aurelius—Gallery of Francis I.—Apartments of Napoleon; his Magnificence; his Late Addition—Reflections—Chapelle de Saturnin, Consecrated by Thos a Becket—Description—The Forest—Condition of the Women.

The Chateau of Fontainbleau—another kingly palace, of vast extent—covering twenty-three acres of ground, without including its gardens and parks. It is wreathed with curiosities; and it calls up the past, from the reign of Louis VII. to the days of the Emperor Napoleon I.; and many tragical events transpired within its walls, as well as feats and rejoicings.

In 1602 Marshal Biron was arrested here, and sent to the Bastile to be executed.

In 1657, Christine, Queen of Sweeden, had the Marquis of Monaldeschi assassinated in one of its apartments.

Here Louis XIV. signed the revocation of the edict of Nantes; and, in the following year the great Conde died; and, eighty years afterwards, the son of Louis XV. died—supposed, to have been poisoned.

In 1808, Charles IV. of Spain, who had been kidnapped by Napoleon, was confined here twenty-four days.

In 1812, Pope Pius VII. shared the same fate, for two years.

In 1809, the declaration of divorce was pronounced between the Emperor and Josephine, which nearly deprived her of life, from intense agony of feeling—under which she fainted, and was carried from his presence to be severed for ever. From the effects of this blow she never recovered; the tendrils of her affectionate heart—thus torn asunder from the object of her devoted attachment, around which they were entwined with threads of her own existence—never were healed; but bled on while life lasted, which ebbed out, and she died of a broken heart at last.

In 1814, on the 6th of April, in the presence of a few of his favorites of the Imperial Guard which remained, he signed his abdication, in the Court du Cheval Blanc, which has since received the name of Cour des Adieux, in consequence of the event which then took place.

How closely he was followed by Divine Providence, in a just retribution compelled to resign a kingdom he expected to perpetuate in his own name, by an open violation of God's holy laws in the marriage covenant, and in the same place too, where the first act was perpetrated—a singular co-incidence worthy of observation—that the commandments of God cannot be violated and trampled upon with impunity, however plausible men makes them appear; and, the more public the crime and elevated the position, the more conspicuous the retribution.

This famous Court, called du Cheval Blanc, derives its name from an equestrian statue, in plaster—a copy of the horse of Marcus Aurelius at Rome, and brought here in 1650, remarkable for the beauty of its form and lofty dimensions.

We passed through a suit of splendid rooms, once occupied by the sister of Napoleon, and afterwards by the Duchess of Nemours.

There were seven rooms, magnificently furnished and highly decorated, that were appropriated to Anne of Austrin. The gods of Olympus, represented upon the ceiling, were elaborately gilt. In this appartment Charles V. slept during his visit to Francis I.

The gallery of Francis I. was in a style of simple beauty, ornamented after his own peculiar taste. Ceilings of oak and walnut, elegantly sculptured, and adorned with gilding; fourteen large frescos ornamented the walls, surrounded in bas-relief of stucco.

The apartments, once occupied by Napoleon, where he signed his abdication—we saw the table, and a fac-simile of the document lying upon it, which has been carefully preserved—with all the relics pertaining to him. The bed-room, with its splendid drapery thrown over the bed of green damask, lying in graceful folds; the chairs, and all the furniture of the room, much as it was when he left this magnificent palace, to return to it no more—where Kings had sat in council, and Queens walked in beauty, with their royal robes shining in the splendour of imperial grandeur.

But Napoleon the Great, whose mind towered above them all, trod these stately halls with an eagle eye, that looked beyond them. With an intellect capable of founding Empires, and making Kings bend beneath his sway; outward show did not attract or move him, no further than it was made tributary to his grand movements, in accomplishing his vast schemes; and perhaps, if he had not sacrificed the wife of his bosom to his false ambition, he would not have been confined to the rock of St. Helena—surrounded by the walls of the mighty ocean, which lashed its shores with its ceaseless wave.

The Queen's chamber was adorned with regal splendor, and all the decorations of art calculated to embellish it. Within its walls, those royal personages resided: who have left a store of deeply interesting reminiscences.

Mary de Medicis, who form in her character almost a history by itself, connected with the most powerful persons of the age, the Cardinals who ruled the thrones. Anne of Austria, Maria Theresa, Maria Antoinette of unrivalled beauty; Maria Louise, who filled the place of Josephine; and the ex-Queen of the French, Maria Amelia. The dark shade thrown over the pathway of these Queens, would more than counterbalance all the brightness of imperial splendor; so that their elevated positions would be places of commiseration rather than envy to those beneath them.

The apartments of Madame de Maintenon, were no less distinguished than those of her predecessors. Her rooms were magnificently provided; her bed-room superbly beautiful—its draperies of white satin, embroidered with gold; chairs of the same; everything belonging to it, elegant and chaste, with every appendage to her toilet that taste could devise or a Queen admire. But none of these things lessened the bondage of a Court life, or added to the happiness of her soul, oppressed by the slavery of its power. The wreath which adorned her care-worn brow was robbed of its freshness, and looked sere and dead. the galling yoke she was compelled to wear, by the arbitrary laws of etiquette, so strictly exacted by Louis XIV. made her life miserable, were upon her spirits, and perhaps drove her from his presence in his last moments; for she was there to see him die—like a guardian angel, to point him to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, notwithstanding her austere piety, and a bigoted attendance to the rules of the Church.

One of the most splendid rooms in this chateau is the gallery of Francis I. It is 120 feet long, 30 feet in width, and as many feet high. Its frescoed walls, sculptured chimney piece, and other luxurious ornaments of elegance and beauty, give it a pre-eminence over all the rest—and is regarded as the most magnificent of the palace. But there are so many, and so richly adorned, that it is difficult to keep the distinctions in the mind, unless associated with some historic event.

One place called Chapella de St. Saturnin, is of peculiar interest, as having been consecrated by Thomas a Becket, during his temporary exile in France in 1169.

The subjects of the stained window-glass were suggested by the artistic taste of Princess Maria, daughter of Louis Phillipe.

In one of the twelve rooms, called the Pope apartments, is a painting representing the murder of Monaldeschi, with an inscription under the window, near the spot where the deed was perpetrated.

The gardens around the palace are exceedingly beautiful, especially those in front of the chateau, laid out in English style. In other directions are those in antiquated forms, of a different order, yet beautiful for variety. Streams of water and artificial lakes are made to contribute to its beauty, and art blending with nature, around this noble and ancient edifice, renders it an object of admiration.

Located as it is, in the wilds of nature, in the depths of a forest of 30,000 acres, it is an object of attraction. Through it are beautiful drives, of interminable length, opening upon some bold ravines with precipitous rocks and glens, and romantic views of picturesque beauty; we drove around them, and looked down into the depths below; the perspective beyond the great gorge is of considerable interest. But, to an American eye, the forest is comparatively tame—but resembles in some degree those around the quiet homes of East Feliciana, Louisiana—though quite unequal to the lofty Magnolia Grandiflora, which opens its white flowers to the evening breeze, and perfumes the air with its blossoms.

We were driven to see a mighty oak, which they call the king of the forest; but, really, its size was quite common in our green woods, and, to us, it did not appear gigantic. But everything depends upon comparison, and it was large compared with those around it.

We saw, as we drove up these avenues, poor women with such enormous loads of sticks upon their backs, which they had gathered for fuel, that it was astonishing how they could carry their weight. One long stick was thrust through the centre of the bunch, so that they could fasten it to the ground, stop, and rest their backs from the cumbrous load. It was a pitiful sight to behold them, laden like animals, the very picture of poverty and wretchedness.

EAST ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

Items and Items.

Mr. Editor: you have no doubt often attended the love-feast among the Methodists; did you ever see anything to condemn in the design and spirit of that institution? Did they not, according to ecclesiastical history, exist in the Primitive Church? And did they not afford then, as they do now, occasion of friendly greeting, and affectionate communion among the followers of Christ? When a traveler takes salt with an Arab, he is his friend ever after, it is a pledge of his kind regards and protection. When the white huntsman exchanges his shot bag with the Indian of the forest, amicable bonds are established between them. When Christians meet in the Agapae, or love-feast, they take bread and water, two of the common necessaries of life, as a profession and pledge of love for each other—and at the same time, declare their good-will toward all mankind. The blessed Savior has said—"By this, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." "Love, is the fulfilling of the law;" and Christians should meet and give their expressions of love for each other.

Well my friend, what do you think a Baptist Association did the other day over here in this dark corner of Alabama? Why, I am told, that in awful and solemn conclave, they passed a resolution that the love-feast was anti-scriptural, and that if one of their members should attend them, they must be admonished of their sins against the Scripture; but, if they repeated the offence, excommunication from the church should be visited upon them. Take this in connection with their determination not to publish my book that recognises Pedobaptists as members of the church; nor invite ministers of other denominations into their pulpit, nor allow other Christians to commune with them, and if you do not have the spirit of bigotry, real Ishmaelitism rank and furious, then it never existed in those who built the fires and scaffolds of Smithfield. When I see a friend of mine follow the Savior down into the liquid grave—so their preachers call immersion—Query. was the Savior buried in the earth, in a rock, or in the water? If the last, how could a stone be rolled over the mouth? I feel, that all Christian fellowship is buried with him; and that if he rises from that grave, there is one virtue of Christianity that has been dead or buried, without the hope of resurrection—it is love for those whom our Savior might embrace, when he says—"other sheep I have, which were not of this fold."

Mr. Editor, it is mortifying for another Denomination to assume the prerogative of judge over Christians, as pure, as useful, as meek, as benevolent as they are; and to be condemned as outcasts of the church—set upon their left, as goats; and sent away, with—"Depart from us, we know you not."

These voluntary custodians of the Lord's Table, will find, if I am not mistaken, that when the revelations of the other world are made, that they have served the cause of bigotry rather more than the cause of Christianity; and it may be, that they may hear it said, by one in authority, "Who hath asked this at your hands?" It may be, that they will find that they have offended not a few, but many of "Christ's little ones." Perchance, some of the excluded ones may be Christians; if so, it does seem that the man who advocates non-communion here, will, even if he is saved, suffer some subtraction of enjoyment should he discover it in the better world.

The liquid grave! There is something soft and watery in the sound. Dr. Young speaks of the difficulty of finding a grave—and so stole one. These liquid graves are not always conveniently at hand; nature does not furnish every neighborhood, village, and town—sometimes they have to be made. ... In A," they needed one recently to bury a very lovely young lady in, who had professed religion among the non-fellowshiped Methodist; so they got a carpenter to make a large wooden box, and sank it in a running stream, which, answered the purpose; and the scene came off, much to the satisfaction of the spectators. (and you know they are multitudinous on such occasions.) After the young lady was buried, a negro man applied to the Rev. Mr. ——— to put him under, the kind administrator, dispensing, it is said, with a regular "giving in," bade him come forward. He took hold of the subject, and started to lead him away—when he, fearing to take water, made a struggle, which broke him loose, and left him to swim to the opposite side. He was told that the work was not complete, and that he must come back and try it again; a second plunge, and he disappeared; just after, another was pushed in—and such a hugh, and such a scene; it was almost equal to what occurred at Murty. I am told that the Rev. Mr. T., on a certain Sabbath, carried down a goodly number of colored brethren, to immerse in the Alabama—there was lying at the wharf a steamboat, upon the wheel of which, the young Americans crowded to witness the immersions. When the minister commenced dipping, the wheel commenced turning, and down went Dick, and into the water went Bill, etc. The wheel did its work so much faster than the parson, that, it is said, he gave up the contest in disgust, and went home. Some thought they had enjoyed rare fun. How much lovelier to witness this ordinance in the holy temple of God, around the consecrated altar.

UNION OF THE NEW AND OLD SCHOOLS—DIFFICULTIES IN THE WAY.

Since the division of the New School Presbyterian General Assembly in 1857, on the subject of slavery, and the formation of its Southern wing into the "United Synod," overtures have been made, locally and generally, for a union of the latter, with the Old School Presbyterians. In Bowling Green, Kentucky, they have become one.

The matter, as we see it, is on this wise: The O. S. and N. S. Assemblies both claimed to be "the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States." They were large bodies and influential, and an annual rivalry made them put forward their strongest men in General Assemblies. The strength of the New School lay in the Free States, and that body was regarded as more anti-slavery than the Old School. The latter has on record some strong anti-slavery "deliverances," recently and repeatedly endorsed; but as many of its members were in the South, the administration and practice looked South, while the deliverances and resolutions looked North—thus keeping peace. The New School, following faster the tendencies of the same "deliverances," (adopted before the division into Old School and New School,) and being under less Southern restraint, reached the point lately where its Southern members refused to submit. They withdrew a small, but very respectable minority, and, at the Richmond Convention, organized the "United Synod." They are, emphatically, sound and conservative on the slavery question. Their position and action declare this.

The union of this body with the Old School Assembly meets opposition from two sources:

1. From some of the Old School leaders, who bear in mind the former strife, and have not recovered from its personalities and prejudices.

2d. From some of the New School leaders, (now of the "United Synod") who think the Old School has too many and serious compromises on the principle and practice of slavery for permanent and solid peace. Having suffered loss and harassment from the abolition element, they don't like to join a body where there is so much of it, latent if not patent, and liable to be waked up at any time. Having been burnt, they are afraid of fire. Well they may be. From our position, with kind feelings towards both, we are not a little interested in the movements of the parties.

There is no doubt (and we have searched out this matter) that the different sections of the Old School Presbyterian Church are kept together on a patched-up basis, and one that will not bear to be looked at from a Southern stand-point. The difference of 1818, on record, repeatedly and recently endorsed by the General Assembly, is of itself a magazine that needs only to be touched off for an explosion.

Dr. A. Newton, of Mississippi, one of the most prominent members of the United Synod, is discussing this phase of the subject in the press of Jackson, Mississippi. The Eagle of the South, October 13th, under the head of "Dr. Newton's column," gives his views of the deliverances of the Old School Assembley down to the session of last spring in New Orleans.

We wish them a good understanding and a union on safe principles.

The Synod of Tennessee (New School) met recently at Bristol, East Tennessee, and spent several days together, deliberating on the prospects of the United Synod. They had the subject of establishing a college on hand, and concluded unanimously to make Maryville College in East Tennessee, their college. It will require one thousand dollars to complete the buildings. About seven thousand dollars belong to the chair of Didactic Theology, and nine thousand five hundred dollars to the chair of Sacred Literature, and these funds are fixed at Maryville. Cleveland was chosen as the place for the next meeting of said Synod. During the session, the Synod gave expression to the following sentiments on the subject of slavery, from which it appears that it is not yet prepared to adopt the "ordained theory" of Dr. Ross, but allows every man his own opinion, and forbids discussion only in certain cases. They say:

"In declaring our adherence to the United Synod, we do not commit ourselves, as a body or as individuals, to any particular opinions on the subject of slavery or slaveholding. In this respect, we have now, as we always have had, perfect freedom. Whatever may be the private views of members of this body on this subject, they are at liberty to enjoy them. We simply take the broad ground, as taken in the platform of the Richmond Convention, and as underlying the organization of the United Synod, that the agitation or discussion of the subject of slavery, except as regards the moral and religious duties growing out of the relation of master and slave, shall be excluded from our ecclesiastical meetings; that slaveholding not being mentioned in the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church, the discussion and management of slavery, as a political institution, should be left to the State.

"This is our position. We rejoice in it, as in our judgment, scriptural, rational, and right; as one that is calculated to keep us free from strife and contention, and leave us at liberty to prosecute, with harmony, devotedness, and undivided energy, our appropriate work."

THE TONGUE—THE PEN—THE PRESS.

"If any man offend not in words, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. Behold also the ships which, though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind: but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men which are made after the similitude of God. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing.

My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh. Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."

THE GOSPEL IS TRIUMPHING.

It is true that we too often take desponding views of Christianity. It is aggressive, and it is progressing. We are indebted to Mr. Sharon Turner, for a collection of statistics, showing the advance the Church has made. Here is an abstract of his showing. There were of Cristian communicants in the

First century	500,000
Fifth do	15,000,000
Tenth do	50,000,000
Fifteenth do	100,000,000
Eighteenth do	200,000,000

True, there was one century, during the madness of the crusades and the looking up of the Bible, when there was a decrease. But take the past, and you have an advance of 50,000,000 each century, or 140 every day. Is there not really something inspiring in such a view? Let it go on a little longer, and we may well say, "From the tops of the rocks I see them, and from the hills I behold them: who can count the dust of Jacob, and number the fourth part of Israel?"

It is stated that actual statistics show, that during the last fifty years "the number of members in the Evangelical Churches in the United States has increased from four hundred thousand to three millions and a half, being an increase of eight-fold; while our population has increased only four-fold." So much for the oft-reiterated statement, that the growth of Evangelical Churches has not kept pace with the growth of population.

BIBLE AGENCY REPORT.

In this, I will give a statement of a few facts, which may be of interest, to not a few friends of the Bible and religion: First, the circuit to which I was appointed supernumerary had no work for me. Secondly, Presiding Elder, brother John Lusk, learned that the Kentucky Bible Society, auxiliary to the American Bible Society, wanted an agent to supply Attalla county with Bibles, which was thought to be considerably destitute, to which he recommended your humble servant, and advised me to take it—and which I did, under the Rev. J. H. Alexander, of the Presbyterian Church, and brother T. L. Thompson and Dr. Galaway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Thirdly, we commenced the work on the 22d day of April last, but I was at home some of my time, so that I served the Society but four months, from that date up to the first day of October. Fourthly, I visited seven hundred families, besides those that I saw at two camp meetings not numbered. (I think that I reported to the society but six hundred and eighty-three families visited.) Fifthly, one hundred and seventy-four destitute have been supplied, giving the Bible to one hundred and forty-nine who had no money to buy with. Sixthly, I found one bachelor and one family who would not have the Bible—the bachelor said that history was better than the Bible; the others did not believe the Bible to be the word of God—I also found one bachelor who wanted a Bible, and three families whom I left unsupplied. We disposed of the last Bible we had on hand, and so we concluded it advisable to cease operations, for a time at least, although there are still two small neighborhoods not fully supplied. We served many very poor; eight families had been burnt out, and eight or ten widows. Seventhly, we collected at Centerville, Old Liberty, Atwood's Factory, Springridge camp meeting, Bethel camp meeting and from persons privately, fifty-six dollars and some cents, which the brethren handed over to their agent as part pay of his wages when they settled with him.

We were often cheered and comforted by the warm solicitations to return, and by grateful looks and falling tears. May God bless his word to all of this people, so that they may be turned from their sinful ways, to the service of the living God. John H. Massey.

HUME, THE MEDIUM.

The Springfield Republican gives an interesting sketch of the life of Hume, the medium, who has just married a very rich well-born Russian lady. In his youth he was a tailor's apprentice in Norwich; in Springfield he was a professional spiritualist, and in New York he was a student of medicine with a homeopathic physician. He subsequently went to London for his health, and from thence to Paris, where he frequented the best French society. In Paris the papers occupied themselves about him, the Emperor had him at the Tuilleries, and his spiritual performances, such as lifting a table, making a clock suddenly stop, calling up spirits, etc., were the talk in all the saloons. His father is still living humbly in Norwich, while Hume himself is on the top wave of Russian society, intimate with princes, visiting the Imperial family, spending as much money as he pleases, and probably happy, as his spirits never fail him.

THE WESTERN CONTINENT KNOWN TEN OR FIFTEEN CENTURIES AGO.

The evidence that the Northmen visited America four or five hundred years before its discovery by Columbus is tolerably conclusive, says the Jackson (Miss.) Eagle of the South of the 4th instant, and it has been strongly suspected that the dauntless perseverance of the Genoese was sustained by some inkling of that fact. And now we learn that the Celestial Empire had, as early as the third century of the Christian era, extended their researches to the western shores of America. The hieroglyphics of the ancient Mexicans also afford illustrations of Buddhistic religious ceremonies, doubtless learned from the Chinese missionaries. In addition to these, the Philadelphia Bulletin, speaking of the century plant, relates the following strange and interesting facts:

"But there is still a more curious circumstance connected with this plant, though of a historical and not of a botanical nature, and one very little known to the great multitude even of scholars. It is the great link and the surest guaranty in existence, that long before Columbus, in the fifteenth century, A. D., there was intercourse between Asia and America. It is not many years since Charles Newman, a celebrated German Orientalist, discovered while in China, among the ancient but perfectly authentic Year Books or annals of the Empire, records of embassies sent to countries in the east, which from the descriptions were most evidently California and Mexico. What established the fact was the description of the great flowering aloe, by Buddhist monks sent from time to time on missions to Mexico. They called the plant Fusang, and named the country after it. Its appearance and various uses were too accurately set forth to leave room for doubt that the mission in question took place."

In company with this claim, continues the Eagle, for the Celestials, as well as that for the Norse, we record the well authenticated fact that several years ago, a veritable Egyptian coin, worth about thirty cents of our currency, was, in digging a well near Tallahoma, Mississippi, found embedded in the earth, about thirty feet under ground. Put this and that and the other together, and then answer the question: Whence originated the aborigines of this country?

RAILROAD FROM MOSCOW TO ST. PETERSBURG.

Bayard Taylor, in one of his letters from St. Petersburg, Russia, gives an interesting account of the railroad between that city and Moscow, in which Mr. Thomas Winans, of Baltimore, is deeply interested. He states that it is as straight as a sunbeam, and that the Emperor Nicholas had it built upon the shortest possible distance between the two cities, by carrying it for hundreds of versts through swamps, where an artificial foundation of piles was necessary. Mr. Taylor considers it the finest railway in the world, and adds: There are thirty-three stations between Moscow and St. Petersburg. At the most of these the station houses are palaces, all built exactly alike, and on a scale of magnificence which scorns expense. A great deal of needless luxury has been wasted upon them. The bridges, also, are models of solidity and durability. Everything is on the grandest scale, and the punctuality and exactness of the running arrangements are worthy of all praise. But at what a cost has all this been accomplished. This road, 400 miles in length, over a level country, with very few cuts, embankments and bridges, except between Moscow and Tver, about one-fourth of the distance, has been built at an expense of 120,000,000 of rubles, (90,000,000,) or $225,000 per mile. When one takes into consideration the cheapness of labor in Russia, the sum becomes still more enormous. The work was not only conducted by American engineers, but Mr. Winans, the present engineer, is now carrying on the running under a contract with the government. His principal assistants are Americans. This contract, which was originally for ten years, has yet three years to run; at the end of which time Mr. Winans will be able to live upon what he has earned. His annual profit upon the contract is said to be one million rubles, about $750,000. Some idea of its liberal character may be obtained from the fact that his allowance for grease alone is three silver copecs a verst for each wheel, about 3½ cents a mile, or with an ordinary train, some $700 for the run from Moscow to St. Petersburg. His own part of the contract is faithfully and admirably discharged, and he is, of course, highly entitled to all he can make.

MOSCOW.—By Bayard Taylor.

No other city in the world presents so cosmopolitan an aspect. The gilded domes of Lucknow, the pagodas of China, Byzantine churches, Grecian temples, palaces in the style of Versailles, heavy, inexpressive German buildings, wooden country cottages, glaring American signs, boulevards, gardens, silent lanes, roaring streets, open markets, Turkish bazaars, French cafes, German beer-cellars, and Chinese tea-houses, all of which are found here, not grouped exclusively into separate cantons, but mixed and jumbled together, until Europe and Asia, the past and the present, the old world and the new, are so blended and confounded that it is impossible to say which predominates. Another city so bizarre and so picturesque as Moscow does not exist. To call it Russian would be too narrow a distinction; it suggests the world. Its position, near the imaginary line where one continent is merged into the other, accounts for this. The waters of the Moskva seek an Asiatic sea, yet its nearest ports are those of Central Europe. Its fibers of commerce branch eastward across the Tartar steppes to Mongolia and China; southward to Samarcand and Bokhara, to Cashmere and Persia; northward to Archangel and the Polar Ocean; and on the west to all the rest of Europe. The race who founded it came from the southeast, and brought with them the minaret and the swelling Oriental dome, the love of gilding and glaring colors; its religion came from Constantinople, with the Byzantine pillar and the Greek cross; and the founder of Russian power learned his trade in the West. On every one of its thousand spires and domes glitters the crescent, surmounted by the triumphant cross. At its southern end the Tartar muezzin calls to prayer from the roof of his mosque, while at the northern the whistle of the locomotive announces the departure of the train for St. Petersburgh.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

Earnest efforts are made by Christians in Europe to evangelize the seventeen millions of Spain who are so completely subject to the Papal yoke. In spite of the great difficulties from the vigilance exercised on the frontiers against the introduction of books and pamphlets, and especially of Bibles, which are particularly prohibited, these efforts are meeting with encouraging success. The work goes on quietly but constantly, the evangelists and colporteurs being obliged to act with the greatest caution, and the priests and Jesuits demand of the government rigorous measures against every attempt to proselytize. Missionary tours are made by converted Spaniards, and private religious meetings, at which only a dozen persons are admitted, are held for expounding the word of God. Through the labors of one of these converts several hundred, it is said, have opened their eyes to the Romish impostures. In the first six months of 1857, one agent sold or gave away 127 copies of the Scriptures, distributed 327 tracts, and held religious meetings in private houses, and more than two thousand persons have heard the pure Gospel from him. Through his efforts 213 proselytes were gained to Protestantism. Many have embraced the faith, revolted by the new doctrine of the immaculate conception, and many others are Protestant at heart, but fear to avow their belief.

COME, THOU FOUNT OF EVERY BLESSING.

The London Notes and Queries (July, 1858,) speaks of this well-known hymn as having been found among the papers of the Countess of Huntingdon, in her handwriting, and for this reason considers her the author. This, however, is no evidence against the general consent of authorities, all of whom, we believe, without exception, attribute the authorship to Robinson of Cambridge. We find in a contemporary two additional stanzas which are usually omitted in hymnbook reprints. Our readers may be pleased to see them:

"O, that day when, freed from sinning,
I shall see thy lovely face!
Clothed then in blood-washed linen,
How I'll sing thy sovereign grace.
Come, dear Lord, no longer tarry,
Take my raptured soul away;
Send thy angels now to carry
Me to realms of endless day.

If thou ever didst discover
To my faith the promised land,
Bid me now the stream pass over,
On that heavenly border stand.
Now surmount what e'er opposes,
Into thy embraces fly;
Speak the word thou didst to Moses,
Bid me get me up and die."

We may add, by the way, that the Episcopal Recorder thus mentions a comical effort of that detestable tribe, the hymn-meaders, on one well-known couplet in this fine lyric: "Two lines in the third stanza are sometimes given thus:

"Let that grace now like a fetter, Still support and comfort me."

The support and comfort of a fetter are certainly very novel."—Christian Intelligencer.

DEATH OF FOUR CENTENNARIAN CLERGYMEN.

Six months ago a statement went the rounds of the press that four graduates of Dartmouth College—all of them clergymen—still survived, the aggregate of whose ages amounted to more than four hundred years. Hardly had this fact become known than death commenced its work. One of the number, Rev. Mr. Parsons, of New Jersey, was called away at the age of 99; Rev. Labin Ainsworth, for three-quarters of a century minister of Jeffrey, N. H., died about the same time, having more than completed his century; Rev. Zachariah Greene, of Hempstead, L. I., followed in his 99th year, and now we have to chronicle the decease of the last and oldest of the four, Rev. John Sawyer, of Bangor, Me., who died on the 14th instant, aged 103 years and 5 days. Almost to the close of his life Mr. Sawyer retained his vigor in a surprising degree, and had preached occasionally during the past spring and summer. In early life he served in the Revolutionary army, and was wounded in one of the battles in which he took a part. Rev. Daniel Waldo, recently Chaplain of the National House of Representatives, is, if we mistake not, the oldest clergyman in the country engaged in the active duties of his profession. His age is about ninety-four years.

DEBT.

Ferdinand Armino had passed the Rubicon. He was in debt. If youth but knew the fatal misery they are entailing on themselves the moment they accept a pecuniary credit to which they are not entitled, how they would start in their career! how pale they would turn! how they would tremble and clasp their hands in agony at the precipice on which they are disporting! It hath a small beginning, but a giant's growth and strength. When we make the monster, we make our master, who haunts us at all hours, and shakes his whip of scorpions forever in our sight. The slave has no overseer so severe. Faustus, when he signed the bond with blood, did not secure a doom more terrific. But when we are young we must enjoy ourselves. True; and there are few things more gloomy than the recollection of a youth that has not been enjoyed. What prosperity of manhood, what splendor of old age, can compensate for it? Wealth is power; and in youth, of all seasons of life, we require power, because we can enjoy everything that we can command. What, then is to be done? I leave the question to the schoolmen, because I am convinced that to moralize with the inexperienced availeth nothing. [Disraeli, in Henrietta Temple.

A SUGGESTION.

A distinguished civilian in Virginia writes: "A Christian woman in Vermont has been prompted by the Holy Spirit to suggest to Christians every where a modification of the late greatly blessed union prayer meeting, adapted to all the varied circumstances, and suited to all the wants of all Christendom. A plan at once so simple, so comprehensive and sublime, at first glance establishes its claim to a divine origin. It is nothing more or less than 'that every Christian shall retire at evening twilight, and pray in secret for the conversion of the world.'"

Let Christians think of it! and the good and true of all the earth will betake themselves forthwith in this cheap, convenient, simple duty; cheap, because it requires neither dress nor equipage, as required in public, and it costs but little to fall upon the knees; convenient, because twilight comes to every body, saving the bustle of an appointment; simple, for there is but the one orthodox petition—"Thy kingdom come"—comprehensive, though so short as to be breathed in a single ejaculation; and to be done privately, which insures, it will be done heartily.

Let this concert be observed, the land over, and the world over; but let none of the meetings be forsaken. Let there be a daily prayer meeting everywhere.

A WANT OF THE AGE.

A novel but admirable scheme has been projected in London. A "Playground Society" has been started under very distinguished patronage. The object of the society is briefly defined to be the "providing playgrounds for poor children in populous places." The prospectus also says: "The streets of London, and of other large towns throughout the kingdom, are said to furnish victims for every variety of temptation; and the experience of daily life will evidence how great are the bodily evils which arise to the children of our poor, from the necessity which now exists for their playing in crowded thoroughfares, and play they must, somewhere. The want of public playgrounds has long been felt. This movement arose with a London clergyman, whose dense parish induced him to seek, in June, 1857, for the formation of an association to effect so desirable an object. The committee feel assured that, for the sake of society at large as well as for that of the thousands of children whose interests both bodily and spiritually are concerned, the public will come forward to aid them liberally in their efforts to achieve a great public good."

THE SECRET OF ELOQUENCE.

I owe my success in life to one single fact, viz: that at the age of twenty-seven, I commenced and continued for years, the process of daily reading and speaking upon the contents of some historical and scientific book. These off-hand efforts were made sometimes in a corn-field, at others in the forest, and not unfrequently in some distant barn, with the horse and ox for my auditors. If is to this early practice in the great art of all arts that I am indebted for the primary and leading impulses that stimulate me forward, and shaped and moulded my entire subsequent destiny. Improve, then, young gentlemen, the superior advantages you here enjoy. Let not a day pass without exercising your powers of speech. There is no power like that of oratory. Cæsar controlled men by exciting their fears; Cicero, by captivating their affections and swaying their passions. The influence of the one perished with its author, that of the other continues to this day. [Henry Clay.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1858.

WELL DONE FOR THE QUARTERLY!

The Quarterly Review is saved! We can neither disguise nor fully express our gratification! In Committee and otherwise, at the last General Conference, we, and others, labored hard to save it; and we intend to labor for it still. We find the following, from the Book Agent, in the last Nashville Advocate.

"From the present prospects the Quarterly will be continued for 1859. The subscribers' names, however, come in rather slowly. Let our brethren everywhere rally to its support. The January number for the next year will be one of the richest ever issued from the Southern press.

"Take notice: the Quarterly will not be sent to any one, lay or clerical, hereafter, without the cash, $2 in advance. Forwarding the names without the money will avail nothing. The money must accompany the order. No subscriber's name will be entered on the mail-books who has not paid in advance. Send your name and the money, and let the Quarterly be amply sustained."

But our labor for the Quarterly is not over. We must give it a circulation equal to its merits, and equal to the character of the Church. Let it be done.

SUMMERFIELD, ALABAMA.

REVIVAL—SUNDAY SCHOOL—THE SCHOOLS.

By a letter from Hon. Robert A. Baker, and from conversation with him since its reception, we learn that all the interests of our Church at Summerfield are prospering in a most encouraging manner. They have had a gracious revival, under the pastorship of Rev. Josiah Barker, assisted by others, in which sixty or seventy souls have been converted. They have not far from four hundred scholars and teachers in their Sunday School. Bishop Andrew, when at home, the preachers, all the teachers in both the schools, and the citizens generally, take a deep interest in it.

The female College, under the Presidency of Rev. Mr. Montgomery, has about one hundred and fifty pupils, and the male Institute, under the Principalship of Rev. Mr. Connerly, has about one hundred and thirty-five or forty. The preparatory school also has a large number of pupils, and is prosperous.

Bro. Baker informs us that while no proselyting spirit exists in the institution, or village, the religious influence brought to bear upon the young minds there congregated, is of the deepest and most encouraging character. They hear and embrace with willing minds and obedient hearts, the saving truths of the gospel. We rejoice to learn that the change in the Presidency of Centenary Institute has not changed the thoroughly religious policy long since inaugurated by the former President, Rev. Dr. Mitchell. In the one or two commencements we were permitted to attend, in years past, we were struck with this feature, in all the addresses of the President, and in the compositions and addresses of the pupils. Mr. Montgomery is a worthy successor of Dr. Mitchell, in both the religious and intellectual culture of the youth committed to him. And Mr. Connerly is equally so in the male department.

Summerfield is a nursery of the Church and ministry, and well deserves the patronage bestowed upon her. Class-meetings, prayer-meetings, Sunday schools, the education of young men for the ministry, collegiate and seminary education, and experimental heart-felt religion, go hand in hand.

OFFICIOUS MISREPRESENTATION.

A TEXAS correspondent of the Christian Observer, says: "The extraordinary religious interest with which the older States of the Union have been for nearly a year so highly favored, (though it has not yet reached Texas,) has caused many hearts here to rejoice; and to hope, labor, and pray, that God will vouchsafe to grant us similar blessings. In Western Texas, and especially in the vicinity of Gonzales and Seguin, there has been much religious interest for some time, and quite a large number of conversions, and within a few months, additions have been made to the various churches."

Readers out of Texas, after seeing the above, will be surprised to be informed that the religious papers of Texas have been teeming with revival intelligence, from one end of the state to the other. This same correspondent has been filling the Northern papers for years past with disparaging representations of religion in Texas, and has been called to account again and again. Somebody will put his name "in the papers" one of these days, if he is not more cautious.

REV. DR. J. HAMILTON.

We received a note from our old friend and brother, Dr. Hamilton, a few days since, directing us to change his paper from Nashville to Montgomery, Alabama. And, during a visit to Mobile, the other day, we learned that his family had already arrived at the latter place. The Doctor, after four years of hard service as General Tract Secretary, in which he has traveled extensively, preached in most of the different departments of our connection, and been very useful, is returning again to the regular work in the Alabama Conference, where he has so long and so usefully labored.

We recollect to have been much impressed, many years ago, with a remark he made to us, to the effect, that a minister of the gospel could occupy no higher, more useful, or more happy position, than that of pastor of a Church.

And once or twice during his Tract Secretaryship, we have heard him utter the same sentiment. His long experience as a successful pastor in the Alabama Conference, is well calculated to confirm him in this sentiment. He has done much toward the establishment of that noble body of ministers now composing the Alabama Conference. For force, and evangelical eloquence, but few excel him.

He has been eminently useful otherwise. The educational institutions, now the boast of the Alabama Conference, owe much to him. He has, from the first, been the leading representative of the Alabama Conference in her connection with the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and at the General Conference of 1854, helped to fight its battle for General Conference recognition in the Advocate family. He long since saw the importance of having an able organ of Methodism in this great metropolis of the Southwest. And, at the time we speak of, his arguments were most convincing against multiplying papers at minor points, and in favor of building up those at the great commercial centres.

We are glad to learn that his health is good, and that his energies are unimpaired.

REV. EBENEZER HEARN.

"Father Hearn" still lives. He has not, so far as we can see, grown much older in appearance, than, when a boy, we first entered the Alabama Conference. Recently, however, as our readers have learned by the obituary column of the Advocate, he has lost the partner of his earthly joys and sorrows. No, not lost. She has only gone a little sooner than he to that heaven toward which they have both been tolling for these many long years. Tuskaloosa is now an old city, for Alabama, and yet we have often heard it said that Father Hearn preached there when there were only a few log huts. Before the writer of this was born, Father Hearn and his wife were laboring in the itinerancy in the wilds west of the Mississippi river, now belonging to the Louisiana or Mississippi Conference. May God abundantly bless the latter days of the war-worn veteran!

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

Much has already been written of this institution, but we doubt whether its importance has yet been fully appreciated by the public mind. Our Church has many valuable and flourishing male colleges, but nothing similar to the Institution the Southern University is designed to be, has been attempted, so far as we know, in the Southern Church. It is intended to give a higher and more thorough education than can be obtained in the colleges. It is not, therefore, the rival, but the complement of the colleges.

The Board of Trustees is to meet at the approaching session of the Alabama Conference, and will, we suppose, attend to the responsible duty of completing the faculty. Much depends upon the selection of the right kind of man for the president. Rev. Dr. Wadsworth, one of the ablest preachers and professors in the country, is to be one of the faculty. The Institution is to open in the autumn of 1859. Rev. C. C. Calloway, the able and energetic Agent, is raising funds for its endowment. We trust the highest hopes may be realized in the success of the Institution.

SOULE UNIVERSITY.

Bishop Pierce, says the Texas Advocate, did not reach Chapell Hill on the 2d, to deliver an address at the laying of the corner-stone of the Soule University. We learn from from the Brenham Enquirer that interesting addresses were delivered by Mr. R. H. Felder and Rev. J. W. Kinney. A banner was delivered to some organization by Miss Kease, and received by Mr. Foster. The corner-stone was laid by the Masons—a fine barbecue, of course, was of course eaten (with the exception of the abundant overplus which Washington county liberality always provides) by about fifteen hundred persons; and a considerable amount subscribed to aid in erecting the University building. We regret the absence of the Bishop, but are glad to hear that his place was so well supplied. The absence of Bishops, nor their presence, can effect the plain evidences that a great school is needed just where Soule University is located, and that Soule University is destined to become such a school. We consider its triumphant success a fixed fact.

FATHER SMITH.

We supposed, says the Texas Advocate, that Father Henry Smith, who preached at the old man Roberts' house when Bishop Roberts was a boy, had gone to the real "Pilgrim's Rest," long ago. But we find a letter from him in the last number of the Baltimore Christian Advocate. The two ideas of the letter come with great force from an old man:

1. There is too little brotherly love among us, hints the father in Israel. This witness is true. Let us remedy the vital defect. Everything else will be lost unless "brotherly love continue."

2. There should be more of religious experience preached from the pulpit, and printed in our periodicals. This is equally true. Old men, like father Smith, understand what they say and whereof they affirm. Their minds seem, sometimes, to grow old, but it appears to us that the heart of a good old man gets younger and truer with the increase of years. Heaven bless the old members of the Church! and spare them long to guide us, the younger, into the high places of christian duty and experience.

TUSKEGEE FEMALE COLLEGE.

By a private letter from Rev. Samuel Armstrong, the Agent, we learn that this institution opened the present session with very bright prospects. The number of pupils is large, and constantly increasing. No female institution in the land possesses better facilities for the very highest female culture than Tuskegee. It has a beautiful and commodious college edifice, even if one story of it is "half underground." And with Dr. Lipscomb, Prof. Price, and their assistants in the Faculty, it needs no other recommendation. It has a magnificent future in prospect, if properly appreciated.

WE ARE NOT DEAD.

Imagine our astonishment upon finding that in Texas we had been reported as dead! Both our papers at Galveston, the Apologist, (German,) and the Advocate, inform us of the above report. We are not dead, nor have we been sick. How the report originated we cannot imagine. Like all our fellow-creatures, we are mortal, and shall die, when God has no further use for us on earth. Till then, we hope to live and labor. We have never had fairer prospects for it than now, either in physical health, or purpose of soul.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The question of a Conference Depository of Books will necessarily come before us, at our session in Woodville. It is one of the greatest questions which we have had to decide for years. We want, all of us I am persuaded, to do what will most promote the interests of religion. We cannot too carefully consider a matter involving her so vitally. This is my excuse for intruding the subject upon you before we meet. One side of the question is debated in almost every paper we open. It may not be amiss to look if the question has two sides.

The impression is made from some quarter that we already have a Conference Depositary, and other Conferences are urged to act in reference to our triumphant success. This impression is wholly false. We have no such depository, and no book concern connected in any way with our Church in this Conference, has had any distinguished success. There is a joint stock company, located in Vicksburg, bearing the name of the "Mississippi Conference Book and Tract Society." This association is composed of many of the best members of our Church, in and out of the ministry. Their motives are doubtless the most benevolent, and they may effect much good by patient and diligent effort. Similar associations in other sections of our Conference, might do much in spreading a wholesome literature in our country. For the sake of bearing our name, and securing our patronage, the Vicksburg company has voluntarily modified her charter, so as to give to the Conference some supervision over her publications, and general management. But the Conference has no share in the joint stock, is not liable for its debts, or has any part in its dividends.

The late General Conference did recommend to the Annual Conferences, the establishment of conference depositories; but left it to the discretion of each Conference to do so, or not. I trust we shall use that discretion wisely. The joint stock feature, which we learn is being adopted by some of the Conferences, is no part of the recommendation of the General Conference. The General Conference supposed, at least this seems to me to be the purport of its resolution, that each Conference would raise a fund on simple benevolence, sufficient to establish a depository, say fifty thousand dollars; this was generally supposed to be about the requisite amount.

I object to this, in the first place, because I think the money would be very hard to raise. It is always safe to look at what has been done in similar circumstances, when we undertake any thing, other wise the teachings of history are worthless. Permit me to refer you to a few facts on this subject. In 1836 when the Church North and South were one, and the bonds of connectional union unfretted, our great Book Concern in New York, almost the idol of the whole church, was consumed by fire—no insurance. The sensation was thrilling in every Methodist heart. The General Conference sat in Cincinnati immediately after the disaster, and devised in great unanimity and good feeling, the plan of rebuilding by appeal to the benevolence of the church. The effort was very general, and earnest. But the whole amount raised fell far below one hundred thousand dollars. I have not the exact figures before me.

After the division of the Church in '44, and the organization of Southern church in '46, in Petersburg, the Church South found herself without a book concern, and her just claims on the North with-holden. In this remarkable crisis, the Southern Church resolved to throw herself for the time being on the benevolence of the whole South, with all the advantages of sympathy for an injured party. Collections were ordered in all the churches and congregations, not to build up a book concern, but simply to obtain funds to trade in books, and publish a few at other establishments. What was the result? Less than ten thousand dollars was obtained in the course of eight years.

But we are told that the church is growing more benevolent, and far more wealthy. This I grant, and in the former I glory. Now it is said we have only to devise liberal things, and magnificent plans, and our coffers will overflow; money by the hundred thousand, will be gathered by mere pastime. Let us see. In 1854, the Tract Society was formed, and the Conferences were invited to form auxiliaries. Our Conference responded. Flushed with the recent establishment of our great concern in Nashville, the new-born zeal of a recent organization, we entered the field of christain benevolence in the line of books and tracts. The experiment has certainly been a fair one; two of the most active men in our Conference have been our special agents. Rev. H. H. Montgomery, and Rev. R. Abbey. The first years effort by brother Montgomery, I think did not more than cover incidental expenses, my recollection is that it fell under three thousand dollars. The next year, brother Abbey I think did not report one hundred dollars received as simple donations. It is true that most of his time was occupied in receiving stock to the joint company. What has been done the present year, I have not learned.

Are not these facts suggestive? If the intense connectionalism, roused by the fires of Mulberry street in thirty-six, could not raise one hundred thousand dollars, or the still more intense sectionalism of forty-six, did not reach ten thousand dollars, will it be easy for the Mississippi Conference alone to raise fifty thousand? I trow not.

But we are told that wonderful changes are to be accomplished by the idea of individual Conference action. This it seems to me is appealing to the selfish principle for benevolent action. Well, if the appeal does not act with a vengence. When the benevolent sympathies begin to contract from the whole Church, down to an individual Conference, it will be well if the spasm does not bring it down to an individual man and that man self.

This brings me to state my second objection to Conference depositories. I think the tendency will be to weaken the connectional bonds of the Church. The tendency in my humble judgment is to congregationalism. I do not say that that form of christianity may not be eminently useful, but I do say that my predelictions are strongly in favor of connectionalism. If union is strength, then the connectional principle is true. May heaven increase our bonds; may not man break them.

My third objection is the expensiveness of the plan. Every individual depository will increase the general amount required to circulate our books by one, two, or three thousand dollars per annum. This in the aggregate of all the Conferences would amount to fifty or sixty thousand dollars. All this might be submitted to, if actual circulation of the books was greatly increased. But two things would operate against this result, and as I believe over-balance the increased energy of Conference action. The first is, the price of the books must needs be increased to meet the expense. To think of the eternal system of begging to keep down the price of books, is to my mind absurd and ridiculous. By so much as the books are raised in price will the sales be diminished. Another potent agency will prevent the circulation of the books. The fountain head has usually the best supply. A preacher who sends to a depository and gets one half or two thirds of his order filled, will not only fail to sell the missing books, but will be greatly discouraged in dealing at that store again. A letter from the polite agent assuring him that he expects the missing books very soon, does not meet the case, time is short, and precious in our annual incumbencies. The books are not circulated.

I ask brethren calmly to consider these, and other reasons that will readily be suggested to the mind, before they resolve to embark on the uncertain sea of book speculation. Think of the protracted begging necessary to get up, and keep up our endowment. Think of the fine preachers who must be abstracted from the regular work and attached to the agency or begging Bureau. Think of the possible, not to say probable, failure of the concern, and the discouragement by this means thrown on the whole subject, and the withering up of the benevolent hearts that had given to sustain it. Think of the temptation it would hold out to us to enter the competition in the general book and stationary trade, thereby disparaging us as an ecclesiastical body. Let these and other considerations be well weighed before you give your vote to establish a conference depository.

It may be said, that the General Conference recommends it. I answer that it was carried by a lean majority, after a hasty discussion. I have no hesitation in believing that the untried experiment was resorted to as a remedy for a temporary pressure. The creation of a great book manufacturing establishment so far out of its latitude was a herculean task, and must needs involve much expense. The unreasonable clamor for abundant and sudden publications, strained the sinews of business to a frightful tension. The crisis of last fall did not snap them, (marvelous that it did not,) but left them so impaired in strength that it was feared by the empirics, that re-action would not take place. In these alarming symtoms, the desperate remedy of Conference depositories was resorted too. Calm confidence, and vigorous efforts for a few years would have restored all, and given us a healthy, and vigorous concern based upon a foundation as solid as the native limestone of Nashville. But this panic seems likely to drive us from the long tried paths of Methodist book circulation—paths that have led to two immense fortunes—one, before 1836, the other, before 1844. What the result will be, time alone can answer.

B. M. DRAKE.

Magnolia Springs, November, 1858.

TWELVE INDIAN PREACHERS ORDAINED.—Our Missionary Secretary, Dr. Schon, is making the tour of the Indian Nation, visiting the mission schools and the Conference. The latter was held by Bishop Early, who, at one time, ordained twelve native Indians—sons of the forest—to the work of the Christian ministry. It must have been an impressive and suggestive scene.

"WATCH THE WESTERN MAN."—The above is the title of a paper that reached us a few days since, published at St. Louis, having internal evidence of being a religious paper, of the Baptist persuasion. What does it mean? Do our Baptist brethren find it neccessary to establish a paper to be devoted to "Watching the Western Man?" If Graves is the "Western Man" in view, we think the paper well-named.

SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Vicksburgh, Shreveport, and Texas Railroad Company. This has been sent us, we suppose, by our friend, Dr. C. G. Young, President of the Board of Directors. The road is progressing and is to connect the Southern Pacific Road in Texas with our general railroad system at Vicksburgh.

THANKSGIVING-DAY.—Governor Moore has issued a proclamation recommending Thursday, November 25, to be observed by the people of Alabama as a day of prayer and thanksgiving.

LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

Apologetic and Propitiatory.

Doubtless you have long ere this erased my unworthy name from your head-roll of reliable correspondents. Doubtless down there in that fever-haunted city, walking amidst its fresh graves, and praying beside its smitten bedsides, and ministering about its desolate hearthstones, you have thought my heart obdurate, my sympathies dead, and my vows of friendship forever forgotten. If so, I acquit you of all uncharitableness, for I have taxed your long suffering beyond endurance, by my seemingly stolid apathy, and premeditated, indifference. Yet, can you believe it? there all the while was sounding in the ears of my inner self, an accusing spirit. All this weary while, I was daily inditing bitter things against my infertile brain and, my slothful pen. Often I was in prayer for you in your loneliness and peril; often was I minded to redeem my pledges, and to recover your editorial favor. Often did I begin to gird myself to the duty, as a knight to his oaths. Why then came there no fruit of these manifold resolutions? I know not, unless it be explicable upon Poe's theory of the "Imp of the Perverse;" that refined modification of diabolic possession, which leads to intellectual obstinacy, and to intellectual recreancy.

Business called me last week to the city of Montgomery, and if you have the heart to reinstate me in your gracious favor for a new probation, I will give you my impressions of some things that I saw and heard at the Alabama State Fair.

This was the fourth Annual Exhibition of the State Agricultural Society. It was, however, my first attendance upon any such occasion. I do not mean to give you a detailed account of the Fair. If I am successful in hitting a few salient generalities I shall rest contented.

There were great crowds in attendance, perhaps as many as six or eight thousand. The weather was, for the most part, very fine. All day long the thunderous roll of wheels shook the hustling thoroughfares. John was there in all his pride and pomp. The busy whip, the blasphemous objurgation, the goaded beast, and the dying dust, announced his kingly presence and his lordly sway. In the rich sunlight of our bright November days, the eye was fairly dazzled by the splendid bedizenments of female wardrobes. The costliness of the rustling silks, and purple velvets, ermine bordered; the richness of the graceful shawls, and the superb efflorescence of their irresistible bonnets; the glitter of bejewelled ears, and necks, and fingers—taken all in all, was quite as much as an impecunious pedagogue could behold without going instantly into a monetary consumption. There were gaping loiterers around every object of interest; there were grave old gentlemen discussing an obese hog; there were flashy youths in striped unmentionables, with miraculous neck-ties, vociferously debating the qualities of a favorite trotter; there were disgusting specimens of Young Americus "assumacy," sporting gold-headed canes, chewing the stumps of smouldering segars, befouling every place with their nauseous saliva, and profaning the very air around them by their vulgar ribaldry. I looked on with a sadly thoughtful heart. I saw clearly that hogs were improving, cows growing larger and more lactiferous; poultry advancing in the scale of biped animality, and horses getting fatter, sleeker, and faster. These were the results aimed at, and they were attained. But I saw women growing more frivolous, laughing at jests that edged the obscene. I saw men growing coarser and more brutal. I saw boys dishonoring their parentage, aspiring to be profane, ambitious to be fools, and wonderfully successful in winning contempt. You will form no higher estimate of our common clay-begotten humanity than you ought, when I tell you that I saw scores of men and women go gapingly under the tented canvas to hear a foreign lazy stroller whistle like a magpie, and to see the wonderful spectacle of a double-headed negro child—an asthmatic hurdy-gurdy meanwhile discoursing most mellifluous strains.

Intensely Southern.

Cotton was King at the Fair. On every hand you were reminded that the great southern staple is the most desirable product of our fertile soil. In one place there was a long row of bales ready for the Committee, with their beautiful white samples fluttering in the wind.—There was a hoe, whose special office is to eradicate the universal weed tribe from the vicinity of the young cotton plant. There was a plough, whose sole aim is the better cultivation of the tender cotton in its early growth. One man had a machine which he would put against creation for planting cotton seed and covering it. Such was his remarkable anxiety to have some luckless wight to dispute the transcendant utility of his invention, that he reminded me of the pugnacious Irishman at Donnybrook Fair, who besought some compassionate sympathiser to tread upon his coat-tail, all for a bit of a row, and a sprig of shillelah. Of cotton Presses, I cannot tell you how many were there, each, insatiate as the maw of Death, greedily anxious to devour all the raw material in the surrounding country, to be reproduced in compact rotund cotton bags. Gins were there, too, ready with their iron teeth to tear in pieces the fleecy lint of our great staple, while—happy conjunction! there, too, was Cuffee, his ebon face radiant with unctuous smiles, and his brawny arms strong for new conquests in the white-pine fields.

Preachers There.

I met upon the grounds the veteran Dr. A. H. Mitchell, whose stalwart frame is yet erect, and in whose genial eye beam yet the hospitable fires of a nobly harmonized intellect and soul. He seemed ill at ease, amidst the gay, thoughtless crowd. I saw him but a few moments, and I do not think that he returned to the exhibition again. I have heard no very general expression of sentiment on the part of his parishioners. It needs but to know the worthy Doctor's antecedents, however, and to get some insight into the sterling qualities of his character, to be persuaded that he will always give a good account of "pure and undefiled religion" wherever he goes, and that Methodism will be rooted, grounded, and established within the range of his influence. There I met, also, that indestructible embodiment of energy and perseverance, our precious brother Hamill. Valuable things are done up in small parcels, they say. In that nervous little organism, vitalized by the breath of as genial a piety as ever man had, you will find the most earnest, direct, indefatigable, persistent, hopeful, cheery soul alive. His overcoat was simply thrown over his shoulders, as if he hadn't time to adjust it. His hat was pushed back upon his head, letting all his soul out into his radiant visnomy. His hands were thrust down into his own pockets, emblematic of what he is hourly trying to do to other men's pockets, in a prayerful and devout way. He cast a glance here, a look there, and then, with a kindly criticism and a pleasant smile, he went on his way, seeking, perhaps, some stingy steward of God's manifold gifts, from whose plethoric purse to squeeze a little pittance for his great and good work. May the Spirit of Grace help his urgent appeals!

Dr. Neely was on the ground, also. I had a sight of his "atlantean shoulders" amidst the puny crowds around him. His presence, you know, is on the kingly order, for like one spoken of by Milton, though in a different sense, of course, "he seems for dignity composed, and high exploit." He preached in the city on Wednesday night, but I was too much occupied to hear him. His theme, I learned, was to be the "Dignity of Labor," and with his eloquent treatment, I pity the lazy poppinjay who sat beneath "the droppings of the sanctuary" that night.

Here Mention.

From your city there was on exhibition a new lightning rod, composed of iron and copper wires intertwined. It is a very decided improvement upon the ordinary anti-electrical apparatus.

From Mobile there was a beautiful specimen of solar evaporated salt. It was snow white, and of a dazzling brilliancy. I never saw so much beauty before in that "innocuous cate." In looking upon its spotless crystals, the simple yet strikingly apposite illustration of our Saviour, in comparing christians to the "salt of the earth," received a new and higher significance and power of exemplification.

Hard by the door, as you went in, protected by a glass case, lay the figure of a sleeping infant cut in marble. His head rested upon his dimpled arm; his unbound locks strayed in snowy curls, about his beautifully turned shoulders; his lips were laughingly apart, as if he saw angels in his dreams. The man whose chisel wrought that work, has the quickening spirit of true genius in his bosom.

Farther along a fine young Banana tree, shot its straight, sheathed, green, juicy stem up from a box of rich mould. Its broad, richly verdurous leaves, glistened in the sunlight that fell on it through the window. South Sea airs would have fanned my cheeks had I stood there longer, while my busy brain would have filled with dreamy phantasms of Typee, and Fayaway, and cocoa trees, and the blue tropical sky, and gleams of the far-off Pacific.

In a window, diagonally across from the main entrance, sat a large bottle of Darby's Prophylactic. Its rich royal purple color constituted it one of the most noticeable articles on exhibition. Prof. Darby delivered a very interesting lecture before a special committee, upon the subject of disinfectants. It contained just the kind of scientific information that would do good in your locality. His excellent preparation received a Premium.

In Particular.

I must let hundreds of note-worthy things go by, that I may suitably accredit the Tuskegee Female College, with its handsome collection of drawings, paintings and designs. I send you a printed list of the articles presented by this young, vigorous and growing institution. You will find that about sixty separate pieces were on exhibition, embracing some very superior oil pictures; several beautiful works in pastel; a number of crayon sketches, of great merit; and a few water-color pieces, of admirable style and fine execution for such young artists. In addition to these, the Institution exhibited the first fruits of its School of Design. Of this characteristic feature of the College I must take another opportunity to write more fully. I can only tell you that there were about a dozen very meritorious efforts, in the application of art to industrial pursuits. These consisted of designs, for wall paper, carpets, table covers, and hearth-rugs. Several discriminating gentlemen pronounced these articles as among the most interesting and useful objects in the exhibition. Three premiums were awarded to the Institution. More properly speaking, two were given to Miss Julia A. Spear, the talented lady who conducts the department of fine arts in the College. While the third was presented to the Institution as a whole, in consideration of the spirited endeavor of the Trustees to contribute to the Fair.

The End.

If you give this rambling epistle a place in your columns, I will try in a few days, to send you something more worthy of your excellent and beautiful paper. If you do not think this wall entitled to a corner, you may consign it to the quiet oblivion of your editorial Lethe. But undismayed, unterrified and undiscouraged—I will nevertheless, once again plume my adventurous pen, seeking in earnest effort fully to re-establish in your confidence and love your truant,

FLORIO.

FEMALE EDUCATION.

The subject of female education is of great moment to the entire country; since almost every man having the ability, is now inclined to educate his daughters as well as his sons. We have noticed the working of many institutions through the country, established for the education of females, and have come to this conclusion—viz: that it is almost indespensible to success, and a proper protection of the pupils, that each female institute should prepare for, and board, in immediate connection with the institute, and under the direction of the president or principal, each pupil entrusted to such institute.

Girls should not board out, for when they leave the institute the teachers' oversight and control cease.

After they arrive at the boarding-house, then the oversight of the proprietor of the house obtains—if, indeed there be any oversight; in many cases, there is none or but little bestowed upon boarding scholars. Here, most commonly, young men are permitted to visit; and the boarding pupil is allowed, equally with the other members of the family, to have and entertain her company. Hence, we find many of our friends sending their daughters to nunneries to be educated, or to some academy where the pupils are received into and kept under charge of the teachers, until again returned to their parents, although many times in charge of denominations other than our own. Parents and guardians who have a proper regard for their children and wards, wish at all times to feel that they are safe from all influences outside the Institute, or area of education. We all feel this; none of us want our daughters gallanted, courted, or married, until they have completed their education; none of us want our daughters made belles, filled with vanity, or induced to believe that rich and costly apparel is the only true admeasurement for society. Yet these things must obtain to a greater or less degree, according to the proximity of our daughters to such influences. Where girls board at twenty places, they are apt to see and hear twenty different views upon almost all questions; when the girls come together, they compare notions and opinions, and these are but the reflex (most commonly) of what they have learned at their temporary homes; hence, one wants rich and costly apparel; another thinks it no harm to dance; another, is it not right that we should see and converse with our sweet-hearts; and, alas, too often, our teachers are too exacting and I cannot have proper respect for them.

If a General, after the day's campaign, were to dismiss his men, and let them repair to places of their own choice for repose and refreshment, he would not likely long keep a well organized, loyal set of soldiers; so, but he keeps them ever under the discipline of the soldier; hence every thing moves harmoniously, each man wears a like apparel, eats the same food, performs the same duty; the command is issued by the General, and is echoed by his aids along the line; and all is one sentiment, one action, and willing obedience to command, because no disloyal sentiment has been implanted by rude hands.

There are many good men and women who are safe guardians to girls who board with them; but again, there are many who are not.

The object of this communication is to call the attention of the teachers and trustees, having the charge of female education through our country to a due consideration of this question; and to ask them, if they do not believe, you know, that to incorporate the boarding system (with a proper number of matrons) with their Institutions, where the girls would be constantly under the rule and guide of the teachers of the Institute, would greatly advance female education, both in the development of science, and security of the girls from the influences referred to.

The time is past for superficial academies; the people want solid, and throughly educated daughters.

The uniform system in apparel, is an excellent one; and is being adopted by many of the best schools.

Economy should be rigidly enforced by all Institutions. This is an important branch of education, as we conceive, to be taught and enforced both at home and at Female Institutes. Many parents however have the weakness to be greatly wanting in this important quality; it should not be so, where there is concentrated a set of persons selected because of their capacity to impart proper instruction to our daughters—the presidents, principals, and teachers. Let a liberal, but firm and unyielding rule of economy, be adopted, and enforced; and my word for it, its salutary effects will be soon realized.

That parent or guardian who wishes his child or ward, to go to some academy to display her silks, satins, diamonds, and money; should understand, that we have no such places of exhibition.

LONGFELLOW has beautifully remarked, that "Sunday is the golden clasp that binds together the volume of the week."

PAY YOUR PREACHER.

MR. EDITOR: An article that appeared in the Advocate of October 27th, on the subject of paying the preacher, has brought about the following train of reflections, which, if properly weighed, will I think, be of service to the readers of the Advocate.

1st. According to the economy of Methodism, Stewards are appointed on every Circuit and Station, to determine the amount necessary for the support of the preacher.

2d. When the amount is fixed by them, it becomes a debt, contracted by the Circuit or Station, for the preacher's support; and a failure to pay the same, is equally as bad as a refusal to pay the grocer for the provisions that were purchased of him, and used to support animal life.

3d. That a sufficiency for the preacher's support should not be withheld, because of objections urged against him, because these may be heard every quarter; and, if it is found that the preacher does not attend to his duties, he may, and will be removed by the Presiding Elder; but he should be supported so long as he is retained on the Circuit.

But I find, Mr. Editor, that the Church does not act on the above principle; and immediately I begin to inquire the reason; and after diligently examining the subject, I am fully satisfied, after attributing to others as much of the fault as is due them, and as much blame as they should bear, that it is generally owing to the inactivity of our stewards. They, though good men, become discouraged in their work and labor of love, and the poor preacher is compelled to leave his work with his uneducated and poorly provided for children, while he and his desponding wife can only remain in the itinerancy because they dread the awful consequences of locating.

It is a notorious fact, Mr. Editor, that the preachers in this land of wealth—yes, the preachers of the Louisiana Conference, lacked over $10,000 the past year, of receiving the amount apportioned to them; and of course they themselves pay the $10,000 to the support of the Gospel; it being $150, to each, and nearly all very poor men, at that. Now, brethren, I ask if that is right? and I ask you, my brethren in the stewardship, who are negligent, for some are faithful, are you not criminal in the eye of God? Eternity will reveal it. Brethren, begin with earnestness to attend to the duties enjoined upon you.

OPENING OF THE TEHUANTEPEC ROUTE.

THE Tehuantepec Company's steamship Quaker City, which left Minnititlan on the 2d. inst., arrived at Southwest Pass, yesterday morning, having made the run in less than three days. The duration of her trip from the wharf at New Orleans to Minatitlan was but seventy hours.

She found the steamer Suchil waiting for her at the bar of the Coatzacoalcos. The Suchil arrived out on the 6th inst., and her arrival was hailed with the greatest demonstrations of welcome.

The Suchil accompanied the Quaker City to Minatitlan, where an immediate transfer of passengers and mails was made to the Suchil.

At noon of Saturday, the 29th ult., the Suchil steamed up the river in fine style on her pioneer trip.

The facilities for navigation are unsurpassed, and the beauty of the scenery on the river must be seen to be fully appreciated. The trip up the river from Minatitlan to Suchil was performed in about eighteen hours. Early on the morning of Sunday, the 31st, the passengers were landed at the Company's wharf, at Suchil, and in less than two hours afterwards were fairly on their way, with the mails and baggage, for Almoya.

At Almoya, the head of navigation, stages were in waiting to receive the passengers and mails.

The roads across the Isthmus were in fine condition, there having been no rains for a week.

All arrangements had been perfected for the transit, and no apprehension was felt in regard to making the connection on the Pacific side.

Mr. Murphy, the superintendent of the road, accompanied the mails, and felt sure that the transit from Suchil to Ventosa would be made in thirty hours or less.

Mr. La Sere, the President of the Company, also went with the mails, and started from Suchil with the most sanguine expectations of the success of the enterprise.

As it was not contemplated in the schedule to bring a California mail by this trip of the Quaker City, She left Minatitlan, as above stated, on the return of the Suchil.

The Suchil brought the following dispatch, dated Ventosa, October 29th:

"Col. Schadas, with 400 troops from Oaxaca, entered Tehuantepec on the 20th instant, having dispersed the forces of Zuloaga, who has now no hold whatever on the Isthmus."

The country is unusually healthy, and the people of the Isthmus are much elated at the opening of the route; in fact, it absorbs all other questions of a political or warlike character. The company's road is opened for coaches between Almoia and Ventosa, which is more than half the way between the points of navigation, and mule travel will be rapidly shortened, until within a few weeks the entire transit will be made in coaches.

DEATH OF REV. GREEN M. RODGERS.

Madison College, Sharon, Miss. No. 11, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: I hasten to announce to you, and the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, that the Rev. Green M. Rodgers, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, is dead. He died this day (Thursday) about noon. This event has been expected by his most intimate friends, for sometime. He went to bed last night better than usual, but had another stroke of paralysis in the night; and is now no more on earth. His wife is at this time extremely ill, and will probably die soon. God bless and help the daughters and little children! A more extended notice will certainly be given, if not sooner, after the Mississippi Annual Conference. In extreme haste.

T. C. THORNTON.

REV. DR. J. L. CHAPMAN was to deliver a series of discourses on Baptism at Washington, Texas, commencing on the first Sunday in this month.

The Rev. Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburg, has given to the press a new volume of Discourses, founded upon a portion of the first chapter of Colossians.....Dr. Addison Alexander, whose new Commentary on Mark was recently published, it is said, will continue his labors till the Gospels and Epistles have passed under his pen.

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.

THIS Conference met at Dardanelles, October 20, Bishop Early, presiding. Sossion, in Masonic Hall.

ADMITTED ON TRIAL.—Billy B. Cannaday, recommended by the Quarterly Conference for Helena Circuit; David P. Armstrong, Geo. Emmert, from Clarksville Circuit; George Benefield, from Dover Circuit; Leonidas Dobson, from Ozark Circuit.

Numbers in society:

	1858.	1857.	Increase.
White members	9504	8693	911
White probationers	414	240	26
Colored members	967	750	217
Colored probationers	300	160	140
Local preachers	159	146	14

The Bishop's health is greatly improved. I do not think I ever saw any one preside in an Annual Conference more to the universal satisfaction of every one than he has done. His prayer-meetings in the Conference-room have been among the best I ever attended. [Memphis Christian Advocate.

MR. EDITOR:—The Arkansas Conference closed its twenty-second session this evening. We had a happy session, a gracious revival—blessed time. Bishop Early was with us in full health. He presided both to the satisfaction of preachers and people. Dr. Schon reached here on Saturday, and did good service in the missionary cause. I send you with this a list of the appointments.

"To spread Scriptural Holiness over these Lands."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Natchitoches Circuit.—Rev. R. Parvin writes: "It will be interesting to some of your readers to hear what has been done on the Natchitoches Circuit this year. We have had two camp-meetings; the first in Owing's Settlement on Kisatchie. This was a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. The people were well entertained by the tent-holders, their kindness was appreciated by their visitors, in making them life-members to the Missionary Society. Our second camp-meeting came off, the twenty-fifth of October. This was held at Sandersville; a large multitude of people in attendance—the most of them were not members of any church. This was a peculiar meeting in many respects, but the good Lord was with us, and blessed the labors abundantly. Our camp ground is near the race-track, near by this place; the brethren hold a prayer-meeting; and here many of them laid aside their "weights" and started to run the spiritual race. I hope they will run successfully; and receive a crown of glory at the end. We have organized four Sabbath-schools. Received one hundred and twenty members into the Church; and the work of the Lord has been revived, for which the Lord be praised."

Mansfield.—Rev. J. F. Scurlock writes: "In the close of the year, I propose giving a brief notice of the work of God, among this people.

"We have had thirty conversions—sixty whites, and eighty-eight colored, have joined the Church by letter, and on probation. A number of those who joined without letters, have been members elsewhere.

"We held the most of our meetings in basket-meeting style. We took our dinners with us, and spent the hours appointed for worship upon the ground. They were well sustained by kind friends and members of the Church. And so great was the interest in one of these meetings, that the servants were permitted to go, during the meeting, which continued six days. Religion makes the people liberal—pity we have so few of them.

"The demonstrations that have followed the preaching of the gospel, in this Circuit, have followed, so far as I can learn, throughout this District.

"I am indebted to Brothers Suratt, Thweatt, Chapman, and Alexander, for their kind services.

"The gospel has produced more feeling and interest in this portion of the State and in Eastern Texas, than has ever been known before. Scarcely any meeting, in fact not the first one within my knowledge, has been closed without some marked demonstration of the spirit.

"From a gentleman who has lately visited Texas, I have received similar intelligence.

"If religion makes people liberal and anxious for all to enjoy its blessed privileges, I suppose the missionary apportionment will be fully met at our ensuing Conference. My present impression is, that most or all the preachers in this District, will be able to meet the appointment.

"This is the effect of faithful preaching; and such will ever follow it, until the world shall hear and feel it a power and enjoy its comforts."

Natchitoches Camp-meeting.—Rev. R. Parvin writes: "Some of your readers may be very anxious, to hear from our Kisatchie Camp-meeting. We had several Ministering brethren with us. Brothers Sanders, J. A. Ivy, Suratt, B. F. Alexander, D. Watkins, and B. Parish, all of whom preached acceptably. Sinners were convicted; mourners converted; and the Church abundantly revived. A collection was taken for the Missionary cause and for other purposes—for the Church—$200 Missionary money subscribed, a part of which was paid in; for the Tract cause, $67; and for Pierce and Palmo College, $350. The whole amount collected, was $658. The people were well entertained, by the kind-tent holders, who had made ample provision for the people and their horses. The Camp-meeting commenced and closed without any disturbance of that lawless trifling class of people that the devil sends sometimes to Camp-meetings to interfere with the worshippers of the living God. The tent-holders have made arrangements to keep up their Camp-meetings every year. May the good Lord bless them in their undertaking."

North Rapides Circuit.—Rev. W. D Statton, writes: "The Lord has been with us, in his soul-cheering power. Since we last wrote, we held a meeting at Pools Creek, commencing October 30th—continued till Wednesday night; it resulted in three conversions, two accessions to the Church—the membership gloriously revived. The Lord has visited us at nearly all our appointments the past week. We are making our last round; and bless God! he is reviving his work at our week-day appointments. We shall leave the Circuit encouraged, from the fact of the prosperous condition of most of the societies. We believe the Circuit is in a better state now, than it has been since we have been on it. If the Conference will send a good man here next year, we think this will be a good Circuit by the close of another year."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Clinton Station.—Rev. H. T. Lewis, writes: "The Lord has done great things for us in Clinton. We have just closed a protracted meeting, which has been marked throughout by most wonderful displays of power. The Church has been blessed in a wonderful degree—backsliders reclaimed, and many happy, shouting conversions; sixty have joined the Church, a large proportion of noble young men; one at least of these, will give himself to the work of the ministry.

"The revival work began here with the colored people; about three weeks since, and over sixty of these people have joined the Church, making about one hundred and twenty additions during this meeting. To God be all the praise."

Westville.—Rev. J. J. Clarke, writes: "Glory be to God—for eight days past, we have enjoyed here a blaze of glory; thirty-nine accessions including eight servants and four by letter; eighteen acknowledged conversion at one time; some converts were absent; nothing equal to this was ever seen before; the entire Church greatly blessed; several Baptist brethren got happy and rejoiced with us. Brothers Whittington, Frenshess and Henningtun, labored effectively.

"Before this is published the following synopsis will be due. Services rendered, fifteen days meeting, two Churches organized—classes all met, over seventy accessions, quarterage received, presents, perquisites, etc., over $50, besides more "changes of raiment" to wife and daughter than Naaman took for Elijah. For all of which, God be praised."

Leake County.—Rev. J. Wells, local preacher, writes: "I wish through the medium of your very excellent paper, to inform the brethren and public generally of the gracious outpourings of the Holy Spirit, at a few of the meetings I have attended. At a two days meeting at Irish arbour, near Mr. Nazor, in Leake county, on Lobutcher, on second Sunday in August, we had a gracious outpouring of the Spirit, and on Sunday evening, seven or eight conversions. Protracted one day; on Monday evening, one or two more conversions; in all twelve or thirteen accessions to the Church. At Goshen on the second Sunday of this inst., another gracious outpouring of Spirit, four or five professed conversion; six or seven joined; and the membership revived. On the fourth Sunday, we had a two days meeting at Bethel, the society where I hold my membership, held by myself with five or six others of my own order, and brother J. J. Davis of the Cumberland Presbyterian order. Protracted seven days, twenty-one conversions, thirteen accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church; five united with the Cumberland. We had a glorious time, and best of all, my last child, a son, converted, and I pray God to carry on this good work until all shall be constrained to fall out with their sins."

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Noxubee Circuit.—Rev. L. Massengale, writes: "This is a new Circuit, formed by taking three small appointments from the Macon Circuit, and as many from the De Kalb Circuit. I entered on this work under very discouraging circumstances, my own health with that of my family being very bad during the earlier part of the year. Many other obstacles to the progress of the work presented themselves; yet over them all the Lord "has made us more than conqueror," and has poured out his blessings abundantly upon us. At one appointment forty-three joined the Church, only two of whom joined by letter, the others on probation; and what is better, all or nearly all of these professed to have received the pardon of sins. At another appointment, twenty joined the Church, and as many professed conversion; indeed the revival spirit has visited nearly all the appointments. Nearly one hundred whites have joined the Church, and some twenty-five or thirty blacks; the white membership numbers about double what it did in the beginning of the year. The whole Circuit may now be said to be prosperous. Both our Missionary and Conference assessments, I think, will be met."

Talladega Circuit.—Rev. B. B. Ross, writes: "This week closes my labors at this place for the present year. Received into the Church during the year, about sixty white and colored; revival in February, and again in October; the last, resulting in thirteen or fourteen conversions. Brothers Phillips, Lane and Scales did the preaching. The pastor has been on the sick list for several weeks, and fears he may be compelled for a while to hang up his trumpet on the wall and "his harp upon the willows." "Gods' will be done." This has been the most pleasant year of his ministry.

"May the great shepherd take care of the flock he leaves, and supply them with a faithful pastor.

"I hope the preachers of our Conference will generally be present on the day before the Conference, to have a general prayer meeting.

"As you fitly suggest, we need more of the devotional element in our Conference gatherings. Instead of praying for those who preach, there is a growing disposition to criticise the efforts of our brethren, and to listen to them more as theatrical performers, than as earnest messengers of our common master.

"Give us a word on that subject next week."

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Tyler Circuit.—Rev. W. B. Losh, writes: "The Lord is reviving his work, on the Tyler Circuit, East Texas Conference. We have just closed a meeting at Chapel's where we had twenty eight accessions to the Church, and near that number of conversions. The Church greatly revived. "To God be all the Glory."

LOCAL.

Jackson Railroad—The business of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Western Railroad is becoming exceedingly heavy. We learn that they are refusing freight constantly, so great is the amount offered, and the average daily receipts of cotton by that route, for a week past, is 1200 bales. Sometimes over 2000 bales are brought down in one day.

Alleged Child Murder in the Third District—The investigation of the death of Alphonso Moore's child, a little girl of about two years and a half old, took place on Thursday evening before Recorder Long. The child disappeared about seven in the evening some six weeks ago. About three weeks ago a negro was arrested, who was supposed to know something of the child, but nothing resulted. Some days ago the body of the lost child was discovered by Mr. Morel in the privy attached to his residence, on Columbus street, between Broad and Dorgenois streets. Margaret Riley, the servant of Mrs. Morel, who had charge of the child, was then arrested, on a charge of having murdered the child, by throwing her where she was found. The evidence of Dr. Delery showed that no marks of violence were on any parts of the body, and what was at first supposed to be the fracture of the skull was but a separation of the bones, the natural result of decomposition. The only direct testimony about the disappearance of the child was that Margaret went to a neighboring grocery about seven o'clock, and the child cried after her and ran out on the gallery. The child stopped crying, and Mrs Morel, who was in the parlor, supposed Margaret had taken Marie to the grocery, but when Margaret came back the child was found to be missing, as Margaret said she had not gone with her search was then made; but without any result. It was stated by a cousin of Marie, that about five o'clock the same evening, Margaret said to him, it was the last day she should take the child out. A woman who was called for the prosecution, testified that two days after the occurrence, Margaret told her she had news for her, as the child was lost. The witness said Margaret appeared to be sorry and frightened, and said her only idea about how the child became lost was, that she, Margaret, had not returned the same way she went in the grocery, and that Marie had missed her and gone astray. It was proven on cross examination, that Margaret, as far as observed by the family, was kind to the child and the child liked her; but the case was postponed to obtain evidence, which it was said would be brought forward, that the accused had, away from the house, acted cruelly to the child.

Horrible Accident—A most horrible accident occurred on Saturday evening, fortunately attended with the loss of but one life, as another was in imminent danger. About four o'clock, two painters named James Naylor and Dick Reed, were engaged painting the exterior of the upper windows on the Camp street side of Odd Fellows' Hall. They were on a kind of platform suspended by ropes from and secured above in such a manner that they could raise or lower themselves at will. The platform was fastened to the ropes by means of hooks that were in turn corded or "moused" so as to prevent them becoming unhooked. The fatal casualty happened through the breaking, in some way not explained, of this mousing, which allowed the hook to get out of the ring it clasped, and consequently that side of the platform was precipitate downwards. Naylor had time but to utter a single cry ere he was dashed to death on the pavement below, a distance of some seventy or eighty feet. He fell on the right side of his head, which, of course, was terribly fractured. The vertebræ of the neck and jaw bone were broken, and the thigh bone forced from the socket. The escape of his comrade from the same dreadful death was almost miraculous. Just as the platform sank from under him, he happened to be reaching for a paint pot that lay on the cornice, and to do so, he had to grasp the rope with his right hand and had his left just passing over the corner of the moulding. He luckily had sufficient grasp to hold on by, as he felt the seat go down.

He states that when he looked below and saw his comrade, his blood spattering the pavement, he expected every moment to be his last. Suspended at such a height, with the scene he had observed below, was indeed an awful situation. One of the crew of Hook and Ladder Company No. 2, happened to be there when the accident occurred, and he immediately hurried over to get ladders to reach Reed, but by the time they arrived he was able to come down from his perilous place by the rope, which was loosened from above. Naylor was about 21 years of age, and was born in Limerick, Ireland. He was employed, by Mr Wm. Towell, of Magazine street. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict rendered according to the circumstances. Reed told us that his companion had been in low spirits all the day on account of a bad dream he said he had the previous night, and which he believed was a forerunner of some misfortune.

Religious Controversy.—A great deal of feeling has been excited amongst the German Evangelical Congregation of Lafayette on account of the Trustees of the corporation suspending the preacher, Herman Pressler, and closing the church against him, and his having it broken open and continuing to act as pastor. He was sustained by a large party, and the Trustees about equally so. The latter sued for an injunction in the Sixth District Court, to enjoin Mr. Pressler, and an injunction has been issued to enjoin the defendant from disturbing the G. E. C. in the peaceable possession of its property. We believe this difference, which is to be regretted, is not yet healed. Mr. Pressler is said to be a talented man and a fine preacher.

COMMERCIAL.

Tuesday Evening, November 16, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification.

Inferior	@—	Good Middling	11¼@11⅜
Ordinary	8 @ 9⅝	Middling Fair	—@12
Good Ordinary	10¼@10⅝	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10¾@10⅞	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	11 @11¼	Good and Fine	—@—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 13th inst., furnishes the following statement of the week's business. Which have been to a fair extent in the article of Cotton, but prices have tended in favor of buyers unfavorable foreign advices, and freights and exchange being adverse to raise recently current. The three first days of the week gives the amount of sales at 35,500 bales, but notwithstanding this rather large business, the market closed heavily. On Wednesday there was but a moderate attendance of buyers and the sales were mostly in limited parcels, about 3,000 bales, and the rates more in favor of purchasers. On Thursday, business was confined to about 6000 bales, still lower offers being made, a few sales of Liverpool Middling were reported at 11c, but these terms were not generally accepted. The Asia's advices reported a decline at Liverpool of ⅛@¼d per ℔. Friday brought a more general attendance of buyers, and the supply being more ample, quite a large business was done, summing up 14,500 bales. The sales of the week were 65,000 bales; receipts during the same period, 70,781.....In the Money market, all paper or securities, entitled to any consideration, are not only readily discounted when offered, but are sought after. In fact, the Banks are discounting so freely, owing to their incomes being so much in excess of the offerings, that there is to be found but a limited amount of paper in the hands of Brokers. The transactions, for good mortgage paper and first class long dated paper, 8@9, second class do. 10; and for short commercial paper, 6@7 per cent. per annum..... Sugar and Molasses have arrived freely, but meeting with a corresponding demand, prices have been very fully maintained. In Tobacco there have been but few transactions, the assortments not being inviting, and the weather unfavorable for handling samples. In Western Produce generally the transactions are on a moderate scale, and the only important change is a material advance within a few days past in the article of Pork.

There was some inquiry on Saturday in the Cotton market, brokers being drawn and the supply less ample, sales only averaged about 6,000 bales. The weather was rather unfavorable yesterday for business, but there were sales of about 5500 bales, exhibiting no marked variation from our quotations.

Sugar—Some 700 hhds were sold yesterday. We quote fair to fully fair, 5½@6c ℔ lb.

Molasses—The market was active, with sales of some 2000 hhls at 31½c for choice, with a few small lots at 27@27c for ordinary, etc; 400 hhls choice at 31, and some very choice at 31½c ℔ gallon.

Tobacco—We heard of the sale of 2 hhds at 13c, also 30 hhds on private terms.

Corn—Small lots have been sold at 65@68c ℔ bushel.

Pork—No sales have come to our knowledge, but $15 50 ℔ bbl for a large lot of Mess has been declined.

Coffee—A good demand with sales of about 5500 bags, including 400 at 10c; 300 at 10¾; 300 at 10¾@10¾c; 4624 at 11; and 50 at 11¼c ℔ pound.

Cattle Market—Western Cattle, 8¼c. ℔ lb net; and Texas $14@32 ℔ head.....Hogs, 7½@8¼c ℔ lb.....Sheep, dull, at $2 50@3 ℔ head.....Veal, $4 50@5 50 ℔ head.

☞ Persons writing to the Office will please observe that business letters are filed by the clerk. If they write but three words to the Editor or for publication, they must so write it, that it can be separated from the business letters, if they expect the Editor ever to see it.

☞ Those writing to Depository will please observe the same rule. If matter for the three departments is contained on the same sheet, let it be so written that it can be separated, or, better still, write it on separate slips; and then if it goes wrong, the fault is not with the writer—otherwise it will be.

In sending subscriber's names always give their Post-office, and say whether they are old or new.

In changing papers, always name the Post-office changed from, as well as the one changed to.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE, by calling at Bovan & Lavine's, will receive information as to their several places of entertainment. Those who come on the West Feliciana Railroad will be met at the depot. There is no public conveyance from Woodville to any point on the Jackson and New Orleans Railroad. The recent cold weather has removed all apprehensions of the fever; the town is now quite healthy.

Woodville, Nov. 11, 1858. J. J. WHEAT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The next Session commences in this city on Thursday, the 16th of December. Members, on arrival, will call at the Advocate Office, 112 Camp street, where they will be directed to their homes.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE SESSION.

To the Preachers of the Alabama Conference:

Dear Brethren—Those of you who intend coming to Macon, by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, can obtain a free Ticket by application at the Company's office in Mobile. Those who strike the Road at any other Station, will have to pay half fare. On reaching Macon, you will be received at the Station. Those who come by private conveyance will call at the store of Messrs. Fort, Badger & Dunwody.

We shall be glad to see as many of the Preachers the day previous to the opening of the Session, as can reach here.

Macon, Miss., Oct. 18th, 1858. W. E. M. LINFIELD.

THE PREACHES OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE, ON TAKING the Cars, will please give their names to the Conductor of the Train, and let him know you are members of the Conference. He will pass you free. W. E. M. L.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

A Successful Subtile.

Many years ago, a wealthy German merchant, residing in Mexico, became embarrassed in his affairs through speculation, and after an honorable struggle failed. This reverse of fortune appeared to him irreparable—no consolatory hope was to be seen on the horizon of the black desert of his future life. He despaired. His existence had become an insupportable burden to him, and he resolved to be rid of it. Still, he shrank from casting the disgrace of suicide on a name borne at home by honorable relations; so he devised a plan which would accomplish his purpose without casting suspicion of his having had suicidal intentions.

Over the crater of Popocatepetl hangs a dense cloud of sulphurous vapor, which issues in volumes from the depth of the abyss. Any near approach to the brink of the crater produces a suffocating sensation on every one who has ascended so far. A descent into the crater, therefore, was considered to be certain death. All this was well known to him; so he mentioned to his friends his intention to have a trip up the mountain, and he set out for it.

On the various slopes of the mountain are some villages of the aboriginal Indians. From the last of these he took two guides, with ropes and poles and other articles need in the ascent, and so reached the summit. There he ordered his guides to plant two poles crossways on the brink of the crater, as he wished to explore the interior. In vain they tried to dissuade him. He merely told them to wait for him, and on his signal to haul him up; then shutting his eyes and compressing his mouth and nostrils, he descended by the ropes into the yawning chasm.

His senses were in a whirl, his brain reeled, and the oppression on his respiratory organs made the terrors of death palpable. Still he persevered, and, clutching the rope convulsively, he continued his descent, when lo, on a sudden, all oppressiveness vanished, he felt it to be in a pure, respirable atmosphere, and in a few moments more he stood on firm ground!

He opened his eyes, and here indeed he was in another world. An immense dome of glittering yellow crystals, forming figures of infinite variety, was lit up by inextinguishable blue flames, flickering from cornices, from arabesques, and from deep recesses, or playing in increasing and decreasing jets on the walls of this unearthly hall, whose dome was propped by huge fluted columns of a glassy polish, resembling great bundles of reeds.

For a moment our hero, stupefied and astonished, doubted the evidence of his senses; for a moment he thought he had entered on another stage of his existence; that all around him was unreal, shadowy, a delusion of his whirling brain. But a dim glimpse of the distant opening above him, through which the white vapors which he in ascending spirals, and amid which, at moments, the clear azure atmosphere shone like a diamond, reminded him of the world above, and he then understood the world around him.

He now saw that he was in a cavern of sulphur formation, an inexhaustible mine of surphur crystals and fleur-de-soufre. His speculative spirit revived, for he perceived at a glance what immense wealth could be derived from what he now saw around him. A boundless horizon of hope now expanded in his heart, and while his eyes filled with tears of gratitude to his forgiving God, he gave the signal to be hauled up.

He now perceived that only very near the mouth of the crater the vapors became compressed and suffocating and that immediately below there was an atmosphere perfectly pure and salubrious. This mine of sulphur soon yielded him an immense fortune, and he returned to his own country a richer and perhaps a better man.

This mine of sulphur is worked to this day, and appears to be exhaustless. At the brink of this crater, where the hero of our tale descended, are still to be seen the two cross-posts by means of which he effected his escape.

A Thrilling Narrative.

Dr. H. Schoch, Professor at the Gymnasium, Cologne, one of the passengers saved in the ill-fated steamer Austria, and brought to New York in the British frigate Valorous, gives the following account of his perilous and distressing position when he was emphatically in extremis.

Describing his whereabouts when the first alarm of fire was given, when he went immediately in pursuit of his wife and child, whom he at last found on the quarter-deck, in a state of terror, he proceeds.

The flames were rapidly approaching us. My hand and person were severely scorched. My wife stood on deck by my side. One woman that I had been anxious to draw up was burnt to death. We were absolutely prevented from removing her. We stood on the quarter-deck as long as we could, or until the flames drove us back. I then took the child in my arms and fastened myself to a rope, my wife sitting across my shoulders. I let myself down into the sea, and tried to swim with them, having made up my mind to die with my wife and child. This was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The steamer was still running. The gunpowder exploded when we were about half an hour in the water. I clung to the rope and we were drawn along through the waves—the water was moderately smooth, at least there was not a high sea running. The water from the screw washed over us for about ten minutes, nearly drowning us. I tried hard to hold my child above the water—it was two and a half years old. My wife did all she could to assist me—holding the child with one hand, and with the other she clung to me. The waves came over us very violently, and forcibly washed the child away, and next my wife. I saw them no more. At the moment I lost hold of them, I was immersed under the water, and when I came to the surface they were gone from my sight. I had lost hold of the rope and took to swimming. After swimming a short time, I seized a stray plank and held on to it. Two other men contrived to attach themselves to this plank—they also are saved. We three resolved to stay on the plank until sunset, though we feared our strength would fail, and that we should be compelled to let go and go down ourselves. While making up our minds to this sad expectancy, one of my companions noticed a vessel, and endeavored to direct the plank towards it. We were so fortunate as to reach it, after two hours' effort. We were taken on board; it proved to be the Maurice, Captain Renaud.

"Another Harp in Heaven."

On our way from the office to our domicile, for weeks, as we nightly passed a small but neat tenement, through the window we noted a solitary couple, sitting by a little table on which dimly burned a common lamp, apparently absorbed in deep and solemn thought. The summer of life scarcely seemed to have touched them with its rosy fingers, and their constant abstraction, for this reason, attracted attention.

The frequency that that little cottage was passed at length made us, though never introduced, acquainted with its inmates. The lady at last bowed in answer to an inquiring look, as we passed her at the opened window, and finally we ventured to address a kind salutation, early in the morning when we saw the couple stirring.

Yesterday, as we came down the street, both came out to walk, and, as we went along together, we remarked. "The frost brings good cheer. It is a beam of sunlight in the city." "Not to us," was the sad reply. "Ah?" said we, inquiringly. "No, not to us!" sadly replied the lady; "one month since little feet danced around our hearth; a merry, silver-toned voice echoed musically in our ears; a golden light beamed in our house—but not now." "Yes," added the husband, consolingly, though he evidently needed its balm as much as his partner in sorrow; "Yes, but another harp is now tuned in heaven." And this was the secret of the gloomy vigils by that little table, with the lamp dimly lighting the room. Ah, in how many houses in this city has the light gone out and the music ceased since Summer, clothed in roses, was ushered in by the jocund Hours! How little do the great mass, who again, eagerly engage in the whirl of business, know of the sundered ties and the sad memories that cast gloom in hundreds of households!

A Clergyman in Search of a Fortune.

The Rev. Caswell Drake, of North Carolina, has sailed for Europe, to establish his claim as a descendant and heir of the famous Sir Francis Drake, the great admiral and navigator, who was appointed and knighted by Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Drake expects to succeed in making good his claim to the immense property belonging to the Drake estate, which now, like the "Jennings estate," is in want of an heir.

A Lady on the Quick-Sands.

WE FIND in the American Messenger an account of a lady, amiable and intelligent, and of decided character; but from family associations, and early culture, a decided Universalist. The writer says: By marriage she became connected with a religious family, all of whom were members of an evangelical church. The husband and her new relatives had made her the subject of many prayers, and they had assailed her, and her doctrines with perpetual arguments. They had also urged ministers, visiting the place, to the same. At length she became irritable, and refused to hear any argument or entreaty.

Becoming acquainted with the history of Mrs. A——, I was earnestly requested to see her, but was cautioned to be very careful in approaching the subject of her creed. I replied, that I feared what had been said to her already had confirmed her prejudice against evangelical religion, and that I had better say nothing. "That will not do," said the friends; "you must see her, but be cautious how you speak. She is in delicate health, and may not live long. We cannot bear to have her die so." "But," I said, "the prospect is very discouraging; you tell me that her parents and most of her relatives have been for years established in the doctrine that all will finally be saved; and they have instructed her from childhood in this doctrine, and confirmed her belief by their own example." "Yes." "Well, then, what can I expect to accomplish?"

Remembering an important maxim that "truth may glide into the mind through the channel of the affections, which, if addressed to the understanding merely, would meet with a certain repulse," I called upon Mrs. A——, and after speaking of the insufficiency of worldly good, and the consolations of piety, I remarked, "Your friends are anxious about your health and religious state, and they wished me to visit you; but I understand that much has been said, and by many." "Yes, I have been talked to death, and I am tired of the very word religion." "I think your friends, in their anxiety for your good, may have erred: they should have sought to lead you to act more from your own sense of duty; for religion is a concern between yourself and God. I will not trouble you with any arguments. I am told that you are decided in the belief that all mankind will finally be saved." "If you are right, there is no need of argument, or anxiety. But if you trust your eternal interests to such a foundation, you should be very sure; for it will be an awful thing to find yourself deceived when it is too late for salvation. If the evangelical doctrine, as we understand it, is true, we are on the safer ground; and if your broad creed should prove to be right, we are equally safe. The advantage therefore is with us. Now, my dear friend, will you allow me to suggest a serious and a prayerful examination of this matter. You wish to be on safe ground." "I do, certainly," she replied in a softened tone. "We agree then, in this. Will you now ask God to enlighten and guide you in searching for the truth, so that you may build your house upon a rock?" She made no reply, but I hoped a salutary impression had been made, and withdrew, promising to call again.

On my next visit, I merely inquired for the result of her examination. "I have not falsified yet," she answered, "but I do not feel so sure as I did." "Well I will wait for the conclusion, and call again." My abrupt departure seemed to surprise her, but from her solemnity and tremulous speech I believed the Spirit of truth, was leading her to the Lamb of God, and I feared that I might interrupt the incipient work of grace.

Calling the third time, the poor woman broke out in tears and violent sobbing as I entered the room. "Have you finished your examination?" I tenderly asked. "Yes, I have." The peculiar emphasis and flowing tears that accompanied the confession, for a moment deprived me of utterance. Regaining my self-possession, I replied, "Then, I will show you a more excellent way, and the foundation." Regarding her as "a bruised reed," and enabled to gentleness myself, I set before her the precious promises of God, the nature of saving faith, the love of Christ, and the blessedness of those who put their trust in him. I had not hitherto offered prayer in her presence, for of this she had been weary; and she had made no request to be remembered at the throne of grace. But now she felt the importance of prayer, and I closed my last interview with a fervent supplication on her behalf. The next day I left town, and saw her no more.

Years passed away. I was at a distance, and heard nothing of the results of my labor of love. I did not write to inquire, from a false delicacy perhaps. One day I took a letter from the post-office. I could not at first comprehend the meaning. But suddenly, like invisible ink before the flame, the whole became intelligible. The friends of Mrs. A—— had learned my residence. Long had they been anxious to inform me, that soon after my departure she became a decided Christian; had recovered her health after her conversion; had united with the church; was the most burning and shining light in it; and would give much to see me again.

One word of comment. By putting on "the gentleness of Christ," we can find our way to the heart of an unbeliever, when we could not take by storm the fortress of the understanding. "He that winneth souls is wise."

The Princess Mary.

An American gentleman writing from the Rhine, mentions the following interesting incident of the Princess Mary:

A small boat set us on a passing steamer at this place, when we found that we had royal travelers aboard. The Princess Mary, second daughter of Queen Victoria, with the Duchess of Cambridge and retinue, bound for a Rhine and Swiss trip. The Princess is healthy, good-natured, pleasing, but not beautiful, and decidedly stout and large for a girl of sixteen. She laughed and chatted most vigorously, with her attendants, sometimes in English, but mostly in French. She was on deck looking at the sights, "Murray" in hand, like any other tourist.

For a long time she was on the forward deck, where the third class passengers ride, which is the best place to see, but the rain drove us all back beneath the canvass covering of the after deck. She did not take to the cabin until long after dark, notwithstanding it was decidedly unpleasant on deck. From Wiesbaden we went to Frankfort on the Main, by railroad, and spent a few hours looking at this noted old city.

We visited the old Cathedral and climbed its spire, and from this point got a good idea of the plan of the city. The Cathedral is very ancient, and is almost surrounded by mean buildings, shutting out a good view of it. It contains the usual number of palutings, relics, and other gewgaws of Catholic churches. The spire is nearly three hundred feet high, and is unfinished; it was originally intended to be much higher, but only reached its present height when the work stopped, some centuries ago. The fire-watch lives on top with his family; emphatically "high-life," for I we compute by stories of ordinary height, this family must live at least thirty stories high. The usual household operations were going on at that height. Before leaving Frankfort we visited the American Consul, and the various ambassadors necessary to visit Switzerland, and the adjoining countries. The Austrian Consul would give us no permit to enter Austrian Italy, saying, "We have positive orders not to Vive American passports for Italy." The traveler must go hundreds of miles to get the desired permit.

Napoleon on Medicine.

Of medicine, too, he was fond of talking, and with those of its practitioners whom he most esteemed—with Corvisart at Paris, and with Antonomarchi at St. Helena. "Believe me," he said to the last, "we had better leave off all these remedies: life is a fortress which neither you nor I know anything about. Why throw obstacles in the way of its defence? Its own means are superior to all the apparatus of your laboratories. Corvisart candidly agreed with me, that all your filthy mixtures are good for nothing. Medicine is a collection of uncertain prescriptions, the results of which, taken collectively, are more fatal than useful to mankind. Water, air, and cleanliness, are the chief articles in my pharmacopœia."

Bells.

Paulinus, Bishop of Mola, is said to have been the inventor of bells. The Jews used trumpets instead of bells, except in the garments of the high priest. The Turks do not permit them. Our ancestors kept good hours in consequence of bells; for William the Conqueror commanded the curfew (i. e. coverfire) bell to ring at eight in the evening, so that all should then put out their fires and go to bed.

Letters to Eastern Monarchs.

Our Presidents appear to be getting into the habit of writing letters to Oriental monarchs, and the latter seem quite pleased with the compliments thus paid them. Mr. Fillmore wrote to the Emperor of Japan, and not long ago Mr. Buchanan tried his hand at a similar feat to the Emperor of Burmah, by whom, it will be seen by the extract below, it has been received with all the honors. Intelligence has been received from Ava, of a magnificent reception given to Rev. Mr. Kincaid and Rev. Dr. Dawson, Baptist Missionaries, by the King of Burmah. Mr. Kincaid, it will be remembered, was the bearer of a letter from the President to the King. A royal zayet was built for the reception of the letter, and a long procession was formed to convey it from the zayet to the royal city. It was opened by order of an under Secretary of the State, translated into Burmese, and presented by the chief Minister to his Majesty. It gave great satisfaction to the monarch and all the court. Mr. Kincaid and Dr. Dawson had two personal interviews with the King, in which he expressed himself with great frankness, and intimated his wish to have an American consul at his court.

In some respects the King spoke like a Christian philosopher, like a man possessing good sterling common sense, who was deeply imbued with the responsibility of his exalted position, and desirous, so far as he was able, as King of Burmah, to discharge his duty towards his country, and to live at peace with the rest of the world. Before leaving the royal presence, I begged the favor of a piece of ground on which to build a mission-house hereafter. He instantly replied that he would not only give a piece of ground, but would also build me a house. I thanked him for the liberal offer, and remarked that I would by and by avail myself of it.

Masons in South America.

A correspondent of a New York paper, writing from Buenos Ayres under date of September 10th, says:

The waves of progress break upon our shores as well as yours, and the equilibrium of past ages is jostled into a more than common ferment. A few days ago a gentleman in this city died. He was unmarked by vice, and undistinguished by such virtues as make a man's name widely known, but he was a Mason. Masonic friendship visited him, and without ostentation, buried him. He was a good Catholic. As usual in respectable families here, a notice appeared in the daily's announcing the day of the funeral solemnities. The notice appeared on Sunday, announcing Monday as the day for the funerals. On Sunday evening, the Bishop of the diocese issued an order closing the church for that day, and all churches were equally closed against that service. At the time appointed, some friends, and perhaps, one hundred Masons assembled, and found not only the doors closed, but the iron gates in front locked. The friends dispersed, but the Masons proceeded at once in a body to the house of the Governor, (de facto President,) and, through a spokesman, laid the matter before him. He heard them with respect, and advised them to make proper application to the Government, and have this matter regularly investigated, which, for the present, was satisfactory.

The Queen and the Pope.

Under this head the Liverpool Evening Mail states that a series of maneuvers have been commenced in the great war between the Queen and Pope, which may probably lead to a pitched and decisive battle. Says the Mail:

The field of operations is the old one, of the National Education Commission, and the hosts upon each side have, we understand, been mustered in force. It appears that some time ago a memorial was addressed to the Board of National Education by a number of inhabitants of Sligo, including, it is said, some priests, asking for the establishment of a model-school in that locality. The request was complied with, the necessary ground procured, and steps taken to commence building, when the Roman Catholic Bishop commanding the Pope's troops in Sligo issued an order to the commissioners to desist. They refused. It is further said, unanimously, and the Bishop proceeded to order all loyal subjects of the Pope to withdraw their names from the memorial. He then communicated the fact of his having given that order, and of his having been obeyed, to the Board, and informed them that the Roman Synod of Ireland had forbidden their attempt to introduce learning into his diocese, intimating that if they did not immediately yield, more stringent measures would be taken. The commissioners, we have heard, again, unanimously refused to surrender, and at that point the matter now stands.

The Widow of the Sulptor Crawford.

We mentioned the recent departure of this estimable lady for Italy, and it may be desirable for lovers of art and native genius to know that her object in revisiting Rome is to superintend, in person, the fulfillment of her gifted husband's last wishes in regard to the completion of several works partially executed at the time of his death. Crawford's studio has continued open and his workmen active since that melancholy event which has only tended to add a new, though sad attraction, to the scene of his prolific toil. His house has remained with all its precious articles of virtu and its many valuable works of art—precisely as he left it two years ago. Many complete models of half finished statues give ample employment to his master workman—who is familiar with his method and plans, and is conscientiously elaborating them. It is thought that two years more will be required to achive the commissions—both government and private. The present, therefore, is a rare opportunity to secure good copies of Crawford's favorite works, under the supervision of his very competent agent and from the original models. It is hoped the entire collection of casts will yet be secured and kept together, either in New York his native city, or here where his memory is so fondly cherished.

Auricular Telegraphing.

The telegraph operators become so skillful that they can dispense with the paper ribbon on which the signals are recorded, and read by the ear from the ticking of the machine. A recent proof of the value of this power was exhibited in the case of an accident between Cleveland and Buffalo. The "Plain Dealer" says, the cars were interrupted, and and stopped several miles from a station Mr. Anson Segar, General Superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, happened to be on board. He drew from his pocket a machine about the size of a pin's capacity, cut the telegraph wire so as to attach his machine both was, called an engine and sufficient number of cars to bring workmen and forward on the passengers at once—catching from the little click of his pet machine, by ear, any inquiries, he promptly answered all, and approaching trains were notified of the interruption so as to act accordingly.

Talleyrand.

If brevity is the soul of wit, Talleyrand was the greatest of wits. A single word was often sufficient for his keenest retort. When a hypochondriac, who had notoriously led a profligate life, complained to the diplomatist that he was "enduring the torments of hell," the answer was "Deja?"—(Already?) To a lady who had lost her husband, Talleyrand once addressed a letter of condolence in two words, "O, madam!"—In less than a year the lady had married again, and then his letter of congratulation was, "Ah, madame!" Could any thing be more wittily significant than the "O" and the "Ah" of this sententious correspondence?

The Tea-Plant.

In addition to the measures taken some months ago to introduce the tea-plant into the United States, from China, inquiries have been made by the Patent-Office, through Mr. Meade, our Minister to Brazil, for obtaining tea-seed from that country, where it has been successfully cultivated for thirty years. Measures are about being taken, through the Naval Expedition to Paraguay, to introduce into the United States the mate, or Paraguay tea; also a valuable medicinal plant, called nard, believed to be a sure specific against the bites of venomous insects or reptiles; and a peculiar kind of honey-bee, which builds on branches of trees, instead of in hives or trunks of trees, as with the common bee.

A non-Slaveholding Colony.

Mr. Cobb, in his book, just published, on the law of slavery, speaking of the American colonies, says: they "Georgia is the only colony in which slavery was positively prohibited by its organic law. Rum, papists, and negroes were all excluded from the new colony." Times have changed, and all three are there now.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

JAMES D. LONG died in Sumpter county, Alabama, on the 18th of October, 1858, after a short illness, in his 68th year. Brother Long was born in Russell county, Virginia, on the 29th March, 1791; emigrated to North Alabama, in 1818, and from thence, to Sumpter county, in 1844, where he remained till his death. He was an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and had been such, for about eighteen years previous to his death. In his last hours he expressed himself resigned to the will of God, and prepared for the change. The community has lost a useful citizen, and the Christian Church a consistent and exemplary member. J. M. HOOD.

MRS. MARTHA ANNE McGAW, wife of Mr. John McGaw, and daughter of Jourdan and Frances Baley, was born in Amelia county, Virginia, Nov. 20, 1831. In early life she, with her parents, emigrated to and settled in Holmes county, Mississippi. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, some ten or twelve years since; and lived a faithful and consistent member. After many months of suffering, from consumption, she triumphantly passed away from earth on the 14th of October last, to the bright abodes of the blessed. Her last moments were, truly, moments of pure seraphic joy. While just lingering on the shores of time, she rejoiced in view of the change that awaited her. The last words she was heard to utter, were, "Heaven is my home." A.

ALEXANDER HALLAS, was born in Scotland, February, 1798, and died, at his residence in Green county, Alabama, October 25, 1858. He was well in the morning, and while engaged in regulating something about his gin, his head and arm were caught by the saws, and very badly mangled; from which, or the shock caused by it, he died before night. He was a man of the most reliable integrity, and was largely imbued with the most kind and neighborly feelings; and hence, he was most deservedly held in esteem. His wife and children, inconsolable at their loss, show plainly how well he filled the relations of husband and father. He was a humane master, caring for the bodies and souls of his servants. For more than thirty years, he had been an exemplary and useful member of the Methodist Church. At the time of his death, he was the class-leader at Trinity on the Belmont charge. He was one of the laymen that labored so faithfully in the recent revival, at Trinity. During that meeting he was heard to say, that he was never so happy before in all his life. A short time before he died, he told his wife and children that he was perfectly willing to die; would rather go than not; but, if it was the will of the Lord, he was willing to remain and suffer, as he must if he lived. What a triumph of grace over nature. It was common for saint and sinner to speak of him as "a good man."

YELLOW FEVER! YELLOW FEVER!

TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS:
Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately. It cures burns, bites, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been exported there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at, J. WRIGHT, & CO'S. Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. s22

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND
IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from sassafras root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a PANACEA or CATHOLICON than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Forbyce, Brodie, Lugol, Coindet, Baron, Bardsley, Manson, Ricord, Cendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Syphilis, Mercury, Minter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints, Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Leprosy, Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Forbyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Ulceration of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts, Chorea, etc., Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel-Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, etc.

McGOWN'S LOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

THE GREATEST
Medical Discovery
OF THE AGE.

MR. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures

EVERY KIND OF HUMOR,

From the worst Scrofula down to a Common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases, both thunder humor. He has now in his possession over one hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two or three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst canker in the mouth and stomach.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of Erysipelas.

One or two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the ears and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corns and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruptions of the skin.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the worst kind of ringworm.

Two or three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the rheum.

Five to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the above quantity is taken.

Nothing looks so improbable to those who have in vain tried all the wonderful medicines of the day, as that a common weed growing on the pastures, and along old stone walls, should cure every humor in the system; yet it is a fixed fact. If you have a humor, it has to start. There are no PILLS nor ANIS, human nor bar's about curing some cases, but not yours. I peddled over a thousand bottles of it in the vicinity of Boston. I know the effects of it in every case. It has already done some of the greatest cures ever done in Massachusetts. I give it to children a year old, to old people of sixty. I have seen poor, puny, wormy-looking children, whose flesh was soft and flabby, restored to a perfect state of health by one bottle.

To those who are subject to a sick head ache, one bottle will always cure it. It gives great relief in catarrh and dizziness. Some who have taken it had been costive for years, and have been regulated by it. Where the body is sound it works quite easy, but where there is any derangement of the functions of nature, it will cause very singular feelings, but you must not be alarmed; they always disappear in from four days to a week. There is never a bad result from it; on the contrary, when that feeling is gone you will feel yourself like a new person. I heard some of the most extravagant assertions of it that ever man listened to.

Manufactured by DONALD KENNEDY, No. 120 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass. Price $1 per bottle.

LETTER FROM NAZARETH.

En route for Damascus—Tombs of the Judges—View of Jerusalem—Recations—Valley of Acalon—Birth-place of Saul, and Jacob's Ladder—Valley of Shiloh—Jacob's Well—Nablous—River of Samaria—Bochalon.

We left Jerusalem for Damascus the last day of March, in company with five Americans; Gov. S. and lady, from New Jersey; Col. B. and lady, from Nashville, Tennessee, and Mr. C., from Virginia; Dragoman and attendants, making a caravan of twenty horses and mules, with our tents and baggage.

The weather was fine, our health and spirits good for the undertaking. We passed around, by the tombs of the Judges, and entered two of them; one, exceedingly large, containing several chambers. In one we counted twenty-one niches around its sides, one row above another, similar to the ancient sepulchres, cut out of solid rock. All the rooms were fitted up in this way for the interment of the dead, except one with two arched recesses, like those of the Kings, on its sides. The hills about Jerusalem are full of tombs of this character—though the entrance of the Kings and Judges are distinguished by a chiselled cornice, with wreathes and flowers.

We ascended a hill which commanded a fine view of Jerusalem, turned around and took a last look of the place so honored of God as to be typical of the Church of Christ. "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O! city of God. And of Zion it shall be said, this man was born in her, and the Highest Himself shall establish her." We stood and looked at its walls and towers, with the hills of Bethlehem rising above it in the distance, which once shone with the light of Heaven, by the presence of angels, hovering over the consecrated spot where the Saviour was born, and the star led the shepherds to the manger, where He lay, and came to worship Him. The mountains around about Jerusalem were all invested with a deep and thrilling interest, associated as they were with Scriptural events, where the display of Almighty power has been manifested by infinite wisdom to benefit the human race, and to lead them to the knowledge of the true God. Detached from those associations few would visit these regions. The city appeared lovely, embosomed in the mountains of Judea, which surround it, softened by the blue haze of a clear atmosphere. The Mount of Olives, hallowed by the recollection of so many reminiscences of our Saviour's life, passion and death, held us spell-bound as we gazed upon its brow for the last time, though comparatively a plain among the other mountains, as we viewed it, with Jerusalem lying beyond.

The impression of the picturesque scene will never be forgotten. We had seen the sacred and frequented walks of our Savior, and the Prophets—treasured up thoughts, which cast a halo of light upon the mind, in its earthly pilgrimage, increasing our love and attachment to the Bible, which brings life and immortality to light from the grave. It appears as though an infidel must lose his scepticism, to enter Palestine, Jerusalem, and its environs, to see Scriptural truths so perfectly delineated, and its prophecies fulfilled—and to see this sacred volume in the hands of all as the true guide book to all its plans.

Our ride all the morning was through a rocky country, rough and barren, though marked with peculiar interest. On our left, beyond a hill called Thibbie Samuel, the Tomb of Samuel, near the valley of Ajalon, where Joshua was magnified in the sight of Israel, and said, Sun stand still upon Gideon; and thou moon in the valley of Ajulon. So the sun stood still in the midst of Heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day." Whatever appearance the country now presents, it is unique to look upon it, with these reflections, without a deep and lasting interest.

Along our way a conical shaped hill, with the appearance of ruins upon the top, was said to be the birth-place of Saul, the first King of Israel. We stopped at the beautiful antique fountain of El Hamereych, called the fountain of Mary and Joseph, where they missed the child Jesus, who was still behind them in Jerusalem, disputing with the doctors in the temple. It was a lovely stream of water, walled in, where a multitude of native women were washing their clothes in its large stone cisterns. Not far off, at our right, rose the hill where Jacob slept upon a pillar of stone, when the vision of the ladder reaching to heaven, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon it, appeared in his sight, and he erected this pillar of stone upon the spot, anointing it with oil, and calling the place Bethel—the site was before us, crowned with its holy associations. The hills and valleys became more fruitful, and lost their barren aspect by some vegetation refreshing to the sight, and by villages of considerable beauty.

Air Hroot was very lovely, upon the brow of a hill, with an oak along its side of remarkable size. We pitched our tents in the valley of El Gib, between lofty hills, crowned with terraced walls, and planted with olives to the very summits.

The next day we entered the valley of Shiloh, very rich and beautiful, and surrounded by hills of great variety. A ruin called Mosk Selim, said to be an ancient Church, evidently of Roman origin—its columns, with Corinthian capitals, lay upon the ground, half buried in earth; its doorway was adorned with a sculptured cornice, still visible, though worn away considerably by time. The ruin was interesting. Opposite this, upon another lovely hillside, was a fountain, with a large venerable oak of antiquity, which tradition marks as the site of the place of the tabernacle, where the young Samuel was brought by his mother to Shiloh, who dedicated him to God, and that here was the place where the Lord spoke to him. The fountain is walled in. A place higher up the valley, among the rocks, another fountain in the valley pointed out where the daughters of Shiloh came out to dance, and the Benjaminites carried them off for wives. The little valley was surrounded by hills in a retired spot, well suited for their amusement, as the women of this eastern world keep up the same custom now of dancing and arousing themselves, detached from the society of men.

In the evening we stopped at the well of Jacob, the reputed one where our Savior talked with the woman of Samaria, and said unto her, "the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." At this well we felt the power of those remarkable words which were spoken, and carried back to the city by her at that time which was not after off—Nablous, the ancient Seebem where we were bound; the hallowed precepts were felt in all their bearings, and set home upon the heart as fresh, and responsible, as when just delivered eighteen hundred years ago, by our Savior passing through those places, hallowed by his divine presence. The well is supplied with water no longer, but fallen in, and appears beneath like a rocky cave hollowed out by the hand of nature—it is upon a little hilly knoll before a rich valley extending along the range of hills crowned with vines in many places, though the heights of some are rocky and barren. Before reaching Nablous—a secluded, shady grove, amidst walks and gardens—we saw two or three hundred Mahomedan women and children, on some fete occasion, amusing themselves by various sports among the trees—dressed in their gayest costumes, in full enjoyment; ropes were fastened to the trees in every direction, where they were swinging, and playing in the merriest mood possible; their picturesque appearance was truly novel and interesting to us, as peculiar to their country.

We rode through this oriental city of Nablous among its bazars, which appeared to be crowded with people well dressed, and better looking than in some of the bazars of other cities. All kinds of produce and goods filled its stalls, and various trades and mechanics were in full operation.

The descendents of the Samaritans still occupied a position in the city, and have one antiquated Samaritan Church, where one hundred and fifty are said to worship. We camped outside its walls in a beautiful place, near which flowed a clear stream of water in a rapid current down a sloping hill. An abundance of fruit trees grow in great luxuriance; among them the quince was in full bloom—then the fig, pomegranate, apricot, almond, peach, apple, plum, pear and other fruits flourish together in rich profusion. Fruits and grain supply the inhabitants with food, and as for clothing, among the poorer class that is of small consideration, for they have but little of it; they wrap themselves in a shawl or blanket, belted around the waist, with sometimes an additional scarf thrown across the shoulders—a fez or turban crowns their heads—they have no use for hats. The lepers are seen around all these cities, the most poor, miserable objects of compassion that we have ever beheld; in the morning thirteen assembled around us, as beggars, with hands extended, but they were found to be thieves, and stole two guns which belonged to the party.

The environs of Seehem were very fine, presenting all the variety which is calculated to interest and strike the attention of a traveler. The valley all along the way was narrow but well watered, exceedingly fruitful, and luxuriant, and beautiful in prospect, to supply the wants of man.

In the morning our ride was through a romantic country of hills and valleys, and most lovely streams of water flowing among them. We soon came in sight of the river Sebaste, the ancient Samaria of the Bible; its hills were most beautiful in the distance, with columns relieved by trees, and its brow crowned with crumbling towers. As we approached nearer and objects became distinct, we were more delighted than in the perspective. The Church of St. John is in front and occupies the whole site and covers a large space ground with its walls now enclosing a Mosk, of modern date; but the ruined tower of the old Church which was like a shaft seen at a distance adds to the beauty of the scene, and fills out the foreground of the picture in artistic style. We rode through the city, among the mud walls of the low Arabs and around its environs where the colonnade row extended up the hill side at a great length, reaching the summit, which we saw at a distance, appearing as if adorned with an ancient temple. It was astonishing to see such a multitude of these shafts standing, half buried in the earth, and where they were first placed either for ornamenting rows of palaces or an arched promenade. The highest eminence, the terrace, was wider, and the columns extended back, which were evidently designed for the court of a temple. There were hundreds of these columns around this city—some lay upon the ground horizontally, but the most were standing. The views from its lofty towers were truly magnificent, and we might well imagine what it was when ornamented with the luxury of Roman taste—for beauty, elegance and architectural grandeur.

The highest eminence upon a hill above the city, is said to command a view of the Mediterranean and other prominent places of interest. We rode around upon its hill side and down another valley. At the base of this city, upon that side overlooking a still lower plain, was a wide field or terrace, where columns were seen standing along its centre, which must have been a place for magnificent palaces of unrivalled beauty; above a wild romantic rocky dell, down which we rode with some difficulty, and round among its hills and valleys of great variety.

We had our encampment before the site of the town Jenin—the ancient Engannim of Scripture, Josh., xix, 21—built upon the hill side of a rocky eminence; in the foreground, a mosque and minaret, relieved by lofty palm trees, which added much to its picturesque beauty. Several other domes, back of these, filled out the design, more agreeable to the sight than bare walls of mud, or rock, as in many places. The people at this place flocked around us—men, women and children—in idle curiosity, creating a sensation of fear, as we are obliged to be guarded against thieves. Buchshish is the cry everywhere.

The next day we entered the valley of Esdelon, where so many events have transpired of scriptural interest. The valley is wide and very extensive, bordered on both sides by mountains familiar in Bible history. The valley appeared rich and fertile, but poorly cultivated; some grain, but most of it pasturage, where the wild Arabs have their encampments, and feed their large flocks of sheep, goats and camels. Their tents were strung all along our route. The sheiks occasionally met us, riding up to our caravan, with the long lance upon their shoulders, scanning us with an eye of scrutiny, then riding off with rapidity upon their steeds, with a bird-like fleetness quite unrivaled—their silk shawl tied with camel's rope round their heads, with its corners floating in the breeze, and their scarfs upon their shoulders flying in the wind, have peculiar grace. They are a fearful looking race of daring spirits.

EAST ALABAMA CORRESPONDENCE.

Alabama Educational Institutions.—Faculty of Auburn Male College.

Mr. Editor: You have doubtless marked with pleasure the grand educational schemes projected by the Alabama Conference. At Greensborough, the Southern University is laying its foundations deep and strong, for extensive and permanent benefit to all the youths who may seek instruction within its classic walls. West Alabama is handsomely provided for in educational facilities. Tuskaloosa has the University of the State, with a large endowment and a very able faculty. Southern University, about forty-two miles distant, with a large enlawment also, and with an able faculty in perspective. Then, nineteen miles farther south, in the town of Marion, is the Howard College, a Baptist Institution, fully officered and well patronized. A little lower down, at Summerfield, is a male school under the presidency of Reverend Mr. Connerly, where advantages are enjoyed for obtaining an education almost equal to those in a college. So much for West Alabama. Well, what is East Alabama doing for the rising generation? It has not done all for them that it might have done. There have been in successful operation schools of high order in our section of the State for both sexes. But our great want has been a male college, with a good financial basis, an eligible location combining healthfulness and accessibility, a thorough course of study, and a faculty qualified to teach it. This want is about to be supplied by the East Alabama Male College at Auburn. We are getting on finely with the model basis. The friends of the Institution are showing it marked liberality through the calls of its active Agent, Reverend E. J. Hamill. A bee hardly seeks honey more busily and with greater zest than does he the material aid to carry forward the enterprise; his soul and hands and prayers are all in it; for he looks upon it as providential in its conception and glorious in its designs; being about to enter upon the great mission of educating the head and heart of those who are to shape the destinies of this magnificent Republic. May it please our Heavenly Master to prosper his efforts and to permit his success to be commensurate with his desires.

In regard to the healthfulness of Auburn, it is almost proverbial. Professor Darby, in a lecture before its citizens, a few nights ago, remarked that its atmosphere combined all the elements necessary to this, and that too in quantities equal to any other place he knew of in the world. There is to be found here a large supply of ozone, a sort of scavenger and purifier of the atmosphere. Where it abounds there are seldom found many cases of malignant fever such as yellow, bilious, &c. From the geological survey of Professor Tuomey, late of our State University, I am told that Auburn has been ascertained to be the highest point in the State, save one, and that is said to be Rockford, in Coosa county. Indeed, Auburn is reported to be several feet higher than the Look-Out Mountain. Its past history establishes its healthfulness. The people of Montgomery (at least some of them) are spending a portion of the summer months in that town. The air to such is peculiarly balmy and invigarating, and then it is so very easily reached by the West-Point and Montgomery Railroad.

The college building is approximating completion, and is unexcelled, I imagine, in spaciousness, grandeur and substantialness, by any edifice for similar purposes in the South. It affords a real pleasure to stand in its front and contemplate its mechanical execution and its noble proportions. It will accommodate, I should think, four or five hundred students, and I hope to see the day when it shall be taxed to its utmost capacity, and when it shall send out, each successive year, scores of students who shall be at once a blessing and an adornment to their nation. The age demands men, and women of full and perfect development, mental, physical, and moral; who shall understand, and feel and perform all the obligations of human life, in the various ramified relations to home, society and country.

It is understood that the Board of Trustees have elected for the East Alabama Male College a president and faculty, a larger portion of whom, and perhaps all, have signified their willingness to accept. Dr. Sasnett, formerly of Oxford, is the President; he is, as you know, a good and great man, a man of original thought, fine scholarship, and scriptural piety. His noble contributions to Methodist literature have secured for him a warm place in Methodist hearts.

Mr. Jno. T. Dunklin, now of Selma, has been made Professor of ancient languages. This gentleman was educated under Bishop Paine, Professor Tutwiler, and Dr. Carlos Smith, three men as well qualified to educate a young man as any other three who could be intrusted with so important a work. His long experience, his ripe scholarship, and his known success as a teacher, together with the testimonials of his instructors, give him a position among the educators of our State, which few possess. Reverend Mr. Harrison, of the Alabama Conference, and author of "Theophilus Walton," is made adjunct Professor of languages. To name him, is to know him and to appreciate the wisdom of the selection. Professor Darby, now a savan in natural sciences, fills that Chair. Professor Tilem, of Georgia, is elected to the Chair of mathematics; he is a graduate of Oxford, Georgia, and has been some time teaching young men. Bishop Pierce and other scholars regard him as singularly qualified for this department. The College is to open in October, 1859.

SOUTH-WESTERN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

To the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Dear Sir: As Chairman of the Board of Directors of the S. W. Sunday School Union, it is made my duty, respectfully to solicit your insertion of the following remarks, in regard to our General Agent, the Reverend Mr. Cleghorn, called forth by the paragraphs that appeared in your paper in August and September last.

We believe it will be a privilege to you, as a Christian, to correct any erroneous impressions or statements that may have gone abroad, through the columns of your paper, derogatory to the character of a good man.

The late prevailing epidemic, with its consequent duties, also the summer absence of most of our members, must be a sufficient apology to Mr. Cleghorn for the time which, as a Board, we have allowed to pass by without vindicating his character and mission, a duty which, of right, devolves upon us, as his employers.

The Reverend E. B. Cleghorn is the duly commissioned Agent of the South-western Sunday School Union, a legally chartered Institution.

In the furtherance of the designs of our Society, Mr. Cleghorn has been sent by us to make known its plans and purposes, and to solicit aid and co-operation from all such Christian men and good citizens, as would feel disposed to extend the same. In this work, we are pleased to say he has met with a fair measure of success.

With reference to the special charge made against our Agent by your correspondents, we think we will best reply in his own words. He writes to us: "I have never intimated about the Methodist Church or any other Church, as a Church, is engaged in, or interested in, or at work for our Union. Such is not the case, and I never so state it.

"I always state that it is a voluntary Union, not of Churches, but of individuals, and that our officers are chosen equally from the members of the different evangelical denominations. I shall feel thankful to any one who will show me how to make a more simple and direct statement.

"I never state that we 'deliver over' our Union Sunday Schools, or that we have any control over them whatever."

Mr. Cleghorn, we will add, is a minister of good reputation, and in good standing with the denomination to which he belongs, and we believe him to be an upright, truthful Christian man, and a gentleman, else he would not enjoy our confidence.

It is almost superfluous to add, that should it be made to appear that we are in error, our business relations with him would cease; and further, that as Christian men, we could not accept any donations obtained by misrepresentation.

Other things are said in the articles in your journal, alluded to, but as they can scarcely be claimed to fall under the head of either fact or argument, we consider them foreign to our reply. Our sole wish is in a calm, temperate and Christian-like spirit, to set our Agent right in the estimation of the Methodist Church, a body to which some of us belong, and to which, as Christian men, we all accord the need of most valuable and efficient labors in the service of our common Lord and Master.

At some future period we would claim it of your courtesy, and as a matter of justice, to permit us to correct some misconceptions into which you have fallen with respect to the tendency and spirit of our Society.

In behalf of the Board of Directors of the S. W. S. S. Union, I remain respectfully, E. C. Payne, Chairman, Board of Directors S. W. S. S. Union.

LENGTH OF THE DAYS DURING CREATION.

Mr. Editor: During the early part of this year, and before your editorial connection with this paper, several pieces appeared in it on the above named subject, but headed "First Light;", in some of which were advocated the doctrine now prevailing considerably, I suppose, that the days during which creation took place, instead of being days of twenty-four hours, were periods of years or ages; in another of which, written by myself, this opinion was opposed. I also wrote another piece, and sent it; but, I suppose, on account of General Conference matter, it was not published.

Now, by your permission, I will take it up again; not that I expect to adduce any new matter, or merely for the sake of controversy; but because I think the opinion advocated by the writers on the other side are in conflict with the Bible, and unnecessary to the truth of the science of geology. I am aware that, by opposing this "long day" theory, I am placing myself in opposition to many learned men, and some of them Christian men. But this weighs not with me. If I think I am right on any subject, I am not going to recant, until I am convinced that I am wrong; and especially where the meaning of the Word of God is involved. I think there is, now-a-days, entirely too much yielding to the notion, that the meaning of the Bible must be whittled down to suit the opinions of scientific men.

I do not intend here to review the piece to which I referred, as having been published; for very few, perhaps, will have remembered it. But I wish merely to give some of my reasons for believing as I do. And in doing this, I have the satisfaction to know that I have on my side many wise and good men.

The following, then, are some of my reasons:

1. The word "day," if I remember rightly, is nowhere else in the writings of Moses used in a figurative sense. He scarcely ever, if at all, uses any figures. His writings are in plain, simple, though sublime narrative of matters of fact, just as they occurred. In determining the meaning of an author, we must examine his style—notice what meaning he gives to a word generally. It matters not how other inspired writers may have used the word "day," or "week;" what we have to do in this case is to find out how Moses uses it. If then we find, on examination, that he never, on any other occasion, uses the word "day" to signify a period of years, we should study a good while before we give it that meaning here.

2. If the first two or three days were periods, so must the seventh have been, since there is no change in the manner in which the length of that day is spoken of, from that in which the length of the other is spoken of—the manner of speaking of each is exactly the same. But it would be absurd to suppose that the Sabbath was of such a great length.

3. If the days were of such unnatural length, what would become of vegetation during the long night that must have succeeded its creation? If light, as well as heat, be necessary to the growth and maturity of vegetation, it certainly would have perished during that night. But, suppose it could have grown and matured, of what use would it have been, since beasts and man were not created until several days afterwards; and, according to the long-day theory, a very long time must have elapsed before their creation? Can we suppose that God would have had the whole vegetable kingdom growing and producing fruit and seed for so long a time for no purpose?

4. I will admit that geological formations may exist, which are in such a state as to have required much more than six thousand years to bring them to their present condition, if we suppose them to have been brought to that state by what are called the laws of nature; but it is not necessary to suppose this; for God could just as easily have created everything in a state of maturity, or perfection, at once, as to have waited for the laws of nature, supposing them to have been established, to bring it to that state, by "precipitation" and "crystalization." The whole difficulty, then, is gotten over by referring the creation of everything, in that state of perfection necessary for the use of man, or whatever use it was designed for, immediately to the the creative power of God.

We have no more reason or right to believe it was necessary for God to wait on the laws of nature, in the formation of the earth and its various minerals, than in the creation of man.

Doubtless if, as Mr. Granville Penn supposes, one of the bones of Adam could now be found, in a state of preservation, and examined, it would appear to have been formed in the very same manner as a bone of one of the present generation; but we know it was not. If then, God could and did form man a perfect man at once, why may He not have created everything in the same way. He certainly could, and I believe He did; and by looking at it in this light we get over the whole difficulty. The fact is, the whole creation was a miracle, or a work performed by the immediate creative energy of Omnipotence, without the intervention of the so-called "laws of nature," which were not then in operation, but were established afterwards. We might consider the world as a vast machine, every part of which must be made and put to its proper place, before it receives that motion which it is intended to have ever afterwards.

5. The history of the creation and its concomitants, was doubtless intended for the instruction and profit of the masses; but there are exceedingly few who would ever think of its having such abstruse and hidden meanings. If Moses had intended to teach us that the Almighty was such a long time employed in the creation, no doubt he would have told us so in plain terms. I know there are mysteries in the Bible, which the wisest men cannot unravel; but they affect not a plain narrative of matters of fact.

I see no reason why Geologists may not admit the plain common-sense meaning of this chapter; since, by supposing the machine to have been completed, in all its parts, before it received its motion, or nature to have been made, before the laws of nature were established, their science is in no danger. We know that God, now, generally works by means; but does that prove that he never worked in any other way? By no means. Far be it from us, then, to bind Him down to the use of means, or make Him wait on the slow motion of the laws of nature, in the creation. Nay; instead of that, He had merely "to speak, and it was done, to command, and it stood fast." Thus we give the greater glory to God the creator and preserver of the universe. W.

ANNUAL CHURCH MEETINGS.

Annual Examination of Character of Private Members of the Church, Proposed.

Mr. Editor: May I venture a suggestion for wiser heads? An evil felt and seen in our Church is laxity of discipline. The evils of this are too obvious for comment. To avoid them is a consideration. I believe the following suggestion, if it had authority and practice in the Church, would do much to forestall evil, and work good. Let the General Conference institute an annual Church meeting—to be held by the preacher in charge—in each Society, in the bounds of his circuit. At these meetings, each member's character—young or old—to pass in review. In the passage of his or her character, let the General Conference propound, through the Pastor, such leading questions as will secure, in the life of each member, an example that will give credit to the Church and cause of God. To instance: Has brother A. or sister C. kept the general rules of the Society this year? (Let the rules then be read—the Church receive the answers, and act on them.) Again, has he or she attended class, or wilfully neglected it, this year? And such other questions as in their wisdom would be advisable.

The effects of this suggestion, in practice, would be, first: An uniform administration. The discipline is administered, but it is not uniform. One preacher gives attention to it this year; the next, his successor neglects it; and the absence of this feature in the administration breeds dissatisfaction and divisions in the Church, whenever it may be enforced. This would make its administration a standing rule. Secondly: It would purge the Church, and keep it purged of a leaven of membership that is corrupting to its honored usages. Thirdly: It would keep the statistics correct and clean. Fourthly: It would elevate the piety of the Church; and this elevation would be uniform and general. And such results could not fail to give prosperity and power to the Church. So I think. Who will correct?

No solid objection presents itself to my mind, but much for quibblers who would not walk by rules of piety.

ESTHETIC AND ARTISTIC ITEMS.

Dannecker's Statue of Christ.

Bayard Taylor, describing this famous piece of sculpture, at St. Petersburgh, says: This is no traditionary Christ, with low forehead and straight, insipid features; the head is rather that of a scholar and a thinker. You are at once struck with the individuality of the figure. He is represented as speaking, turning towards the left, and slightly leaning forward. A single flowing garment, hanging from his neck to his feet, partly conceals the symmetrical, yet somewhat delicate form. The head is large, nobly rounded and balanced, with a preponderance of development in the intellectual and moral regions of the brain; his hair long, but very fine and thin, as if prematurely thinned by thought—the beard scanty, and the expression of the countenance at once grave, gentle and spiritual. The longer I looked upon it the more I was penetrated with its wonderful representation of the attributes of Christ—wisdom and love. The face calmly surveys and comprehends all forms of human passion, with pity for the erring, joy in the good, and tenderness for all. It is that transcendent purity in whose presence the sinner feels no repellant reproof, but only consolation.

I have seen few statues like this, where the form is lost sight of in the presence of the idea. In this respect, it is Dannecker's greatest, as it was his favorite work. He devoted many a day of labor, thought and inspiration to the modeling of the head. When, at length, it was completed in clay, a sudden distrust in his success overwhelmed him. Having no longer confidence in his own judgment, or that of his artistic friends, he one day took a little uneducated child into his studio, placed the head before it, and said: "Who is it?" The child looked steadfastly upon the features, so unlike the conventional Christ of artists, and without hesitation answered: "It is the Saviour." The old man, himself a child in his simplicity, and sincerity, accepted this answer as a final judgment, and completed his work in marble.

Crawford's Statue of James Otis.

There may now be seen in the chapel of Mount Auburn one of the noblest works in marble that the art of sculpture has produced in modern times: We mean the statue of James Otis, by Crawford. It is of heroic size; about eight feet high, we should judge by the eye alone. It represents the great orator and jurist as he was when he lived; and the skill, taste, and judgment, with which the details of the costume are managed, show that there is no fashion of dress which may not, in the hands of a man of genius, be made available for the purposes of art. The coat, the waistcoat, the cravat, the fashion of wearing the hair, the ruffles around the wrist (which are very beautifully executed) are reproduced with perfect honesty and good faith; but all the rich and flowing lines of sculpture are obtained by throwing over the figure the voluminous folds of an ample cloak, which is admirably managed and disposed. The left arm is wholly covered by the cloak; the left hand is pressed against the hip, and the angle of the elbow thus produced, enables the artist to give to the drapery all the requisite breadth. The right arm, disengaged from the cloak, is held in front of the person; the hand, with the back toward the spectator, grasps a pen, and a manuscript marked "Argument against Writs of Assistance, 1761,"—we are not quite sure as to the first word or two. In our admiration of the higher merits of the statue, we must not overlook the refinement and expression which are given to this hand, and the fine execution of the details. The lace ruffles around the wrist look as if the air through the open door might move them.

The figure rests upon both feet; the right leg is advanced, and the right foot looks as if it had just been firmly planted on the ground, to enforce and vindicate some truth just uttered by the lips. Indeed, were the cloak removed, the attitude and expression are such that it might be supposed the orator was taken in some effective rhetorical pause in the course of that constitutional argument of his, in which John Adams said that he "was a flame of fire." [Boston Courier.

Scottish Minstrelsy and Railroads.

Border minstrelsy of the olden time is wild, varied and copious. A new minstrel, one who could reach a higher strain than that obtained by his predecessors, is wanting, to give voice and music to a border song of the present. Take one incident: An English tourist train passes "over the border," and the old ground of bloody debate, at even-tide, not far from hymeneal Gretna Green; the long array of crowded carriages is brought to a standstill, apparently in silence and solitude, with the moorland stretching around; at one window of the railway carriage shines the full and glorious Harvest Moon: at the other the Comet irresistibly attracts the gaze: then come voices of children, who appear from a few cottages near, to gaze on the long train, and whose almost unintelligible dialect attests beyond mistake another country. Anon rushes past the mail train, at a speed of scarcely less than a mile in the minute; and on "morn's morn," the glens and passes, the lochs and braes of the Western and the Northern Highlands shall be penetrated by steamboats and mail-carts, carrying newspapers for nothing, and letters for a penny. Perfectly marvelous is the change—the growth of Scotland, in the last half century.

Ruskin on Poets.

"I admit two orders of poets, but no third, and by these two orders I mean the creative—Shakspeare, Homer, Dante—and reflective or perspective, Wordsworth, Keats, Tennyson. But both of these must be first-rate in their range, though their range is different; and with poetry of second-rate quality no one ought to be allowed to trouble mankind. There is enough of the best—much more than we can ever read or enjoy in the length of a life; and it is a literary wrong or sin in any person to encumber us with inferior work. I have no patience with apologies made by young pseudo poets, "that they believe there is some good in what they have written; that they do hope to do better in time, &c. Some good! If not all good, there is no good. If they ever hope to do better, why do they trouble us now? Let them rather courageously burn all they have done, and wait for the better days."

Victor Hugo in Exile.

The London News says: This distinguished poet and politician has now completely recovered from his recent indisposition, and will, in a few days complete his new poetical production, Les Petites Epopees, (Little Epics,) which is expected to appear at the opening of the new year. It is said that the sum paid by a Parisian publisher for the right to issue the first edition is no less than 15,000 francs, (725 pounds.) It will be remembered that Victor Hugo's last poetical production, entitled Les Contemplations, in two volumes, was so popular that the first edition was disposed of in seven days, both at Paris and Brussels, and the gifted poet and patriot erected and decorated a palais d'ete at Guernsey. There he has taken up his abode since his arbitrary expulsion from Jersey by the Palmerstonian administration. His long expected romance, Les Miserables, in six volumes, Victor Hugo intends to complete in the course of next year. In it he will portray the sufferings and wrongs of the poorer classes of society. Liberal offers have already been made for the copyright; and a literary gentleman in London, is charged to negotiate the sale of the English edition on terms analogous to those offered by the Parisian publishers for the original French edition.

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA.

A letter from Shanghai of the second of August, in the Moniteur, contains the following interesting account of a visit to the Great Wall of China:

"The treaties of Tien-sin having been ratified by the Emperor Hien-Fung, Baron Gros was desirous of visiting the Great Wall, and of judging from personal observation of the correctness of the statements representing it as communing in the sea at the entrance of the Bay of Leatung. At seven o'clock in the morning of the 11th of July, the Ambassador, followed by his secretaries and attaches, embarked on board the small steamer the Pregent. The distance of the wall from the place where the Audacieuse frigate was at anchor was thought to be from thirty to forty leagues. Toward evening, the weather not being very clear, it was thought prudent not to approach too close the shore, and the steamer came to an anchor in the offing. At day-break on the following morning she again got under way, and soon after the wall appeared in view. It looked like a range of buildings of the same height, crenellated, and traversing the plain from the sea to the foot of the chain of mountains which run parallel with the coast, but at more than a league inland. An hour after, the wall, with its crenelated top, forts, jetties running out into the sea, and the pagoda on the shore, were perfectly distinct in all their details. We had before us the most picturesque prospect that can be imagined; along the sea coast the vast plain is covered with the most luxuriant vegetation, with numerous villages buried in trees, and at the back a horizon of lofty mountains.

At the foot of the wall, on the side of China, were seen the white tents of two Tartar camps, with their horses grazing at liberty around. Seen from the Chinese side, the wall resembles an immense work in earth, crowned with a crenellated wall in brick, but in a very dilapidated state. On the Mantchouria side, on the contrary, it is built of brick on a foundation of stone. It has, along the whole length, square towers at a distance from each other of about two bowshots' length, so that the enemy might be struck from either of them. It runs down into the sea by two parallel jetties, the incline of which is so slight that persons landing from a boat may easily walk up them. The largest vessels may approach to within two miles of this spot, which is the place where future tourists ought to land. Unfortunately we were not then aware of this fact, and we came to an anchor at a spot where the landing was not very easy. The shore was soon covered with Chinese from the neighboring villages. M. Marquis, the interpreter to the mission, and Count de Ozery, the commandant of the Pregent, were the first to go on shore, in order to enter with the authorities and ascertain whether any objection would be made to the landing of the party. A mandarin mounted on a white horse, and followed by two horsemen, arrived from the camp to inquire what these men, come from an unknown world, wanted. On receiving pacific assurances from our interpreter, he said no opposition would be made to the disembarcation. When all were on shore, we proceeded direct toward the wall.

We had to cross several little rivulets which run down toward the sea, and we were afterward obliged to strike a little more inland, in order to find ground rather less moist. As we approached toward the wall we observed the Tartars mounting their horses, and betraying by their gestures considerable emotion. They separated into three bodies—one remaining on horseback in front of the tents, thus cutting off the road to the wall; another proceeded on our left, where they alighted among the high grass; and the third advanced at a hand gallop to meet us. They asked whence we came, whern we were going, and told us that they could not allow us to advance any further. Their chief, they said, was absent, and they could not take on themselves the responsibility of permitting us to approach. You may judge of our astonishment when we learned from these men, encamped as it were at the very gates of the capital, that they had heard nothing of their country having been at war with France and England. The taking of Canton, the bombardment of Takou, and the peace concluded at Tienstu, they were completely ignorant of. After a little negotation we thought we had got over our difficulty, and we were allowed to advance, but we had not proceeded more than three hundred or four hundred yards when some fresh horsemen advanced, and urgently impressed on us the propriety of not going any further.

With our escort of twelve men well armed, and our revolvers, we might have kept off those three hundred Tartar horsemen and have mounted the wall in spite of them, but the Ambassador was anxious to avoid any dispute, and would not compromise his position for the mere gratification of curiosity. After having taken a few sketches, purchased some fans from the Tartars, and astonished a whole host of Chinese by letting them taste our brandy and look at our watches and compasses, Baron Gros returned to the boats. These Tartar horsemen had neither bows nor arrows, but they all had matchlock guns slung over their shoulders. Their powder appeared to be very coarse, and, in addition to ball, they had in their cartouche-boxes small pellets of lead. Each man carried in his large boots his pipe and fan. Before leaving the coast we went in the Pregent to have another view of the country on the other side of the Great Wall opposite the plains of Mantchouria, which were covered with the most extraordinary verdure, only to be found in countries where the ground, after being long buried in snow, is vivified by a hot sun. The wall was seen growing up as it were out of this exuberant vegitation, and ascending the side of the mountain, to follow, for more than 600 leagues, the half savage countries which extend as far as the confines of Mongolia and the Kon-Kon-Noor. After having for some time contemplated this magnificent scene, Baron Gros gave the signal for departure, and the Pregent steered for the Tokl Islands, where the Audacieuse frigate was waiting for us."

The New Testament is about to be published in the Court dialect of China, in one octavo volume of about one hundred and fifty leaves, at a cost of from twelve to fifteen cents a copy.

PEN SKETCH OF A TEXAS PREACHER.

Many years ago, in the early times of Texas, a strange and friendless boy, who had left his old home in bonny Scotland, landed upon Galveston Island. He was poor. How he employed himself, and gained a livelihood, at first, we are not informed. Studying law, and settling in the interior, he soon began to gather a comfortable competency, and to rise to distinction in his profession. The Methodist pioneer missionaries preached the Gospel in his region, and he was converted, and joined the Church. A brave and powerful man, he was a terror to those evil-doers, who, in a new country, are in the habit of disturbing the worship of God. Noble in his mein, generous, magnanimous and eloquent, his popularity was not to be wondered at.

He was a leading spirit in the early struggles on the frontier against the Mexicans and Indians, and was engaged in many a desperate battle and fray. In the cause of his struggling country, his energy and his liberality knew no bounds. He was a boon companion of Samuel Walker and Addison Gillespie, two of the bravest men that ever made Texas their home, or claimed the American name. Taken prisoner, and carried to Mexico, with a large number of fellow-sufferers, very few of whom ever lived to reach home—some murdered, and many killed by cold, hunger, thirst, or disease—he was offered his life and liberty if he would repudiate his allegiance to Texas, and claim the protection of the British flag. He rejected the proposition with becoming scorn, determined to share the fate of his brethren in arms.

After the restoration of peace, his public life was an uninterrupted success. His fellow-citizens honored him without stint. He was a leader in public affairs, and in politics, and his eloquence, at the bar and on the stump, as well as on more select occasions, spread his fame throughout the State. During most of this time he was an exhorter in the Methodist Church, and often felt it his duty to enter the ministry. But the glory of political eminence dazzled him, and his devoted wife pleaded for the enjoyment of her quiet home, and dreaded the privations of the itinerancy, though an excellent and pious lady.

In the course of a tour through the State in the summer of 1856, we chanced to become acquainted with his family, and to dine at his table, in company with several ministers. We were then wholly ignorant of his impressions in regard to the ministry, and of the feelings of his lady on the subject. He was absent, at the Legislature, by which he was elected to an honorable and responsible office. We had never seen him. We were also ignorant of the fact that he was greatly in danger from the convivial habits unfortunately so common among our public men. His wife, it would seem, had become alive to the danger. One of the ministers remarked that he ought to preach. His wife replied that he would have entered the ministry long before, but she had always opposed it. Impulsively addressing her, and stretching a hand across the table toward her, we rejoined: "Madam, you will repent of that before you die." Bursting into tears, she exclaimed: "If the Lord will ever again put it into his heart to preach, I will not oppose it."

During the next year, one of the most important and exciting political contests Texas ever knew shook the State from end to end. Our friend was in the thickest of the fight, and his danger became more apparent. From all parts of the State, through the presses and otherwise, he was proclaimed as the first choice of his party to succeed Gen. Houston in the United States Senate. His election was not doubted. Taking the letters and papers from all parts of the State, giving him assurance of election, he went to his wife and said: "I can go to the United States Senate. Here are the evidences. If you wish it, I will go. But if I go, hell is my doom. I shall be a drunkard as certain as I go to Washington. I can yet escape. If I pass this point I never can. I can enter the ministry, which I ought to have done long ago, and save myself from a drunkard's grave, and my soul from hell. But you shall decide." His poor wife, unwilling to relinquish the glittering prize in view, replied, weeping, that she could not see why he could not be a great man and a christian too.

But after prayerful reflection, she would not incur the fearful responsibility of deciding against his conscience, and told him to go into the itinerancy, and she would go with him. To the astonishment of the whole State, a letter from him appeared in the papers, just before the meeting of the Legislature, declining the nomination, and announcing his retirement from political life. The next thing that was heard of him was, that he was preaching.

The Legislature met, and, contrary to custom, the House voted to have a Chaplain, and elected him to the office. Of course he received the honor in silence, and did not accept; but his route to Conference at Waco lay through Austin, where he spent a Sabbath, and preached one of his first sermons in the Hall of the House, to the very men who had known him up to this time only as a politician, with whom he had been in many a caucus, and who had looked to him as a party leader. He dealt in great faithfulness with their souls, and the thrillingly eloquent appeals of the Gospel, in the voice that had often before uttered the shout of battle, and whose clarion notes had inspired his political party to the contest with their opponents, made an impression that was felt, and will be still felt, in every part of the wide domain of Texas.

He was a greater favorite with the people than ever before. Though highly esteemed by all, yet party politics had made it the duty of many to oppose him, and many were bitter against him for his dangerous prowess on the other side. But now there was nothing to divide. "Their swords were beaten into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning hooks, and they learned war no more." The eagerness of politicians to hear him was remarkable. The wickedest and most sceptical men said that "if ——— said religion was true, it was true, for he had always been an honest man."

Not careful about the immense reputation he had attained as an orator, he preached and exhorted, in the same simple and hearty manner, as though he had never been heard of before; not seeking to cover his inexperience in theological lore, or in the practice of preaching. One year ago he received his first appointment, in one of the most beautiful regions of Western Texas. The hopes of the Church have been more than realized. Like "a burning and a shining light," he has preached far and near—revivals have followed in his track, and hundreds of souls have been converted to God.

What renders the case more remarkable, is the fact, that before he declined the United Senatorship, by a legacy left him in England, he became possessed of an ample fortune. Wealth, and the hope of high position, have kept many out of the itinerancy; but few, very few, are those who have declined eminent earthly advantages for it, or rather, brought them as additional forces into it, that they might be the more largely useful. The editor of this paper vouches for the substantial truthfulness of this sketch.

Methodism in the United States.—The various branches of Methodism in this country have all shared largely in the fruits of the "great revival." The statistics of the large Methodist bodies show grand results. The Western Methodist Protestant says that the increase in nine conferences of that denomination is 5,072. It is distributed among the districts as follows: Ohio, 374; Muskingum, 920; Onondaga, 252; Genesee, 260; Michigan, 891; Wabash, 320; Indiana, 345; Iowa, 881; South Illinois, 900.

THE SUNSHINE OF LIFE.

The sunshine of life is cheerfulness, and the unfailing source of cheerfulness is gratitude to God. If we only keep our eyes and ears, and minds and hearts, open to discover and enjoy the firmament of the Divine Goodness which over-shadows us, bestudded as it is with the particular mercies that have arisen upon our lives, we shall have abundant cause for both the one and the other. We embitter our own hearts, darken our own lives, and poison every cup of joy presented to our souls by heavenly beneficence, by our blind and unbelieving ingratitude. Thus it is that we are cheated out of the true enjoyment of the greatest part of this precious probationary life, the like of which we shall never possess again, and which is so soon gone. We thus incontinently choose to walk through the valley of tears, when we might be bounding over the mountains of joy; to spend our lives in the twilight of sadness, when we might be revelling under the smiling noon of peace; to have the earthly home of our souls upon the confines of everlasting sorrow, when we might pitch them upon the frontier of heaven.

It is true we have suffered and sorrowed, and sighed and wept, as have all our human brothers and sisters. But there have been greater sufferings than ours; we should be thankful that we have had to endure no more; and the consciousness that our souls are redeemed, and that heaven and its happiness are within our reach, should be a sufficient balm for all our wounds. When we yield to despondency or despair in consequence of earthly ills, we are either unbelievers in heaven, or unworthy of its joys. "Why should a living man complain," so long as the eternal beatitude of the heavenly kingdom dawns upon the darkness of this life?

Innumerable and intangible mercies make up the unappreciated comfort of every day we live. Who can estimate the number and grievousness of the dangers, misfortunes, griefs and calamities, to which he is daily exposed, and from which he is daily preserved! Death's myriad shapes, like ambushed foes, have larked around our unconcious pathway, from early infancy to the present day. Persons younger than we and more expectant of long life—those whose buds of hope were just beginning to bloom—whose investments in life's stock were just beginning to yield the dividends of prosperity—those who had more to lose by dying than we—those who were more innocent than we—those who were less prepared to die than we—those who were more afraid to die than we; thousands such as these have heard the untimely call; and yet we live. We may be poor; but few are so poor but that they have food and raiment and shelter. We may be obscure; but few are so obscure as not to have their doors darkened by the familiar forms of friends, who would shed the tear of affection over their graves were they called to die. If we have not fallen into crime and merited disgrace; if we can look our fellow-man in the face, and feel that we too are men; above all, if we have not lost the hope of heaven—if, in the darkest hour of our lives, the Good Spirit still whispers, "there is a good time coming," we should "thank God and take courage."

And how many and precious have been the joys of those of us who consider our lives most unblest of all! They have come like stray singing-birds, or traveling angels, and fixed their homes, for a time at least, in the chambers of our souls; and when they have gone, their mellowed memories have sweetened the cup of many an after affliction. In the dawn of our existence, when our unfolding being first began to spread its tender leaves in the sunshine of appreciated life, our whole consciousness, with everything that ministered to it, was singing with joy; preparing us in disposition, little as we understood it, even before reason was ripe enough for the exercise, for the love and worship of God. The holy influences of home, however humble; the unfearing peace and unforeboding joy of the blessed family circle in which our infant days and youthful years were spent; the tender, untranslated, undemonstrative affection of father and mother, brothers, and sisters, and kindred; the joy we had in their society, and the memories we still have of those of them who are gone to the grave; all these, little as our dull souls perceive it, were, and are, merciful "drawings of the Father," toward himself, and toward our heavenly home.

Son or daughter of man, and offspring of God, what innumerable gems of joy cluster in the crown of your life! Have you ever rejoiced in the possession of a sincere friendship, or been grateful for sympathy and counsel, or ever once truly loved, and been truly loved in return? Have you ever been blest with the smiles of wife or husband, and the innocent prattle of children? Have you ever been gladdened by the blessed sunshine, the singing of birds, the beauty and fragrance of flowers, or the light of the cheerful day? Have you ever taken delight in the roseate dawn and the rising sun, or the solemn night and the quiet stars? If you have ever been won by radiant beauty, or melted by glorious music, or charmed by the witchery of poetry: if you have ever felt the sentiment of the sublime, on the ocean-shore, on the mountain top, in the storm of wind and rain and thunder, or when wandering in "the grand old woods:" if you have ever trembled under the power of thought, or been awed into reverence by the divinity of truth, or aspired to follow in the foot-steps of greatness and goodness, or panted to lift up your souls upon the wings of genius; if you have ever felt the majesty of God, the love of Christ, the power of faith, the forgiveness of sins, the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, or tasted of the incipient joys of a home in heaven; if you have ever felt and enjoyed all or any of these, your life has been blest, and your heart should overflow with gratitude and cheerfulness.

The blessing of a grateful, cheerful heart is as incalculable as the blessing of the sun-light of heaven. It is, to the soul and to the home, what the sunshine is to the earth; while an ungrateful, complaining, despondent, despairing spirit, is the cloud and storm, and mildew and poison of life. Better be linked to one upon whose vitals consumption is preying, than to one impregnated with this dire disease of the soul. We have no right to make complaints; we have neither time nor strength to waste upon our own ills; it is absolute moral trespass, of the most cruel and dishonest kind, to burden others with them; and cheerful gratitude gilds with a new glory our greatest prosperity, and draws the honey of blessing from the bitterest herb of sorrow.

LAY CO-OPERATION.

Our friend and brother, Rev. F. G. Ferguson, of the Alabama Conference, who is an ecclesiastical "conservative" and "strict constructionist," is tenacious, persistent, and will not be put to silence by those of our editors whom he has "taken a pen to." His last "come back," is at Dr. Lee, of the Richmond Advocate. We agree with him that "lay delegation" is disposed of, and that further discussion of the subject in our papers is improper and unfruitful—at least of good.

While he admits that "lay co-operation" was formally sanctioned by the General Conference, he thinks it all "fustian," that is, that there is nothing practical in it. Our brother should reflect, however, that it was adopted as a sort of "compromise" of the "lay delegation" question, and, as such, should not be "disturbed." Let it be fairly tried.

Moreover, those of opinions opposite to those of brother F., if he should succeed in convincing them that they have gained nothing but "fustian," might be dissatisfied, and seek something more substantial. If it is "fustian," brother F., and those who believe with him, have lost nothing, and those of the other side are satisfied. So that he is as much interested as any other party, in the success of the present plan.

Since writing the above, we have seen his remarks in the Memphis Advocate, harmonious with the above views.

HOME AND FRIENDS IN HEAVEN.

"There is our house and portion fair,
Our treasure and our heart are there,
And our abiding home".

Our departed friends are there. They have gone before us. The dear, patient, and beautiful-spirited mother who died long ago, and whose precious, priceless love was the sunshine and dew upon the tender seeds of our young life, is there. The memory of her sweet face is like the star of our destiny, shining with a calm and pensive radiance during all the gloom of this dark and lonely life. The musical tones of her well-remembered voice, as they used to fall upon our heedless ears, in sympathetic converse, or sacred song, or solemn prayer, still float upon the atmosphere of memory, more sweet to our hearing than the song of mirth and godless joy. O, who can be a selfish, worldly, wicked man or woman, that has the mournfully blessed memory of a mother who has gone before to the kingdom of heaven! The grave and wise father, who was our childhood's guide and hope, and whom death has cut down, is there. The manly form and strong character which were to us the perfection of strength and nobleness, now rise up in our memory as the guide-pillars along the path to heaven. Our brothers and sisters who have gone—the "dear kindred blood" which had a warmth towards us unknown in any other circles, and which was fully returned by our own hearts, and which the grave, and the constant action of an affectionate memory has chastened and made more intense—these dear companions and partners of our early days, and our early joys and sorrows, are there. The wife of our youthful love, who left the embowered parental home to share our earthly destiny, and who lay down by the wayside, and breathed her last in our supporting arms, is there. The husband, the pride and hope and joy of his confiding wife, and who yielded to the touch of death, notwithstanding the blessed baptism and balm of her tears and love, is there. And our sweet little children; who, though they have been gone many years, are always babes in our memory, are there before us. And friends, brothers and sisters innumerable, fellow-soldiers and fellow-sufferers, have passed away before us; and all these, a goodly company, wait for us "in the happy land."

And, "in the presence of God there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore." The brightest moments, the most intense joys, the most vivid creations of our most inspired moments of imagination, are but faint and flitting visions of the real and abiding blessedness of that "eternal world of joy." The "innumerable company of angels," "the spirits of just men made perfect," the holy "prophets, apostles, and martyrs," "God, the Judge of all," and "Jesus, the Mediator of the New Covenant," are all witnesses of our warfare in this wilderness state. They never forget us; their eyes are upon us; their sympathies are with us. And, O, what a friendship, what a sympathy is ours! While these are bestowed upon us, and the "Blessed Comforter abides with us forever," who can faint or even complain! Is there any sacrifice in "counting all" earthly "things but loss" in such an ineffably glorious cause!

THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Before this paper goes to press, we shall, if God please, be on our way to the session of the Alabama Conference, at Macon, Mississippi. It is five years since we last attended. At the last session we attended we had completed ten years' service within its bounds. Wherever we have been, we have always felt that the Alabama Conference was our home. Our religious life commenced there. Eighteen years ago, at the "High Pine Camp-meeting," in Randolph county, under the ministry of Rev. James P. McGhee, we joined the Church as a "probationer" and "seeker." At Old Union Church, on the Wchadka, near the Georgia line, our name is still recorded, we suppose.

What a glorious singer McGhee was!

"One night as I lay musing,
The Spirit said to me,
Go, blow the Gospel trumpet,
Go, sound the Jubilee;
Go, tell them I am risen,
And death they need not fear;
I've turned that awful summons
To a sweet messenger."

Under that song, from his lips, we have witnessed effects, of which neither Jenny Lind nor Piccolomini ever dreamed. The zealous John T. Roper had been his predecessor.

The next camp-meeting, at the same place, a year after, was a memorable one to us. Hilliard J. Hunter was our counsellor. Abel Pierce was preacher in charge. Elias Story was there, and preached from "O Lord, I will praise thee," &c. Alexander McBride delivered his maiden exhortation. Lynch and Sawyer were our presiding elders and great great men in those days. At the next camp-meeting, at the same place, a year after, we were licensed to exhort. A year later still—having been licensed to preach in the spring, at a quarterly meeting near Arbacoochie—we were recommended to the annual Conference by the quarterly Conference, sitting in Fish-Head Valley. "Old Father Hunter" was preacher in charge, the now sainted Edmund Pearson presiding elder.

Jacksonville Circuit was our field for the next two years, where we rode about three hundred miles, and preached about thirty-two or three times, every four weeks; received about one hundred and fifty dollars in the two years; lost two horses, had one given to us; saw between five hundred and a thousand souls brought to God; watched by the dying bed of our senior preacher, the sweet-spirited and pious Hayman Bailey; and left, happy in the work, having never seen those beautiful mountains and peaceful valleys since. Rev. Willis D. Matthews, the present presiding elder of that (Talladega) District, was the first preacher we ever heard preach.

The first annual Conference we ever saw was at Wetumpka. How like a child we felt. We have the sermons we heard there in our head yet—three especially—one from Dr. Hamilton, on "The Children of this World," &c.; one from that good man, Charles McLeod, now in heaven, on "Repentance;" and one from Dr. Mitchell—his first in Alabama—on the "Ministry."

Our class! Stephen F. Pilley was our leading examiner. How we feared him. It was then large. Blue, Ramsey, James A. Heard, C. C. Calloway, and the writer, are all that remain, we believe. The amiable and useful Sparks, the eccentric but gifted Newton, the meek-spirited Hill, are in heaven; and, perhaps, others are gone. Some have located.

The Alabama Conference was then a small and feeble body. It is now a host, with many mighty men. It is powerful in its own bounds, and it has sent its representatives and influence to Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, California, and elsewhere.

God has preserved its old men in a remarkable manner. That Conference that has no old men is to be pitied. There is a savor peculiar to aged ministers, that cannot be dispensed with. Hearn, Calloway, Story, Garrett, Levert, Pilley, Dowling, and others we cannot call to mind, still remain. Kennon Scales, Sawyer, Pearson, Weir, Lyuch, and others, have been called to their rest in heaven.

Providence has now thrown us midway between Texas and Alabama; we are about equally acquainted with both; we have labored, and joyed, and sorrowed, and buried our dead in both. When we get fully acquainted, as we intend, with Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, we shall understand our field. Pardon thus much to old memories, not harmful to record.

The Yellow Fever is rapidly disappearing, says the Southern Christian Advocate, from Charleston. The reported number of deaths last week was twelve; and many absentees are returning. Those who wish to come to the Conference need not fear. The Editor expects to be reunited with his family next week. They have been quarantined apart since July.

SOUTH-WESTERN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

A Paper with this caption will be found on the first page. It is an official document, from the President of the Board, and in its name, in behalf of the Agent, Rev. Erend E. B. Cleghorn. Though brief, it is elaborate, the style courteous, and careful. Though containing nothing "that could be claimed to come under the head of either fact or argument," it informs us of what we could hardly be supposed to doubt, that Mr. Cleghorn denies having represented the Methodist Church as connected with the "Union." This is its nearest approach to fact. We publish it with great pleasure.

A few comments. 1st. The complaint is unremoved, that, by Mr. Cleghorn's agency, many of our people are led to believe that the Methodist Church is a partner in the "Union," and thereby induced to give their money.

2d. Others are led to believe that, leading Methodists being connected with it, it is harmonious with Methodism, and Methodist interests, and thus induced to aid it; when the truth is, according to our information, Methodists have had nothing to do in establishing the "Union." It is an enterprise of another origin, and leading Methodists are elected—without their knowledge, in some cases, if not in most—Vice-Presidents, Directors, and their names are published.

Without intending to make an unjust comparison, we may say that in many places we have seen the names of leading members of the different churches on the tickets to a public ball.

The object is effect. And it is ingeniously sought. Politeness is presumed upon. You are honored with an unsolicited office, and are not called upon to do anything, and, therefore, do not feel disposed, when you are published as so elected, to publish a declinature. Vanity is taken advantage of, sometimes, we fear. A public man, or one seeking to be such, and fond of official position, and of seeing his name in the papers, happens to be a member of the Methodist Church. He is elected Vice-President, or chosen to deliver an address, or his name is published in some way. We are not giving cases, but illustrating a policy.

But, be it remembered, these names, however obtained or used, are intended to act as passports to the hearts, churches and pockets of Methodists throughout the land. The odor and prestige of the Methodist Church is sought in the use of these names, and, in too many instances, the management is successful. This will somewhat modify the force of the remark of the article; that "some of us (the Directors) belong" to the Methodist Church. So far as we know, not a single Methodist in New Orleans has any practical connection with the Board. Some, of those published as officers, we know, openly repudiate such connection.

3d. The "Union" is intended to supplant, among Methodists, our own Publishing House. It is a hard saying, but truth and duty demand it. The very gentleman whose name is signed to the document in question, threw the taunt into our own teeth, that many Methodists preferred the "Union" to our own Publishing House, and would support it in preference; and went so far as to mention distinguished names, which we forbear to publish. Of course, the inference is inevitable, that all Methodists would be drawn in the same direction, if possible. And Mr. Cleghorn himself boasts the superior character and acceptableness of the "Union" publications over those connected with the "isms," as he calls them—meaning Methodism, or religion as held and taught by the Church of God of whatever denomination. Mr. Cleghorn is the apostle of religion outside of, and opposed to, the Church of Jesus Christ. Such is the tendency. Thus, our friends of the Board must not complain this time of the lack of "fact and argument."

Baptist, Presbyterian, and Episcopalian Boards of Publication, claim our respect and good wishes. They are our co-laborers in spreading "printed religion," as taught by the Church of God. Their success does not depend upon the breaking down of Church allegiance, and Church interests. We close for the present; but we are not done. Certain developments impress us with the necessity of sifting the fundamental principles involved; which, God willing, we shall do, when convenient.

THE PAPER.

We Have made improvements in the paper, which have both added to its value, and increased the cost of its publication. We have, mostly, a new dress of type. That costs something. The type is beautiful. Beauty is pleasant and valuable. With fewer advertisements, and smaller type than before, we have nearly double as much reading matter in the paper as we had before the change, so that the paper is nearly doubled in value, so far as amount of reading is concerned; and the expense of composition is nearly doubled also. These improvements are made, and these expenses incurred, in the confident belief that an appropriately increased patronage would be bestowed. Will our brethren and friends take these things into consideration, and act accordingly? Will they act as well consider? We have ventured these things with as much reference to their pleasure as to our own. Give us increased, large, independent circulation. A man who cannot preach actually can preach virtually to hundreds of souls, by increasing the circulation of the paper. Every new family into which the paper enters, is a new nucleus of Christian culture. The destinies of all the children in all these families may be moulded by reading the Advocate. All sorts of good seeds may be planted in all sorts of new, wild and unmoted soils. "The time is short."

POLITICS.

General Walker is trying to get off another expedition to Nicaragua, peaceful, it is said. The President has proclaimed against him, and neither our Government, nor the British West-India fleet, will allow any to pass without passports from the Nicaraguan Minister, Yrissarri; and he declines giving passports to Walker and company. The interference of the British fleet in American affairs is exciting indignation throughout the country, and the Administration and the approaching Congress, it is thought, will officially resist such interference.

The condition of Mexico is now exciting marked attention and intense interest throughout the United States and Europe. For many years past, there has been no such thing as a settled Mexican Government, and the hope of such a thing is now dead. What is to become of her, is a question generally asked. American citizens, in large numbers, as well as those of other nations, have valuable interests in Mexico, which must be secured by some Government, either European or American, or be utterly sacrificed. While filibustering in that direction is generally and justly condemned, the belief is general that the country will fall into the hands of the United States. The London Times has long since, and repeatedly, urged this Government to take the necessary steps to secure it.

It is getting to be generally believed that the winning political card in the game for the next Presidency, will be that of acquisition of more territory.

In Alabama quite a fierce war is now waging between the friends of Governor Fitzpatrick and Colonel Yancey, upon the respective claims of those gentlemen to the office of United States Senator.

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.

This institution is located at Columbus, Mississippi, within the bounds, and, we believe, under the control, of the Alabama Conference. It is under the management of Rev. B. F. Larrabee, the talented and experienced President, assisted by a full and competent faculty. The advertisement, which will be found in the appropriate place, was, by oversight of the printer, not inserted at the proper time. It gives full information to all interested in the college.

CITIES AND LITERATURE.

It is remarkable that things utterly opposed to each other in character, should, as a general rule, be inseparably connected in fact. Yet such is the case with cities and literature, commerce and fine arts, great marts of trade and great journals. The literary and scientific celebrities of England and France are nearly all connected with London and Paris. As to European journals, none are heard of in this country, scarcely, outside of those published at the great capitals and commercial centres. And so it is in this country. New York and Boston have been the homes of most of our leading literary men; and the leading American journals are all confined to the great cities. Of the philosophy of these facts we do not now speak; but the facts themselves are patent and instructive.

One lesson to be taught the christian Church by these facts is this: that the positions which are occupied by the superior secular journals of the country, are the only positions at which superior religious journals can ever be established. A natural law governs these things—that of interest—success. The most widely influential American journals are in New York, and from those down, the gradation is in precise accordance with the commercial importance of the places of publication, other things being equal.

In consequence of the failure of the different Christian Churches, in many instances at least, to follow the philosophy herein indicated, vast sums of money, an immense amount of time and brain-power, have been comparatively wasted, and the cause and character of religious journalism injured and lowered. Instances throng upon the mind, but their mention would not be delicate, and would add nothing to the lesson of more prominent facts. Moreover, some men are never convinced that water cannot be made to run up hill until they have tried it.

Since writing the above, we find its confirmation in the Delta. Speaking it says Washington City newspapers, that they can, with great difficulty, if at all, be supported without the aid of the Government or the contributions of political chiefs.

Advertising, the chief support of the journals in all our cities, and without which they could not live at all, is denied to the Washington journals.

"The superior enterprise, means and facilities of the papers in the great commercial cities must always give them immense advantages over the metropolitan organs in circulation and advertising. How then can a paper live and flourish in Washington City? Only by the official patronage and jobs, or by the temporary and uncertain aid of ambitious politicians, who have personal schemes to promote. No journal, we undertake to assert, has ever lived two years in Washington City without these aids.

"The position of the papers now published there, and the extent of the aid supplied them from the Government, would greatly surprise the unsophisticated people. There is the old National Intelligencer, the most venerable, and certainly one of the most respectable papers ever published in the country, whose conductors are most estimable and patriotic old gentlemen, who have been identified with Washington City from its foundation, which has been for nearly a half century, the unvarying and efficient organ of a political party, whose resources for the support and reward of its faithful servitors have exceeded those of any other organization in the country; even this old journal, which in any other community might have drawn to itself a support and patronage sufficient to enrich its proprietors, has been compelled to rely for its existence largely upon jobs extorted from Congress only by the most earnest solicitations and urgent appeals. The continuation of the publication of the State papers alone, authorized by Congress at its last session, places $300,000 in the hands of these worthy gentlemen.

"The Washington Union, or rather its proprietor, Cornelius Wendell, exacts an enormous bonus for the maintenance of that journal. Many hundred thousand dollars flow into the pockets of that enterprising jobber—but a small fraction of which is very reluctantly applied to the sustenance of the so-called Government organ. Even the faintly-twinkling little Star—a petty, trivial and gossiping burlesque of a "Court Journal"—pockets its twenty thousand dollars annually for the publication of the advertisement of the mail contracts, and the performance of sundry small jobs about the Departments. The Globe, Rives's publication, though extravagantly paid for the bad execution of work which might be more advantageously dispensed with than any other Government job—to wit: the report of the speeches of the members of Congress—performs no useful function or service of a newspaper."

LITTLE ROCK.

Reverend Samuel Watson, the genial editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate, now visiting the Arkansas and Ouachita Conferences, writes from Little Rock: "This is indeed a beautiful city. Fine society, good churches and schools abound. By the way, it was an Episcopal palpit that I occupied in the penitentiary, having been removed there from the regular succession to give place to a finer one in the Episcopal Church, now being enlarged and improved to meet the wants of their Congregation. This town needs one thing greatly. Give it a railroad connection with Memphis, and a new era will dawn upon it and the whole State.

"Mr. Robinson, the President of the Railroad, made a fine impression here recently. The citizens say the road shall be built.

"I spent some three hours this morning looking and listening to the members of the Legislature. The Senate organized this morning by electing Judge Fletcher President. They are quite a dignified looking body of men. The House spent some time in Convention to nominate officers, and did not get through before adjournment."

UNITED STATES ARMY.

The present military force of the United States consists of nineteen regiments of the line, composed of the following corps: Five regiments of cavalry, four regiments of artillery, ten regiments of infantry—making a grand aggregate of thirteen thousand rank and file of all arms. This little army covers an area of over two millions of square miles, being two-thirds the area of all Europe. There are eleven hundred commissioned officers, including one hundred medical officers, eight hundred and fifty of whom graduated at the military academy, and two hundred and fifty civil appointments. The nativity of those officers is as follows: Born in the United States, 1060; Ireland, 14; France, 8; England, 6; Germany, 3; Scotland, 2; Austria, 1; Italy, 1; Poland, 1; Spain, 1; Cuba, 1; Turkey, 1; at sea, 3.

The militia force of the United States is computed at 3,000,000 effective men, of which the State of New York claims to furnish 500,000.

UNITARIANISM IN ENGLAND.

An Organ of this body, the Inquirer, thus speaks of its condition and declining influence: "Year by year our congregations grow weaker—often in numbers, more often still in social influence and relative importance. It is but a short time since the treasurer of one of our institutions assured us that the denomination to which we belong is gradually changing its character altogether, and that he now drew his subscriptions from the lower grade in the great middle class. Or if we take individual congregations we find the same result; and Wakefield, Exeter, and Norwich are but individual examples of a universal rule. Liverpool has doubled and trebled its population, and the three Unitarian congregations, which existed at the beginning of the century, barely maintain their ground, either socially or numerically.

WHEAT IN THE MILL.

Reverend J. J. Wheat, Woodville, Mississippi, who, in passing the wheat of his harvested knowledge through the mill of critical analysis, that he might prepare the best form of the bread of life for the flock he has to feed, discovered, as he thinks, that Joseph Benson made his bread out of other men's grist, instead of grain of his own planting and growing, has recently been called himself to pass, with his family, through the mill of the yellow fever, from which he has come out "as good as wheat." The Mississippi Conference is to meet at Woodville, on the 8th of December. Nobody need fear to go, as the cold weather is death to the yellow fever. So also of New Orleans.

APOLOGETIC.

We have not been in circumstances, since taking charge of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to make as various, interesting, beautiful, and valuable a paper as we desire, and as we yet intend. Moving and getting settled—a scattered and sick family—the prevalence of the epidemic—have prevented that mental repose and singleness of aim, and that opportunity for thorough survey of the varied interests of our editorial field, so necessary to the production of a complete and satisfactory newspaper. And now, for some weeks, the Conferences are upon us. After they are over, we hope to go to work in good earnest. Nothing but undivided editorial attention, and persevering and intense industry, can make a good newspaper. We have, however, done the best we could. We have endeavored, faithfully, to advance all the interests of the Church within our range. Some, no doubt, we have overlooked, but not intentionally.

A CHURCH AT PONTCHATOULA.

Col. C. M. Hickey paid us a visit a few days since, and informed us that he and other friends were endeavoring to build a Methodist Church at Pontchatoula, and that they had encouraging prospects of success. Another move in the right direction. Brookhaven moves, and Pontchatoula follows. What of the other places on the Jackson Railroad? We ought to have Churches at every one of them. Nor should they be delayed. Why not this winter? Several friends in this city have helped Col. H. liberally.

Dictionary of the U. S. Congress.—Mr. Charles Lanman's "Dictionary of the United States Congress" has been put to press by Cornelius Wendell, in Washington, and the author is now revising the proof sheets. It will be a work of much value. Mr. Lanman, it will be remembered, was the private Secretary of Daniel Webster, for some years, and has a personal knowledge of many of the public men whom he describes. He states that his leading object has been to prepare a kind of labor-saving machine for the benefit of all those who feel an interest in the political history and future prosperity of the Republic; and in the appendix he has endeavored to bring together from the Government archives a mass of legislative and executive information, calculated to be of service to members of Congress while engaged in their public duties.

A REMINISCENCE.

At the close of a sermon on Sunday night, to a large and attentive, but hard congregation, we remarked: "If any person present feels any desire to flee the wrath to come, and obtain the pardon of sins, the pastor will take pleasure in giving counsel, either here, after the congregation is dismissed, or at his house." Upon coming down from the pulpit, a gentleman, formerly an actor, came forward, and said: "Sir, I desire to seek the salvation of my soul." He was afterwards converted. He is now a preacher in the Alabama Conference. He writes from Villula.

"I was sent to serve Villula Colored Mission which was in no very thriving condition. "But it is not expedient doubtless for me to glory." I went to work as best I could, and I went to prayers. I have had no great excitement—but have filled all my appointments punctually. The consequence is, the Lord revived his people and gave me 101 on probation—30 into full connection, out of the 46 received last year. I leave 195 in full connection, after granting letters to 24—101 on probation, 200 Catechumens, 1,000 preached to, and expect to get my money.

The patrons desire its continuation, and if I knew they wished my return I should be very glad to come; yes, I think of asking the Bishop to send me back at a venture. You know that is not Methodistical, and I will make no disturbance about it if they do not send me.

"I consider the Mission permanently established, and in a most healthy condition. Thanks be unto my Heavenly Father—He is good unto all them that call upon Him. But never has he so manifested himself to me in every wish of my heart as he has this year; he has encompassed all around and about me, I am his prisoner. He has taken me, and I surrender.

METHODISM IN BALTIMORE.

A correspondent of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, says: "Methodism is a power in this place; it was early planted here, and has kept pace with the growth of the city, but not equal to her advantages as a denomination. Wealth and influence to a great extent are possessed by her membership, and a large representation is found in the professional and mercantile pursuits of the city. The churches, generally, occupy eligible, valuable locations, and most of the edifices are costly, and are a credit to the denomination. According to a recent authentic account, there are one hundred and fifty church edifices, forty-two of which are of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and ten of other branches of the Methodist faith; in all, one hundred and fifty-two, being equal in number to the churches held by the Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Catholics, the three largest denominations next represented. The population is said to be over two hundred thousand. Philadelphia, with her five hundred thousand souls, has only sixty Methodist churches, and Pittsburgh, about half as large as this city, has only about a dozen churches of this faith in the city proper. It will be seen from this that Baltimore is largely in the advance in the proportion of churches—but not to the extent she ought to have been.

There is one feature in Methodism here that is worthy of imitation everywhere—i. e., of stations securing lots and building temporary buildings and chapels. Sometimes these lots are in the suburbs, and apparently unimportant sites, but the rapid growth of the city soon makes them valuable and eligible locations. Quite a number secured in this way, and connected with some charge as a kind of mission appointment, have become important stations. At least half the charges have parsonages attached, owned by the society.

LETTERS FROM THE OLD WORLD.

Owing to the change of editors, and the carelessness of printers, a considerable number of Mrs. Thomas' very interesting letters was not published in the proper place. We did not discover this until recently. This will account for the lack of consecutive order which will be apparent in the letters now appearing. It will not detract from their interest, however.

Mollie Perkins.—The morning papers say that this sweet little daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Brookes is dead. Poor little "Tin Dinky!" as she was lovingly called. During a short sojourn in the family, she became greatly endeared to us all, especially to the writer. A more innocent face will be hard to find. But she is happy—happier than we who mourn. This should console the family. Farewell dear little "Tin Dinky!" We shall meet you, and another little cherub, buried in the wilds of Texas, in the better world.

Julia A. G.

Florio.—This tasteful, elegant, and mentally and spiritually affluent writer, whose contribution to last week's Advocate has no doubt awakened a desire to hear from him frequently, has engaged to become a regular contributor to our columns. His pen is his prince power, could he be awakened to the fact. The printer made him out "Florida" last week; the mistake was natural.

Pax.—This writer has been furnishing us "East Alabama Correspondence" for a few weeks past. We hope to have him continue. A gentleman of scholarly culture, and fine taste, and also an able divine and eloquent preacher—his pen is valuable. It will not rust, if the wishes of the Advocate can prevent.

City Revival.—Meetings are being held nightly in the Carondelet and Felicity Street Methodist Churches, and several persons, in both, have professed the saving faith of the Gospel. Rev. Mr. Harp is also holding a protracted meeting in the Moreau Street Church.

Correspondents must be patient until the Conferences are over—or until about Christmas.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE OLDEST RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.—For some time past it has been claimed that the Boston Recorder, which was started in 1816, by Mr. Nathaniel Willis, and edited by Mr. Sidney E. Morse, now one of the editors of the New York Observer, is the oldest religious newspaper in the United States. A recent writer in the Philadelphia Christian Observer, however, claims that the Religious Remembrancer, which afterwards became the Christian Observer, was started in 1813, and is therefore the rightful claimant to the honor of being the oldest religious newspaper.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.—A catholic priest, at Portland, Maine, a few days since, met one of his parishioners bringing home a load of whisky. His Reverence was armed with a hatchet, with which he broke in the heads of the barrels, letting the liquor run into the gutters.

CONSUMPTION OF BOOTS AND SHOES.—The U. S. Economist estimates the consumption of boots and shoes in the United States, at 76,000,000 pairs per year, valued at $8,000,000. About 12,000,000 pairs are made in Massachusetts, one-half of them in Lynn.

COMPETITION.—One hundred and fifty MSS. have been received in England in competition for two prizes on "The decline of the Society of Friends." The essays sent in are very varied in character, quality, and length. Several of them are from this country.

THE CITY OF JEDDO, THE CAPITAL OF JAPAN.—The city of Jeddo is said to be, without exception, the largest city in the world. It contains 1,500,000 dwellings, and the unparalleled number of 5,000,000 inhabitants.

THE TEXAS BAPTIST, and, of course, the Baptists of Texas, sustain Graves. We presume those of Arkansas and Mississippi do likewise.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN is running over this week, in consequence of neglect previously. We shall attend to them better after awhile.

BOOK NOTICES.—Several publications are on hand, which will be duly noticed, when other engagements allow.

CITY PRESS.

Divorce.

Speaking of the harm and scandal produced by the facility of obtaining divorces in Indiana, and the general desire expressed for correction by legislation, the Delta says that the apprehension that the sanctity of marriage is threatened, and that general licentiousness will prevail, is erroneous. "The reasoning which it implies is more specious than solid. It is backward in process, and elevates to the dignity of a cause what is rather an effect, or at most a sign of the true cause. It supposes that the marriage institution is seriously endangered by the partial withdrawal of legal protection; or rather of legal complexies; and, therefore, that marriage, and home, and family are all the creation of law, and require the fostering care of the law for their preservation. But such a conclusion is equally repugnant to fact and abhorrent to nature. Domestic ties and social institutions do not grow out of laws, but laws grow out of them, and bear to them at once an indexical and instrumental relation.

"Laws are not made for general humanity, but only for exceptional humanity. What a very few are required to do under penalty, the great majority are presumed to do from choice. Consequently, it is due to the voluntary obedience (if we may say) of the right-thinking, just and moral many, that good laws are enacted, or, being enacted, are maintained; and without this sort of support, say law, however excellent in theory, is nothing worth. Individuals may have to submit to law, but society never does.

"So it is useless to inveigh against the indiana or any other laws, as in themselves promoting matrimonial discord, etc. It is the discord and the causes of it that are to be considered and, if possible, remedied. It is useless to denounce laws that seem impure in tendency, and conducive to licentiousness and social disorganization. It is impurity at the fountain, it is licentiousness in its reptile nest, it is the demon of social destruction in his secret lair, that must be discovered and reformed."

Tariff Protection.—

The Bulletin, in a union and protective tariff article, says: "The South is vitally interested in this matter. Manufactures are steadily and surely—if slowly—increasing in several of the Southern States, Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and Alabama, for example; and as they increase, the clamor about "free trade" will become less and less distinct, and will finally become wholly inaudible."

Democratic Future.—

The Courier, which favors both the Administration and Senator Douglas, in an article questioning the future, asks: "Will the majority, those who stood by the President in his Kansas policy and who will adhere to him in all that tends to the public welfare, deal wisely and forbearingly towards the minority? Cunning men who labor for favorite aspirants will, we know, employ every scheme to deprive some of the northern delegation, and especially Senator Douglas, of the confidence of southern democrats. They would gladly revive the defunct Kansas issue in order to bring forth some renewed expressions of dissent and disapproval from Douglas and the northern minority.

Political Organs.—

Alluding to the contradicted report that Mr. Appleton had resigned his office to take charge of the Washington Union, the Delta says: "Existing by the favor and subsidy of the officers of the Government, it would be a reproach to our people if such journals could exert much influence in the direction of popular opinion. The sooner, therefore, the whole system of Government organs is abolished, the better it will be for the Government, the people and the press. The only influence that ought to control the press of this country, should proceed from the people. Its only aim should be to defend and maintain those principles and measures, which, in the unbiased judgment of conductors, are founded in truth, right and the interest of the people."

Right of Search.

The following is the Delta's doctrine, in opposition to that of Senator Brown, of Mississippi. "This principle absolutely excludes every compulsory foreign presence upon the decks of American ships on the high seas, regarding those ships as but an extension of the American domain, and subject to American law and the visitation of American officers only. Let the crimo he what it may against the American Government, let the criminals be denounced by whatever designation they may by American statues; let the offences be mutiny or murder, the offenders smugglers or slave-traders, and it is all the same: it is exclusively with American authority to take notice of the violation of the law, and punish its violators, and to other power can undertake to do so without assuming a belligerent attitude."

William H. Seward.

The Crescent says that Seward is the candidate of the Black Republicans for the Presidency in 1860, and that he has a fair chance of success.

"The fallen angels expelled from Heaven for rebellion against the Almighty could no more have got along without the Devil incarnate to re-organize them, and lead them forth to deeds of evil, on this fair and beautiful earth of ours, than could the Black Republicans get along without their leader and Archangel—William H. Seward. According to Milton the demons of Pandemonium lay powerless, helpless and supine, in their place of punishment, until the superior intellect, cunning, tact and will of Satan infused new life and vigor into them, and led them to hope for new victories in other spheres. We regret the parallel does not hold good further. The imps of darkness never triumphed at all. Their first attempt at disturbing celestial harmony was duly rewarded. They were incontinently driven out of heaven into hell. In this country, which has heretofore been the paradise of the nations, the prospect is that the diabolical spirits will prevail."

Outrage in Cities.

The Bee says: "Nothing can be more evident than that it will work irreparable mischief if confined to those who employ it ignorantly and recklessly, and this is practically what follows when the wealth, the respectability and the intelligence of a great city keep aloof from the struggles of contending factions, and suffer the paramount interests of the State to be entrusted, without the slightest resistance, to the vile spawn engendered by demagogulism and depravity. We can not abrogate suffrage but we can direct into pure and healthful channels; but if this duty be pretermitted, God help the commonwealth!"

British Interference.

The Crescent asks: "Shall Great Britain rule always on this continent?" and, referring to late proceedings with regard to Nicaragua, it answers: "The British Minister to the United States—the accomplished, able and astute Lord Napier—has reason to congratulate himself upon the success which has attended his diplomacy, and, no doubt, smiles inwardly when he thinks he has the Executive Department of the only great Government on the Western hemisphere to anticipate his wishes, and compel obedience to his behests—the American Collectors, Surveyors, Attorneys and Marshals to act as his police on land, and the American Navy and American naval officers and seamen to act as his police on the ocean."

NEWS FROM THE INTERIOR.

Alabama.

COBIA PARDONED.—Francis J. Cobin, of Henry county, who fourteen years ago was prosecuted for whipping a negro man to death, and who was recently convicted and sentenced to the Penitentiary, has been pardoned by the Governor.

TENNESSEE AND ALABAMA CENTRAL RAILROAD.—The Decatur Times says this road is doing a fine business. The M. and C. Railroad Depot at this place is crowded daily with Cotton from the Central—the "Pryor" comes down every morning with from seventy-five to one hundred bales, and passengers in proportion. The most gratifying feature connected with it all is, that a large amount of cotton shipped on the Central is from Giles county, and a portion from Maury.

Arkansas.

RICH BOTTOM LAND.—A correspondent of the Memphis Eagle mentions a sale of bottom lands near Columbus, Arkansas. The entire propriety sold for $141,300 on the block—that is, the 1641 50,100 acres of land and the fifty three negroes, with the teams, stock and furnishing utensils thereon. There were purchasers on the spot from Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas. The average of the whole is equal to $1000 a piece for the negroes, and about $54 per acre for the land. The terms were very stringent—equal almost to cash down.

The telegraph announces that the Legislature of Arkansas has elected Wm. K. Sebastian United States Senator for the term of six years from the fourth of March next, when his present term will expire.

Kentucky.

The people of Louisville have voted in favor of the city subscription to the Memphis branch of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Mississippi.

The Macon (Mississippi) Beacon, referring to a recent auction sale of land in that country at $40 to $50 an acre, says that the value of real estate has been almost doubled since the advent there of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

Louisiana.

A correspondent of the Ouachita Register gives an account of an agricultural fair recently held in Bienville parish. There were about 1000 persons present. The show of stock was excellent.

Florida.

The Tampa Peninsular, of the sixth says the health of Tampa has much improved, but absentees are warned to keep away several weeks yet.

Mr. Phelon, contractor for the extension of the Florida Railroad to Tampa Bay, arrived at Fernandina on the tenth, with a large force and plenty of tools, to commence work immediately.

THE SEMINOLES.—The Key of the Gulf, of 6th inst., says: Dr. Barron, Light-house keeper at Cape Florida, now on a visit to Key West, states that eighty Seminole Indians have visited the Miami since the first appearance there of Tiger Tail and party, within two months. We are assured that there can be no mistake about this information, as the settlers at the Miami have kept a strict account of the Indians as they have come in, with a view of ascertaining how many there are now remaining in the State. From the Indians themselves no information, as to numbers can be obtained. Dr. Barron is of the opinion that there are at least one hundred and twenty or one hundred and thirty Indians now in Florida, and says they are in command of the eastern coast, and are likely to become a set of pirates should a vessel be stranded on the coast away from the assistance of the whites.

Georgia.

PROGRESS OF THE STATE.—The Macon Telegraph says: Georgia has over twelve hundred miles of railroad built and paid for—yielding to the stockholders more than an average of seven per cent. yearly dividends. Within the next year, two hundred miles of additional road, completed and equipped, will be in operation. These roads, with but a single exception, are mainly the results of the enterprise, the energy and capital of our own people. We have cotton and wool and paper factories; rolling-mills, foundries and machine-shops; merchant-mills, marble yards; gold, copper and coal-mines; all in a flourishing condition—remunerating the proprietors by handsome returns on the capital invested. The cotton crop of the present year will bring twenty-five millions of dollars, at present prices. The crop of cereals is worth twice that sum—the sugar and tobacco crops not being included in the account. The State tax is not quite one-twelfth of one per cent. The net income of the State road will be three hundred thousand dollars. The State debt amounts to about two millions, and a tax of one-fifth of one per cent. would pay it in two years. Our banks are solvent—our merchants in the best of credit, and the people generally out of debt, with full crops of cotton, corn etc. on hand. The country is healthy, with the exception of the epidemic in Savannah. We have six male Colleges, and Colleges for the fair sex in almost every village containing five hundred inhabitants.

LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.—The number of students is greater than last year, and will reach about six hundred and fifty. This is a large number, and indicates the appreciation by the State of the noble corps of teachers which this Institution commands.

The Library of the late James G. Percival, the poet, is offered for sale. It contains about 10,000 volumes, and is considered one of the most rare and valuable collections in the country. It has been valued at $30,000, but is offered for $20,000.

Rev. Henry Giles is announced for three new lectures in New England, on "Irish Mental and Moral Character," "Irish Social Character and Humor," and on "Daniel O' Connell."

Ticknor & Fields, of Boston, have already sold twenty-five thousand copies of "The Courtship of Miles Standish." It was published on the 16th of October, which, deducting three Sundays, gives thirteen business days—or a sale at the rate of about two thousand a day.

THE SOLAR ECLIPSE.—It will be recollected, observes the Scientific American, that our Government sent out Lieut. Gillis to take observations of the solar eclipse which was total in some parts of South America on the 6th of last month. He has written a brief letter on the subject to Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, in which he states that his telescope was mounted near Olimos, in Peru, and his observations were favorable. The usual rose-colored coronn attendant on total eclipses was observed rising over the moon's disk, and was very beautiful. The brilliant protubernucea usually observed with instruments, shooting from the sun's disk, were also visible, and on this occasion became distinct to the naked eye. These phenomena, witnessed during total eclipses, are supposed to indicate violent action of fire in the sun.

The Rev. Edward Purcell has declined the appointment of the Coadjutor Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Pittsburg.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Senator Gwin.—

Among the American notables at Rome at last advices, were Mrs. Senator Gwin and daughter, of California.

Vice Consul at Manchester.

R. M. Livingston, late of Mobile, has been appointed American Vice Consul at Manchester.

Morphy's Chess Account.

Since Morphy has been in Europe, up to the time of the close of the Harrwitz game, he has played 117 games, 16 of which he lost, 88 won, and 13 drawn.

Prince of Prussia.—

Prussian monetary arrangements give the Prince Regent an income of £360,000, and £240,000 to the crazy King.

Hon. John Forsyth.

The Very Latest Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

HALIFAX, Nov. 17.—The Cunard steamship Canada, for Boston, touched at this port this evening, bringing advices from Liverpool to Saturday the 6th instant, three days later than those brought by the Vanderbilt at New York.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 6.—The sales of Cotton for the week foot up 47,000 bales. Cotton has declined during the week ¼ to ⅛. The American steamer's advices had produced the depression in the market and caused a decline. The market on Friday closed at the following quotations—Fair Orleans 7⅞, Fair Uplands 7d, Fair Mobile 7⅛, Middling Orleans 6⅞, Middling Mobile 6 13-16, Middling Uplands, 6⅞, showing a decline on the quotations by the Asia of ⅛ on Fair Orleans, ⅛ on Fair Mobile, ⅛ on Fair Uplands, 3-16 on Middling Orleans, 3-16 on Middling Mobile, and ⅛ on Middling Uplands. Tde sales on Friday were 8000 bales. Some authorities quote the decline for the week as fully ¼. The stock of Cotton at Liverpool was 420,000 bales; of this amount 310,000 bales were American.

LONDON.—The money market is generally unchanged. Money is abundant at low rates.

BRITISH MINISTRY.—It is rumored that Lord John Russell is to supersede Lord Derby in the British Ministry.

THE PRUSSIAN CABINET.—The New Prussian Cabinet has not yet been fully perfected.

CENTRAL AMERICA.—Orders will forthwith be sent to our naval officers in the Central American waters, to strictly enforce the President's proclamation respecting illibustering expeditions, and to prevent any infringement of the neutrality laws.

ACQUISITION OF MEXICO.—The London Times, in a leading article, favors the acquisition of Mexico by the United States, and ridicules the Spanish Expedition against Mexico.

THE IONIAN ISLANDS.—Mr. Gladstone, it is reported, had been commissioned to proceed to the Ionian Islands to regulate the British protectorate of the Islands.

SPANISH TROOPS FOR CUBA.—A detachment of Spanish troops had sailed from Malaga, to co-operate with the French in their operations with China.

ADDRESS FROM PORTUGAL.—The Portuguese Government were about to issue an address to all the Great Powers, complaining of the conduct of France in refusing to accept the mediation of a third power in the affair of the Charles and Georges.

SOUTH AMERICA.—The Canada brings later intelligence from South America, by way of England. Advices from Rio de Janeiro to the 10th of October, had been received. Coffee was very scarce, and had advanced 100 rels. The market closed with an upward tendency.

PARAGUAY PREPARING FOR WAR.—It is represented that the Government of Parnguay were preparing to resist the American naval force. They had placed obstructions at the mouth of the river, to prevent our fleet from entering, and they promise our men-of-war a warm reception, there as well as at various other points, which they have placed in a strong state of defence.

GOLD DISCOVERIES IN BUENOS AYRES.—At San Louis, it is reported that new gold mines of singular richness had been discovered.

A NEW ENGLISH CABINET.—The London Daily Advertiser says that Lord Derby contemplates retiring from his position as Premier, and that he will probably be be succeeded by Lord John Russell. Lord Stanley and Graham are spoken of for prominent positions in the new cabinet. Mr. Bright supports the new combination.

A REFORM BILL.—Mr. Bright, at the request of the Reform Conference, is to frame a reform bill corresponding with their views.

MONEY AND BANK RATES.—The rates of the Bank of England remain unchanged. The funds evince more steadiness. The rates of discount have an upward tendency.

NAPOLEON STORING CORN.—The Emperor of France was laying in large stores of corn in every large town in France, to provide, as is represented, for future scarcity.

SPANISH ELECTIONS.—At the recent election in Spain, the Government party carried nearly all the elections in the provinces, but the Progressionists were triumphant at Madrid.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Later from Arizona—A letter received here from Tucson, Arizona, states that a revolution has been organized in Sonora against Peschiera, and in favor of the Zaloaga party, which will probably prove successful. Still later accounts from Sonora state that Tucson was full of Americans, and that the authorities of Guaymas, the principal sea port town of the province, had surrendered the town to the Zuloaga party and fled.

GILA RIVER GOLD MINES.—Lieut. Mowry had proceeded to the gold diggings on the Gila River, which are said to be very rich in deposits. The Apache Indians were quite troublesome in that region.

A CONSUL DEAD.—Mr. Ruwle, American Consul at Macao is dead.

THE UNITED STATES AND PERU.—Our Government is taking measures to get satisfaction from Peru for their seizure of American vessels.

THE NICARAGUA EXPEDITION.—The Secretary of the Treasury has sent the reply of our Government to the Collector at Mobile in answer to his inquiries respecting the Walker expedition. The tenor of the reply is not known, but it is supposed the expedition will not be allowed to leave Mobile.

APPOINTMENT FOR OREGON.—Walter Forward has been appointed United States Marshal for the Territory of Oregon.

SOUTH-WEST PASS, Nov. 18.—The ship Berkshire, which arrived here this morning, spoke the steamers with the Havana dry dock in tow, at seven o'clock yesterday morning, one hundred and thirty miles southeast of the South West Pass. They report all well, and were getting on finely. They had been thirty-six hours out.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Accident to the Arctic.—The United States war steamer Arctic sailed for Pensacola yesterday, but when a short distance out her machinery became disabled, and she was obliged to put back for repairs.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.—The Secretary of War is recovering from an attack of illness. He was taken ill on Friday of last week.

TREASURY BALANCE.—The balance now in the Treasury is $7,173,000. The receipts into the Treasury for the week amount to nearly $907,000. The amount of drafts paid in during the week is $719,000. Amount of drafts issued by the Secretary of the Treasury $720,000, which is an increase on the issue of the previous week of $187,000.

MOBILE, Nov. 18—The Nicaragua Expedition.—A large number of emigrants for Nicaragua are gathered here from different Southern States, waiting a passage to Greytown. They are mostly an industrious and fine looking set of men, composed of all trades and professions, and they declare it to be their intention to peacably emigrate and settle in Central America.

It is expected the vessel intended for their accommodation will sail in a few days.

There is nothing warlike visible in their preparations or arguments. Gen. Walker is still here.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 22.—Tehuantepec Route.—The steamer Oregon sailed from Ventosa to-day, with passengers for New Orleans via the Tehuantepec route, and emigrants to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Naval Orders.—The U. S. sloop of war Plymouth, now at Mobile, has been ordered here as the practice ship....The sloop of war St. Louis, Commander Ogden, has been ordered to the Gulf of Mexico.

MOBILE, Nov. 17.—Nicaraguan Expedition.—Gen. Walker's emigrant expedition are intending to leave here for Nicaragua on Saturday of this week.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The sales of Cotton to-day amount to 2500 bales—a decline of ⅛ to ¼c is reported since our last quotations—Middling Orleans is quoted at 11¾c, Middling Upland 11¼. The market closed firm. Green Teas, at auction to-day, sold at an advance of 10 on previous sales.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 18.—The Flour market is dull, sales at 4 37½ to 4 50. White Corn is selling at 80 to 83c; Oats firm at 65 to 70c; Hemp dull at 90 to 95c.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 17.—Overland Mail from California.—The Overland Mail has arrived, with dates from California to the 22d ult. The mail party report the road through the Westerly part of Texas in excellent order....Gen. Harney started from San Francisco for Oregon on the 20th....The shock of an earthquake was felt in San Francisco on the 21st ult....Mr. McKibben sent Johnson another challenge before leaving San Francisco.

HOSTILE INDIANS.—The Comanche Indians are very hostile, and have burned all the grass on the Plains, in consequence of which Lieut. Heckle has been obliged to suspend operations till spring.

LATER FROM SANTA FE.—The Santa Fe mail of the 25th is at hand. It was brought through on mules, the roads being in such a condition as to render it necessary to leave their wagons behind....The stage was upset with Senator Broderick who came passenger, in crossing the mountains west of Kansas city. Senator Broderick has one rib broken, and his foot frozen. There was much snow on the route, and the weather was severely cold. The upper rivers are slowly receding.

MOBILE, Nov. 19.—Nicaragua Emigrant meeting—Immediate Passage Demanded.—There is much excitement in our city in regard to the Nicaraguan Expedition. Over three hundred emigrants assembled this morning and appointed a committee of forty-seven who waited on the agent of the Southern Emigration Society, and demanded an immediate passage to Nicaragua as promised in the agent's advertisement, or the refunding of the money paid for their passage. Serious trouble is anticipated unless some satisfactory arrangement can be made.

LOCAL.

JUDGE MCCALEB, in his charge to the Grand Jury of the U. S. District Court, wished them to inquire diligently into the nature of the expedition about being set on foot for Nicaragua, and to determine whether such expedition is lawful or not.

THE SOUTHERN WATCHMAN is the title of a new publication which has just been started in this city, under the direction of Mr. P. F. DeGournay as editor, and L. E. Del Casto as publisher, two gentlemen experienced in journalism, devoted to the great cause of Cuban liberty and American expansion.

CITY RAILROADS.—The Board of Aldermen, on Tuesday evening, passed an ordinance authorizing the Controller to advertise for proposals to construct and run horse-car rail roads through Camp and Magnzine streets, to the lower limits of the city.

NURSERY NEEDED.—The Bulletin thinks a nursery is needed near New-Orleans. Such an establishment has been put in operation by Col. C. C. Langdon, of Mobile, a few miles out on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, where he keeps hundreds of varieties of fruit trees, vines and plants, which in a couple of hours may be taken to Mobile. A branch of that nursery, or some other, out on the Jackson railroad, would soon, we have no doubt, eclipse, in the amount of its business and usefulness, the parent establishment.

VANNUCHI'S.—This indefatigable caterer for the entertainment of the curiously disposed, has his Museum, at 147 St. Charles street, stocked fuller than ever with wonders, prodigies and phenomena, of all kinds. Besides his great collection of wax-workery, there are, a mammoth girl and a rival of the famous Tom Thumb. Then there is the famous Cosmorama; and Vannuchi has, also, a pair of live swans, a panther, and other rare specimens of animal nature. It is an entirely unobjectionable place of amusement.

COMMERCIAL.

SATURDAY EVENING, November 20, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	— @—	Good Middling	11¾@11¾
Ordinary	8 @ 9¼	Middling Fair	— @12
Good Ordinary	10¼@10¼	Fair	— @—
Low Middling	10¾@10¾	Good Fair	— @—
Middling	11 @11¼	Good and Fine	— @—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 20th inst, furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business. It says, Since the epidemic has run its course or been checked by frosts our city has been rapidly filling up with citizens and strangers, and a revival of trade is beginning to be felt in our general merchandize market. The transactions of the week have been to a fair extent, and Sugar and Molasses have gone off quite freely, and Cotton has been in good request, though freight, exchange, and adverse European advices have interfered somewhat with operations. In Tobacco, no operations of consequence; and, in Western Produce, business has been but to a limited extent.....The river is 10 feet 10 inches below high water mark.....But a moderate business in Cotton was done up to Tuesday evening, buyers endeavoring to obtain some concessions; on Wednesday the market presented a better supply on sale, and with somewhat easier prices, buyers came forward and took 11,500 bales. On Thursday buyers again came forward, taking about 12,000 bales. Friday, with only a moderate supply of desirable lots, sales were about 9,500 bales. Sales of the week 56,500 bales. With respect to prices, for the lower grades—which are comparatively neglected, and are accumulating—rates for some days have been rather in favor of buyers; but for the qualities, ranging from Middling to good Middling, which embrace the bulk of the demand, the prices of the early part of the week are not only fully sustained, but have acquired firmness. Total receipts of the week, 70,750 bales.....The Money market is much the same as noticed last week.

SUGAR—The sales of the week amount to about 8000 hhds.; we quote for inferior and refining, 3¾@4¼; common to good common, 4¾@5¼; fair to fully fair, 5½@6; Clarified, 6@7½.

MOLASSES—We notice a good demand for this article. The sales of the week are about 12,000 hhds; the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 25@27; prime to choice, 28@29; bf-bbls. 32@33c ₱ gallon.

FLOUR—Has been rather dull, with sales of about 9,500 bbls. at $4 62½@4 75, for Illinois and St. Louis superfine; and $5 25@5 12½, for good to choice extra.

GRAIN—The sales of the week, of Corn, about 12,000 sacks at 60@65 for inferior and ordinary mixed, and 68@70c for good to prime mixed and white. Oats, sales from 64@66c ₱ bushel, for ordinary to prime St. Louis. Wheat, we quote at $1 30@ ₱ bushel.

MEATS—Pork is selling at $18 50 ₱ bbl. for Mess; Beef, $14@$15; and Bacon, for shoulders, 7¼@7½; ribbed sides, 9¼@9½; clear sides 9¾@10, hams from 11½@13½c ₱ lb according to quality.

COFFEE—We quote ordinary at 10c, low fair 10½, fair to good fair 10¾@10¾, prime and choice 11@11½c ₱ lb.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

DEAR LITTLE READERS! What shall we talk about first? Well, suppose we turn our attention to

A TEXAS WOODLAND COTTAGE.

Have you ever been in Texas? Most of our little readers have not, but some of them have, and some of them live there. It is a wide, a strange, a great and a beautiful country. There are some of the broadest prairies and most beautiful landscapes, and the richest lands, and the most timber and water, and the largest and longest-eared rabbits, and the largest herds of broad-horned cattle, and the greatest quantity of deer and other game, and the best horsemen and marksmen—but we are out of breath, and must tell you more another time. We have received a letter from a woodland cottage in Texas; and it is headed

A MOTHER'S VOICE.

"Mr. Sharon," it says, "the day, most desired of the week, arrived—our mail day—and the letters and papers arrived; my little ones left their play, and came running to get their paper, but, when I made them understand that they could not get "The Sunday School Visitor every week, they wanted first to hear what 'our editor' had to say to the little children; 'for,' said my little girl; 'he writes to us every week.' So, with the assurance of interesting them as usual, I opened the paper and turned to the 'Children's Column;' but you can imagine their disappointment to find all the space occupied that week with obituaries. And thus the lambs of the flock were sent empty away. And, for what? To fill the paper with long obituaries of people not known to two-thirds of your readers. We sympathize with you, Mr. Editor, in your distress at receiving so many long notices of this kind; and, while we, with profit to ourselves, and much interest to the children, read suitable ones, still we are grieved when we see so much of your valuable paper thus occupied. We hope that you may have courage to resume your pruning-knife, which you can use with so much skill, and not let that portion of your paper, the 'Children's Column,' be again crowded out."

The letter has a postcript. It says: "My little girl awoke a few mornings ago, and said, 'Mamma, I dreamed I cried so much at the meeting!' 'And why did you cry, my love?' said I. 'Because, Mamma, I thought I was not a Christian.' 'And, are you not, my daughter?' I asked; longing to hear her reply. 'Yes, Mamma, I think I am.' 'And why do you think so?' 'Because, Mamma, I love Jesus; and try to do all that he tells me to do.' Who could have given a better reason for the hope that is within us?"

The Editor has lived in Texas, and travelled over it considerably, and he loves to hear from his young friends there. But here is a letter from a young friend in GREENSBORO, ALABAMA.

The editor was pastor of the Church there, thirteen years ago, when he was quite a young man, almost a boy. The letter says:

"DEAR SIR: I suppose, and in fact I almost know that you have forgotten me, and indeed it is not expected that one situated as you are now, and have been for several years, past to recollect every one who claims to know you. I was a very small boy when you were stationed in this place, but I well remember you; your heighth, personal appearance, countenance, walk, expression of the eye, and even your gesticulation in the pulpit; all are plainly remembered by me. I even recollect on a certain night while you were holding a protracted meeting in this place that you walked more than half way down the aisle in order to impress upon the thoughtless careless sinners the importance of seeking salvation, and while there you were called on to pray, and you kneeled down there in the very midst of the giddy, heedless throng, and offered up a prayer for their preservation. These things are clearly visible to my eye, and I love to ponder upon them, because they are pleasant reminiscences; but alas there have been many, very many changes taken place since then. Death, the fell monster of all, has been carrying on its dreadful work in our midst, and almost every family has been called on to mourn departed loved ones since you left us, nor has our own pleasant hearthstone been forgotten by it. Two lovely sisters, the one a mother of a lovely little boy, and the other a sweet little girl of ten, have left our female, and been called from their accustomed seat around our family board, to join the celestial choir in Heaven, and there sing their hallelujahs, and anthems of praise around the throne of our Heavenly Father. A great and glorious change to them, but a sad, and gloomy one to us, so far as this world is concerned. These are painful reminiscences, but we must think of the painful, as well as the pleasant during our sojourn on this earth. Then there has been a regular change of ministers every two years since you left, except one year when brother Hutchinson was stationed here, and also a considerable change in the Church, both in regard to the building, and membership. The cupola has been taken down, and the Church nicely painted inside. The membership has greatly increased, especially within the last two years. This year there have been forty added to the Church, and our beloved pastor, brother Shepard, has been very zealous, and quite acceptable during his stay. There has been a slight change in the town also. We have now a University in our midst, the edifice of which is very imposing, and I earnestly hope that it will meet with a good patronage, and surpass the most sanguine expectations of the trustees, Conference, and the public generally. The New Orleans Advocate is taken by my Father, and read by us all with much pleasure. I think it improved by having a special column for the little folks. As you are averse to long obituaries, I conclude that you are also to long letters, and as you do not probably recollect me, I will therefore close by signing myself your friend."

But here is a letter from

A LITTLE GEORGIA GIRL.

She lives in Louisiana now, but she came from Georgia. The editor was born in Georgia—glorious old Georgia! The letter says:

"MR. EDITOR: Please let me introduce you to the little girl with light hair and dark eyes, not pretty but very well grown to my age; and beg, if you wont read all of my letter, read just enough to see how much I thank you for the children's column.

Grandma takes the Advocate, and lets me read the children's column; oh how anxious we have been during the epidemic for the editor and his family, but have prayed they all might be spared. Mother has sent for the Sunday School Visitor for me; so with the Advocate every week and the Sunday School Visitor every month I shall have a feast.

I passed through your city on my way here, spent a week pleasantly enough, visited the principal places of interest, but liked Jackson's statue most of all; how grand it looked, mounted on a prancing steed, with hat in one hand, and reins in the other, as though ready to make a charge. And Jackson's Square; as I entered I saw it posted everywhere; "Dont touch anything." If it had not been for that I should have plucked some stem or flower, as a memento of the hero of the famous battle of Orleans. I shall never forget the evening we left there, on board the Steamer Belle. The Captain came in and said we were about to be off; the ladies ran out on deck all excitement, waving adieus to their friends on shore; twas sad, though grand, for now we were out in the great Mississippi, with New Orleans in full view, the shipping with its tall mast; heavy river steamers, loaded down to their guards just laughed; some getting up steam ready to start; then there was the little mail boat, like a bug on the water, so much so he soon that my eyes wearied from looking; I put my apron to my face and held them tight with my fingers. Three days more and we were safely landed at a quiet little village in the interior of the State, but this was not my home. Perhaps some little girls and boys that read the Advocate would like to know where I live. Well I will tell them. I live in Claiborne, in the hill country between Washita and Red Rivers my Grandma lives in a white house with green blinds; and I live with her. We have started to plant a flower garden; there is a green lot all around the yard—a healthy beautiful country. Oh what delightful summer residences the city people could have out here. I like the country, though I miss the Sabbath school and church bells on Sabbath. We dont have preaching often, though I attended service last Sabbath at a place selected for a Church; preaching was held under a bush arbor, with saw dust spread all over the ground for a carpet; one good lady got happy, and the preacher looked happy; he went home with us, and after prayers that night, sung "Eden is my Home." It made me think of my old home in Georgia, when the preachers would visit us and pray with us; it made me think too of the Rev. Bradley Jackson, who came to my Grandma's and baptised my three little cousins and myself. One of my little cousins is named Samuel; he put his hand on his head and blessed him and prayed that he might be like Samuel in the Bible.

I have no sister, but I have one brother who is off at a boarding school—my bud is eighteen years old, he comes home sometimes during the session; you ought to see how nice I make the rooms with flower pots, and how we all run to meet him, and then how glad he is to get home.

The rail road from Vicksburg to Shreveport, when completed; will run in five miles of my Grandma's, and then we shall expect you to come to our camp-meetings, and bring Dr. Walker and the Rev. Mr. Keener, to preach for us."

ADDIE MITCHELL.

LETTER FROM A PREACHER'S BOY.

Ah! Here comes a letter from the little son of a traveling Methodist preacher. God bless the preachers! They are the greatest body of men in the world. And they generally have such handsome and excellent wives: Some crusty old Methodists dont like for their daughters to marry Methodist Preachers; but their daughters differ from them; and the Preachers "out marry creation." And they have such good and intelligent children.

But friends, we beg pardon! We were talking to the preachers and their wives, and forgot that you were listening. Here is the letter.

"MR. EDITOR: We have just had a camp-meeting in our neighborhood, grandpa tented, we all stayed with him, thirty-five joined the Church, twelve of that number were little boys and girls under twelve years old, some were only six, but they all can read their Bibles, where Christ says suffer little children to come unto me.

We have a good Sabbath School at our Church, which memorized twenty-three thousand verses of Scripture since the first of June, more than any school on the circuit; so we obtained the prize library given by the Quarterly Conference. I am eleven years old, my pa is a member of the Alabama Conference, and gone most of the time to big meetings. If you publish this I may write again when I learn something interesting. WATSON M. VAUGHAN.

His mother adds: "I send you this letter without correction or comment." MOTHER.

SUNDAY MORNING DIALOGUE.

Good morning my young friend. We have another beautiful Sunday morning.

"Yes Sir, it is beautiful indeed."

And which way are you going this morning?

"I am going to the Sabbath School."

Have you learned the fourth commandment, the commandment about the Sabbeth?

"Yes sir."

Will you repeat it for me?

"Yes sir."

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the Seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it."

That is well done. Now, what kind of time may we call Sunday time? May we not call it soul time?

"Yes Sir, I think we might."

Yes, true, we should not forget our souls during the six week days, but we should care for the soul, and labor for it especially on the Sabbath, and so we will call Sunday time soul time. But my little friend, have you a soul?

"Yes sir."

How do you know you have a soul? Did you ever see it?

"No sir."

Did you ever hear it?

"No sir."

Did you ever taste it, or smell, it or feel it with your hand?

"No sir."

Well then, how do you know that you have a soul?

"Why, the Bible talks about our souls and our spirits; and—and—"

Yes, and the Bible is good authority, but let us see if you never felt your soul or spirit within you. When a little boy feels bad and cries; does his face feel bad?

"No sir."

What is it then that feels bad?

"It must be his soul, sir."

Well, when a little boy gets angry and doubles up his fist, and strikes his play-mate, is it his fist that is mad?

"No sir, it is his soul."

When a little girl feels happy, and smiles, or laughs, is it her face that is happy?

"No sir, it is her soul."

When a little girl gets angry and pouts, sticking out her lips at some body, are her lips angry?

"No sir, it is her soul that is angry."

Yes, in all this you are right. Flesh and blood and bones can not think, nor be glad, nor angry; it is the soul or spirit within us, and this leads us to some important reflections and conclusions. If it is the soul that thinks and desires and wills within us, then it is the soul that does right when we do right, and the soul that does wrong when we do wrong, and it is the soul that sins when we sin. Now, can you tell me what sin is?

"The Apostle Paul says that sin is the transgression of the law."

That is right, but we will talk more of this when we meet again. O. S. S.

THE GREAT WEST.

Gambling on the Mississippi.

We are told that gambling prevails to a fearful extent on board the steamboats that pass up and down the Mississippi river. All sorts of games are practised there, and among those who travel are some of the most plausible and finished rogues. A short time since a party of blacklegs induced several returned Californians to venture a few hundred dollars upon the changes of the cards or the dice, and at the end of the game the Californians discovered that three counterfeit bills, for $50 each, had been passed off upon them. They immediately demanded good money in exchange. This was refused for a time, as the blacklegs pretended they had none. They were then given to understand that, unless they rectified the fraud immediately, they would be forced to take their chance for the night at the very next uninhabited island that the boat should reach. Finding the alternative rather serious, they reluctantly made the exchange demanded, and endeavored to conciliate the Californians by inviting them to drink. The same knaves a day or two before contrived to win $1900 from a very young merchant of Louisana, who was on his way North to buy goods.

Gambling on the Mississippi is a profession which is followed by hundreds, old as well as young. All sorts of combinations are formed by these gentry. They will come on board a boat from different points, and as apparent strangers, and after getting acquainted with the various parties, two or three will sit down at the gaming table, with the object of merely killing time. Gradually, however, they will tempt the inexperienced, by drink and excitement, and then proceed to cheat and plunder them as coolly as if they were engaged in some creditable employment. On one occasion a noted counterfeiter was discovered to be on board, when he was immediately put ashore, and at a point where the prejudice against counterfeiters was so great that they often hung them up without judge or jury. Life on the Mississippi is characterized by extraordinary scenes and incidents.

It is stated that, on a recent occasion a clergyman was earnestly engaged in preaching to a considerable audience at one end of a steamer, while in the middle gambling was in busy progress, and at the other end of the saloon were music and dancing. Many of the boats are fitted up in the most magnificent style, and amount, in fact, to floating palaces. The cost of a cabin passage from New Orleans to St. Louis is about $20. That of a deck passage is of course much lower. All the leading towns and cities are stopped at, and thus constant changes take place in the inmates of the boat. In some cases large profits are realized. Thus, a few weeks since, a steamer that sailed from New Orleans to St. Louis had a freight list that amounted to $40,000, in addition to the receipts of the passenger money and the bar.

The quantity of wood that is consumed is immense; it ranges sometimes as high as 200 cords a day. The scenes of "wooding," especially at night, are full of excitement. It sometimes happens that nearly every nation on the face of the globe has its representative on board of one of these steamers. The travel up and down the river amounts to tens of thousands per annum, while the freight that passes inward and outward may be estimated in value at millions. A friend, from whom we gathered these facts informs us that, a short time since he had occasion to travel from New Orleans to St. Louis, and a day or two after he was on board the boat he became acquainted with a modest and unassuming young gentleman, whose manners were so mild, and conversation so intellectual, that he supposed he was a young lawyer, a physician, or perhaps a student of divinity. The next day he discovered that he was one of the most accomplished gamblers of his age in the Western country. [Chicago Journal.

The Southern Pacific Railroad.

For the purpose of correcting some very material errors into which some of our exchanges have fallen, we deem an explanation demanded. Among the journals laboring under misapprehensions in this regard, we find the Caddo Gazette, as will more fully appear to those having the means of referring to its pages of the 30th ult. For whom it may concern, we take the liberty to state that the Old Company is not to get the Road if the money is paid. It is to be transferred to the bona fide stockholders of the Old Company, and the Committee who made the award are to decide who are bona fide stockholders and who are not. From their decision there is no appeal, and all the stock has to be sent here for adjudication by the 15th of April next, or else to be forever barred. It is, in fact, another "traveling board," except the traveling work. This term all Texas will understand. For the benefit of "outsiders" we will explain: In 1840, it was found that there was an immense number of fraudulent land certificates afloat, and the Texas Congress appointed a Board of Commissioners to visit each county, and pass upon all the certificates presented to them; and no certificate was held good that was not presented and recommended by them. In this way those that were fraudulent were sifted out, and millions of acres of the public lands were thus saved. Those who hold bona fide stock would do well to forward it at once, with the proof of its genuineness; for all must be considered bogus till proved otherwise. This may put the bona fide stockholders to some little trouble; but we are satisfied that they will not complain when they remember that it was the only way to divide the chaff from the grain. They should recollect, too, that every dollar's worth of bogus stock ruled out, renders that which is good precisely to that extent more valuable. This we consider the very gist of the whole award. It is "the apple of gold in the picture of silver." We feel satisfied that if the bona fide stockholders shall pay off the debts, they will do so with the intention of going on with the work, and probably with the ability. A very large proportion of the stock is owned in New Orleans. We of course cannot tell what test the Committee will establish; but even if the one we have heard suggested were applied, theirs would pass muster; to wit: Stock purchased at the Office of the Company for cash. The amount of debts to be paid off will probably be some $400,000, more or less, before they will get possession of the Road. We would look upon this as an earnest that they intended to press another hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand, and finish the next twenty-five miles, so as to get the Texas loan. That would give them a breathing spell. As to the lands, they should not be looked to as a means of building the Road for years to come. They can not now be put in market without great loss. To any Company that cannot progress without relying on them as a means of raising money, they will be almost a total loss. If, on the other hand, they shall fall into the hands of a Company that has real ability, and can furnish the cash with which to build the Road, they will prove a source of immense profit. The Company need not alienate any portion of them for six years from the date of the patents, and then only one-fourth every two years thereafter. To mortgage and sell these lands now, would be literally killing the goose for the golden egg. As much, if not most of the bona fide stock is held in New Orleans, we shall anxiously look to that point to see how the award is received and acted on.

Another important feature of the award, which has been overlooked by the Gazette, is that in default of any one payment all payments are forfeited to the now Company. This is fair, as in such an event they have to shoulder the bona fide debt of the old Company. Their safety is in the Committee being the judge of the character of the debt as well as the stock. We know the Committee, and feel satisfied that bogus claims, as well as bogus stock, will receive but little consideration at their hands. Again we say so the bona fide stockholders send forward your stock, you have nothing to fear from the Committee.

Another "apple" in this picture is the provision that in any default of payment or otherwise, the suits against the new Company are to be dismissed and all litigation to cease. The protracted litigation which has haunted the noon-day as well as the mid-night dreams of some we wot of, thus vanishes under the decree of the Committee, as dew before the rising sun—giving promises of a bright and prosperous day to this great enterprise. The World's Centre.

The famous speech of a distinguished Professor of Theology, delivered all over Kentucky, and many other parts of the Presbyterian Church, about thirty years ago, when the first Theological Seminary was planted there, will be remembered by many of the older readers of the Herald. The point which he wished to establish was the importance of building up and sustaining a Theological Seminary at Danville. His argument ran thus: Danville is the centre of Kentucky, Kentucky is the centre of the valley of the Mississippi, the Mississippi valley is the centre of the United States, the United States is the centre of the world. Richly endow and ably man a good Theological Seminary at Danville, and it will govern Danville, Danville will govern Kentucky, Kentucky will govern the valley of the Mississippi, the valley of the Mississippi will govern the United States, and the United States will govern the world. Therefore, Danville will govern the world. Quod erat demonstrandum. Unfortunately for the argument, it has, in the course of thirty years, like most old things in this fast age, gone a little out of date. The centre of the United States now, is said to be in Kansas Territory, not far from Fort Riley, two or three hundred miles west of the Mississippi river. Westward the star of empire has taken its way. Where it will be in a quarter of a century more, when we get all of Mexico and the Canadas, and all the other British possessions, annexed to us, when the whole unbounded Continent becomes ours, I will not undertake to give a guess. I believe it will be not far from the Lake of the Woods, in the region now occupied by the Blackfeet Indians. [Presb. Herald.

A Hundred Years Ago.

The Pittsburgh people are preparing to celebrate with public parade, orations, processions, &c., on the 25th inst., the centennial anniversary of the capture of Fort Duquesne, which stood on the site now occupied by their city. Alluding to it, the Pittsburgh Post draws the following sketch of the era in which that event occurred:

"One hundred years ago there was not a single white man in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois territories. Then, what is now the most flourishing part of America, was as little known as the country around the Mountains of the Moon. It was not until 1769, that the Hunter of Kentuck, the gallant and adventurous Boone, left his home in North Carolina, to become the first settler of Kentucky. The first pioneeer of Ohio did not settle until twenty years after this time. A hundred years ago, Canada belonged to France, and the whole population of the United States did not exceed a million and a half of people. A hundred years ago, the great Frederick, of Prussia, was performing those exploits which have made him immortal in military annals, and with his little monarchy was sustaining a single-handed contest with Russia, Austria, and France—the three great powers of Europe combined. A hundred years ago, Napoleon was not born, and Washington was a young and modest Virginia colonel, and the great events in the history of two worlds, in which these great but dissimilar men took leading parts were then scarcely foreshadowed. A hundred years ago, the United States were the most loyal part of the British Empire, and on the political horizon no speck indicated the struggle which, within a score of years thereafter, established the greatest republic of the world. A hundred years ago, there were but four newspapers in America—steam engines had not been imagined, and railroads and telegraphs had not entered into the remotest conceptions of man. When we come to look back at it through the vista of history, we find that to the century which has passed has been allotted more important events in their bearing upon the happiness of the world than almost any other which has elapsed since the creation."

St. Louis and Salt Lake City.

Mr. William A. Wallace, of the Alta Californie, furnishes us some interesting information in regard to the amount of traveling between this place and Salt Lake. He left the latter place on the 2d of October, and arrived here on November 5th. On the first day out from Salt Lake, he met Hubbel's train of fifty-two wagons. This train started with seven hundred head of cattle, of which number one hundred and ninety had died—one hundred and seventeen had perished from cold in one night on the Rocky Ridge. October 10th, met Judge Eckles with a train consisting of one coach and four six-mule wagons. The Judge had with him a little white girl lately recovered from the Indians. On the same day met a train of twenty-one wagons, which had lost fifty head of cattle on the way. He reports having passed on the route fifteen hundred and sixty-five vehicles, eight thousand and sixty-one yoke of oxen, seven hundred and four mules, forty-six horses and, twelve hundred and thirty head of loose cattle.

A large portion of this emigration is occasioned by the establishment of the Government forces in Salt Lake City, many of the trains being filled with army supplies; but aside from this, there is a vast amount of miscellaneous emigration and commercial intercourse existing between the two points. Whilst it furnishes an illustration of general progress, it points to the future when St. Louis, from her central position, will become the metropolis of America. [St. Louis paper.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Dr. Bowditch.

Dr. Bowditch, like Dr. Franklin, was a self-taught man, and fought his way by himself to scientific eminence and social distinction. Like Franklin, he received the rare distinction of being elected an honorary fellow of the Royal Society of London, of its own mere motion, and with exemption from the payment of fees. Of course, there have been several Americans who were entitled to write F. R. S. after their names; but they have been elected in the usual way, at their own desire, and with the usual payments. I believe that, besides these two philosophers, Professor Pierce, of Cambridge, is the only American who has received this particular distinction. Dr. Bowditch was a fellow of the Edinburgh and Dublin societies, and of a multitude of Continental learned bodies; but I recollect no one told me, that the degree of Master of Arts which was given to him by Harvard. In in 1802, gave him greater pleasure than any of his later honors. He was at that time a sea-captain sailing, out of Salem, and had not the slightest personal acquaintance with any of the authorities of the University. It was a commencement day when he found himself in Boston harbor with nothing to do—for at that time commencement day was a strict holiday, and there was no more business doing than on Sunday. As all the rest of the world had gone to Cambridge, he thought he might as well go too, and see what it was all about. He arrived about the time the exercises were over, and elbowing his way into the church, found the President just taking his seat, and proceeding to give the degrees. Among the rest he heard his own name uttered in the unknown tongue, and understood enough to know that he had an Degree bestowed upon him. He said that he did not know exactly what it meant, but he knew it was a recognition of his merit as the author of the "Practical Navigator"—an honor alike unsought and unexpected, bestowed by men of the first eminence in the country, of their own mere motion. He said, "it came just at the right time, and did him more good than the greater honors which came later." The scientific library of this greater man, which he directed to be kept together and made free to any person wishing to use it—and of which his son, Dr. Henry J. Bowditch, has been the custodian—has been transferred to the Public Library, in consequence of this leveling measure, where it will be kept together, and be free to all comers, according to his characteristic wish."

Catharine of Russia.

The London critic hears of a literary curiosity forthcoming, which is likely to be the cause of some gossip, if not scandal. It is a copy of a private journal kept by the celebrated Catharine the Second, for her own amusement and reference. The text of this singular document is in French, and, as might be expected, much of its contents is not of a kind usually brought within the reach of either ears or eyes polite. The journal also contains revelations respecting the Russian Royal family and its allies, non-generic and political, and hints of the Imperial policy, such as one be found in no other quarter. For the satisfaction of those who may be sceptical, adds the Critic, we may state that the document has been submitted to very competent authority, and has been pronounced to be thoroughly genuine.

Lay Preaching.

Mr. Brownlow North and Mr. Grant, of Arndilly, have been preaching to immense audiences in Inverness. They conducted divine service in the Free East and Free High Churches on Sunday afternoon and evening. At the East Church, where Mr. North officiated, many were unable to obtain admission. There has been a religious service every evening of the week, and the places of worship crowded. We understand that Mr. North is to officiate in the East Church to-morrow evening. Lord Kintore, an Aberdeenshire nobleman, who has lately associated himself with the lay preachers in the North, is expected here this week.

Mr. Sheridan Knowles.

Mr. Sheridan Knowles having recovered from his late severe indisposition, is at present residing at Bute. He preached last Sunday in Victoria-hall, both forenoon and afternoon, to a most crowded audience, every inch of room being occupied. The forenoon lecture was an exposition of the 16th chapter of St. John; and in the evening an able discourse on the well-known consolatory text, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

American Youths Educated at Rome.

The Propaganda at Rome has addressed a letter to Archbishop Hughes, which says: "The Holy Father has obtained the large and convenient house which a few years ago was occupied by the religious women of the Visitation, with the fine church adjacent; and has granted its use to the Bishops of the United States, that youth chosen by them to be sent thither may be received there, and instructed in sound doctrine and ecclesiastical life."

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. MARGARET H. WILLIAMS died on the 24th October, 1858, of yellow fever in the parish of Morehouse, Louisiana, in the fifty-sixth year of her age. She leaves a family to mourn the loss of a kind, affectionate and best of mothers. She died as she lived, a Methodist; and has gone to be with Jesus, in whom she trusted to live for ever. CHARLIE.

MRS. MARY G. McGILVARY died in Claiborne county Mississippi, Nov. 7, 1858, aged 63 years. She was, for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, though not converted till nearly sixty-two years old. Three days before her death, she exclaimed: "Every thing looks new. I am happy! I love the Savior with all my heart." She passed away like one falling into a sweet sleep. She was the mother of eight children—three of whom survive her.

☞ Southern Advocate, please copy.

MRS. S. L. COOPER, widow of the late Thos. Cooper, of Carroll Parish, Louisiana, died at her step-fathers, M. L. Cook, October 31, 1858. Sister Cooper joined the Methodist Church in 1853, and was a strict member till her death. She died in the faith of her Lord and Savior; prayed that the Lord would take her out of her sufferings. Said she had friends in Heaven, and would soon join them.

A SUBSCRIBER.

BRO. SIMPSON WATFORD, Licensed Exhorter, died Nov. 2, 1858. Bro. Watford was a native of Alabama; came to Louisiana some three or four years ago, with a letter from the Church in Alabama; he joined, a year ago last May; obtained license to exhort in July, and in August resolved to give himself wholly to the Church. But, alas; death claimed him. He was delirious nearly all his sickness; but his Godly walk and conversation while in health, assure us that all was well. Bro. Watford was about thirty years of age. God saw fit to take him from this world of trouble to a better—the Lord's will be done.

W. D. SLAYTON.

☞ Southern Christian Advocate please copy.

MRS. SARAH DEVAUGHN fell asleep in Jesus, on the 6th of October, 1858, in the 54th year of her age. She was a native of Virginia, but for the last six years a resident of this city, and more than thirty years a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Her illness was protracted, and her sufferings severe; but not a murmur escaped her lips. She was sustained in affliction by that religion that had been the source of all her happiness when in health. On account of physical suffering she was unable to converse much; but her whole life was a bright testimony in favor of the religion of Jesus. To her pastor, the Rev. R. J. Harp, and other friends who visited her frequently during her illness, she expressed herself as perfectly resigned to the will of God, and repeatedly assured them that "all was well;" felt that "for her to live was Christ; but to die would be eternal gain." In speaking of several friends, who were at a distance, she said, "I shall never more see them on earth, but tell them to meet me in glory." Sister Devaughn was a Bible-reading and a secret-praying Christian. In her daily life she exemplified the doctrine of Christian holiness better than any one it has ever been our privilege to associate with. In her death the Church militant has lost a "shining light," indeed. O! that it may be sanctified in the salvation of her children, for whom she so often prayed; to the Church of which she was a member; and also to the numerous friends who now mourn her loss. To all, we would say, follow her as she followed Christ. For none knew Sister Devaughn but realized a high estimate of her moral worth, and entertained a most profound regard for her as a Christian of the first order. But to those who know her best her loss will be felt most keenly. Thank God for the blessed hope of reunion in Heaven with those we have loved and mourned for here. Yes, Sister Devaughn, by the grace of God,

"In Heaven's wide domain,
There we all shall meet again."

YELLOW FEVER! YELLOW FEVER!

TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS!

Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air.—It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately. It cures burns, bites, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at J. WRIGHT, & CO'S, Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. e.22

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA

AND

IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from SASSAFRAS ROOT, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a PANACEA or CATHOLICON than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colladet, Byron, Bardsley, Munson, Ricord, Goodrich, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hufeland, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints; Lumbago; chronic Rheumatism, Coughs, Morning Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cancer, Palsy, Tumors, Obstructions, Ulcers; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Forcyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. LETTER FROM NAZARETH.

[CONCLUDED.]

Valley of Esdraelon—Scriptural Associations—Village of Nazareth—Palestine—Endor—Saul—Shunam—Village of Nain—Mount Tabor—Grotto of the Virgin Mary—The Women, their Costume, Amusements, etc.—Tents Robbed—Sensations and Reflections—Sea of Galilee, its connection with our Savior—The Sermon on the Mount—Sunrise—Magdala—Gennesaret—Capernaum.

NOT A SPOT in all this plain (Esdraelon) but is hallowed by some Scriptural reminiscence. In the distance rises Mount Tabor, in lofty grandeur, isolated, and alone in its sublime magnificence; the lesser Hermon and the range which terminates in the promontory of Mount Carmel. Other hills rising along its ridges, and Nazareth, with its flourishing village nestled in its beautiful valley among trees and flowers in their native splendor and primitive beauty; indeed, the whole of Palestine—its rocks, hills and plains—is at this time like a garden of flowers, completely embedded.

Among the hills, upon our right, were the ruins of the village of Endor, where Saul consulted with the Sorceress; and, on the plain beneath, the battle was fought in which he and his sons were slain, in the Mount of Gilboa. The cites too of Ahab and Jezreel. This plain where Jehu was seen driving furiously in his chariot, when met by Joram and Ahaziah—soon to punish the house of Ahab, that wicked King, and Jezabel his wife. And, not far off, Shunam, where Elisha restored the widow's only son.

These hills and valleys are wreathed with historic and sacred associations, and clad with beauty which reaches the heart from past recollections. And one, above all others, has fastened upon the memory from early childhood, near the village of Nain, where Christ raised from the dead the widow's son, lying upon the bier, and soon to be buried.

This whole valley, mountains and hills, echo with past recollections—sacred and holy.

As we ascended the hills leading to Nazareth, the prospect was one of unrivalled magnificence. The valley of Esdraelon lay like a map below us, verdant as a garden: the mountain of Tabor and others, clothed with beauty and rising in grandeur—the little hills covered with verdure, gave variety to a scene filled with thrilling interests and events, connected with the treasures of God's Holy Word, which mark each site.

We wound around these hills, and reached the village of Nazareth, where some of the early days of Jesus were passed, and his childhood was spent among the scenes upon which we gaze—the very pathway was one in which he might have trod.

Nazareth is situated upon a gentle acclivity, with its convent and church, and mosk and minaret. The church of the convent, built over the Home or Grotto of the Virgin Mary. The church is highly ornamented.

Our encampment is just outside the city. We entered the church as soon as we arrived, at the time of evening service. After it was over, we were conducted down a wide flight of steps, to the rooms below, called Mary's Grotto, lighted by lamps. In one place was an altar, it is said, she there met an angel; it is called the Altar of Annunciation; it is adorned with lights, kept burning during service, and illustrative paintings. We proceeded, by the aid of lights, to the kitchen of the Grotto, dug out of the solid rock.

Here, in this region of rocks, people live as they do no where else upon earth—some of them, in dwellings which look as if cut out of the mountain side; others, in holes in the rocks.

We were shown Joseph's Grotto or work-shop—fitted up with an altar, and a fine painting of Christ and his parents.

On the Sabbath which we spent here, after church service, the hill-side swarmed with women and children, assembled in groups for amusement, swinging and dancing—the children had ropes fastened to the trees and were swinging. Large groups of women came to our camp; they were dressed in gay, Oriental style, with embroidered robes and shawls. They wore vails, but only upon their heads and falling down their shoulders; their faces were uncovered, which were pleasant and good-looking; their eyes were black and very expressive, some of them exceedingly beautiful; their children were models of beauty—but curiously dressed, their caps ornamented with coin, as we have seen in other places. Many of their eyes were deeply stained with kohol—a practice among Christian as well as Mahomedan women. The palms of their hands and fingers were stained with henna. They appeared delighted to have us notice their children—of which they are very fond. They were more neat and clean than any children we had seen in the East. In Cairo they have such a dread of the evil-eye, that they never wash them.

We have not seen the Mohammedan children in this place; two-thirds of the inhabitants are Christians.

After the women and children had disappeared, a hundred or more men came down from the Greek Church, singing and clapping their hands, in a perfect extacy, it was Easter-Sunday—perhaps, the cause of so much joy and mirth among them.

The rain set in on Sunday night; and, on Monday morning, we were obliged to get lodgings in the Latin convent, where they have rooms appropriated to travelers; where we are now very comfortably enjoying the kind hospitality of the Franciscan monks. How long we shall be delayed we cannot tell.

On Saturday night our tents were robbed, by thieves breaking in while the watchmen slept; some of us were sufferers by these robbers. To-day the criers have been going round the city, calling out for the lost articles of clothing. A horse was also stolen. The government is very weak and feeble, where thieves and robbers go unmolested. This Moslem country must fall into other hands, if ever restored to prosperity or civilization—there is no hope for it as it now is.

We left Nazareth this morning, with a clear sky, on our way to Damascus. The hills were battered with fresh drops of rain, and the sun shone out most gloriously upon the heights, and gave beauty to the variegated scene, upon which our Savior in his childhood gazed, in the same position they now stand. The lofty brow of Mount Tabor burst upon our sight, as we ascended the hills, radiant with the freshness of verdure and covered with wild flowers of every hue. We saw Mount Carmel also in the distance, with other peaks along its range—they stand out in bold relief, lifting the mind as well as the eye with sublime and holy inspiration. Our hearts were full and tears were ready to gush, from sensibility of feeling, under circumstances so full of hallowed associations.

We wound around these hills of Nazareth, and looked down upon the little city for the last time, honored as it has been by the Son of God; and felt grateful that we had seen it, notwithstanding the difficulties in reaching it and the incidents of travel.

Not far off the village called Cana of Galilee, where Jesus turned the water into wine, and performed that miracle familiar to all readers of the Bible. A lovely fountain near the city is supposed to be the one from whence the water was taken. This city was accessible to Nazareth, and, in all probability, the identical one where that memorable wedding took place. We met a multitude of the inhabitants, the women and children fine-looking; the women particularly mild and pleasant, with fascinating black eyes.

A large valley opened upon us, rich in natural soil, but sadly neglected, as all Palestine appears to be, as respects cultivation. A few fields of grain were waving in the wind, where our Savior and his disciples passed through fields of corn; and the disciples were reproved by the Jews for gathering and eating them on the Sabbath. The ride was highly interesting, affording such variety as never ceases to please.

The Mount of Beatitude rose upon our sight, and we all rode to its summit to contemplate a scene which seizes upon the soul—where moral and physical grandeur blends in perfect harmony—while the mind expands, to grasp the simplicity of truth contained in that sermon, which embraces all the principles of the Gospel, hallowed by the lips of the Savior, who delivered them before the multitude gathered around him, on that hill upon which we stand. No place could be better suited—it commands a splendid view of the sea of Galilee—its placid waters equally hallowed by the miracle, of our Savior walking upon it, and washing the shore where many of His wonderful works had been wrought.

This mountain is isolated, and rises up to a considerable height—a beautiful flat surface upon its top, covered with grass.

Col. B. sat upon a rock, and read the first chapter which commences with the sermon, in which the attributes of divinity are so fully developed. It was a fitting spot to read these words: oh! may they never be lost upon the minds which listened to the divine precepts.

O, this beautiful sea! how lovely its waters shone upon our sight, as it lay among the hills in sweet repose, unruffled by storm or tempest. We rode along its shores, where the summits of the opposite sides dip their broad base in its waters, and reflect their shadows in its wave.

We reached the city of Tiberius before night, but ere we entered its walls visited a hot bath a mile or two below—an odd looking building—within a circular room with arches, a deep fountain sent up vapors so warm that we could remain but a few moments. On our way back, upon these lovely shores, we saw columns embedded in the earth, and foundations of buildings along the water's edge, which must have stood there in lofty grandeur in the days of Roman power, and in Herod's reign.

The city itself is in ruins—its walls and towers crumbling away, and its fortified castle destitute of strength, standing in a corner of the wall—it was once extensive and lofty. We camped within the walls of the city, for protection, and had our tents pitched in front of the castle—where we had a fine view of the sea, and the mountains beyond.

This city has been shaken with earth-quakes; and its walls bear the marks of its ravages.

The evening was beautiful and calm, as we looked upon the sea of Galilee, which mirrored the face of heaven upon its tranquil bosom, silent as the starry host which was reflected back upon its surface, without the rippling of an oar, or the motion of a boat to break the silence—not a white sail was seen to move upon its waters.

This morning, the 8th of April, we took seats upon a rock on the sea-shore to see the sun rise over the mountains, which surround it. The scene was full of sublime majesty—grave and impressive—and connected with so many events in the life of our Savior, calculated to awaken feelings of no ordinary kind, and fill the mind with sublime reflections. Hermon on our left, with its snow-crowned summits, rose in sublime grandeur, glittering in the sun-beams, seemed towering towards heaven, bearing upon his brow the song of other days, in bold and lofty magnificence. It was a wonderful scene—so pure, so white was its form among the green-clad hills, below it, and the blue sky, above—and the quiet stillness that reigned—nature's own eloquence was more powerful than language to communicate with the soul, to fill it with wonder and admiration. We left the place, and lingering cast another look upon scenes, memorable for events recorded in the Scriptures.

Our pathway round the lake in some places was high and precipitous, among rocks worn by time and the footsteps of centuries, until they are hollowed by the tread. Above us were hills that overlooked the sea, upon whose rocky summit sat two lone birds in lonely silence—looking over the abyss as if watching for prey.

We came upon a little plain—low and swampy—with a miserable mud-walled village, which they called Magdala, where, tradition says, Mary Magdalen was born. The people and place were in harmony, the most miserable looking beings that it is possible to imagine, so far as regards appearance. The place unhealthy and the people squalid—weeds, briars and grass, with a multitude of wild flowers, clustered together. The oleander was growing to the water's edge, in great abundance.

The plain or valley Gennesaret had a multitude of brooks rushing towards the sea; it is well watered, and if cultivated, must be productive. At its extremity, on the side of a hill, the old city of Capernaum is supposed to have stood. We entered a caravansera with many arched walls, which gives evidence of its former use, though modern in its structure. The site of the city must have been fine in the days of its prosperity, relieved by a back-ground of hills, which must have afforded an amphitheatre-like ridge for the extension of buildings among the rocks.

We passed along the shore to another site, even still more interesting from its local position, exactly north of the sea, with a point of land jutting out like a cape. A wall of some strength remains; back in the woods lay some columns of Roman origin, with sculptured surface, and a cornice belonging to some part of a building, probably, a temple or place of worship. A more lovely position could not have been found upon the shore of this beautiful sea for a city. The valley, back, forms a lovely nook, well adapted for all its wants, and the adjacent hills afford relief.

Between this and Capernaum are the ruins of a large Roman cistern, close by the mountain side; and the remains of an aqueduct, supposed to be the site of Bethesda, of which our Savior makes mention, as having been, with the others, the place of some of his most mighty works.

S. H. THOMAS.

TALES OF THE SOUTH.—BY A SOUTHERN MAN.

The Martyr Ministers.

IT WAS Summer in the South. The rays of an almost vertical sun kindled the air into the torrid glow of the tropics. Long, hot days, short, sultry nights, frequent showers and easterly winds, were ominous harbingers of disease and death in localities most exposed to their influence. Men of medical lore, guided by science and oft-repeated experience, saw, in the conjunction of these causes, the sure forerunner of the most fell destroyer of southern latitudes, and predicted the advent of yellow fever, of malignant type and deadly power, in its accustomed haunts.

Speedily was the prophecy fulfilled. The black vomito descended simultaneously upon several cities in the South, and raged with a fatality and fierceness almost unparalleled in the history of the disease. The living fleeing to distant places for safety, or cowering with fear at home—the constant spectators of the death of friends and relatives, and in hourly expectation of a fatal assault by the disease themselves; the dying, abandoned of times by all save the physician and the nurse; the dead, too numerous for orderly sepulture, hurried off, uncoffined and unattended by funeral train or dirge, to hasty burial in common graves; the hearse ever on the street, accompanied by the call of the driver for the patronage at the houses of the wealthy; the significant crape upon numberless doors; silence in the thoroughfares of trade, business deserted, shops and all houses of traffic closed; gloom, desertion, and dread everywhere—these concomitants of the epidemic, seen always, in some degree, where it prevails, appeared now with a frequency and universality that appalled all hearts, and made the year 1853 memorable among all the years of yellow fever visitation at the South.

Over one fair city of the South, in particular, the wing of the destroying angel brooded with the fierceness of the avenger that smote the firstborn of the land of Pharaoh. There the pestilence literally wasted at noonday, and walked in darkness. Medical skill availed neither to arrest the spread of the disease, nor to cure the infected. All who could, left the city. Thousands, however, remained, through the compulsion of business or the stringency of controlling circumstances. Into the ranks of these the epidemic spread with but little discrimination between the acclimated and the unacclimated portions. Young and old, male and female, bond and free, went down together in the wild maelstrom of the pestilence. Soon, in almost every house there were vacant seats at the hearth-stone, and wailings for the unreturning dead. In some instances whole families perished; children wept for parents, parents mourned for children. Few were the footfalls, save those of the physician and the hearseman, heard upon the streets. The sounds of revelry and mirth were supplanted by the groan of the sick, the wail of the bereaved, and the prayer of the minister as he consoled the dying, or closed the rayless eyes, and shut the mute lips of the dead. The beautiful city of the Gulf stood like Niobe of old, speechless in her woe. Her business departed, and hundreds of her sons and daughters passed away to be seen no more upon her streets or in the habitations of the living.

Mournful, indeed, and saddening almost to tears, would be the record which should attempt to chronicle even a tithe of the touching incidents and pathetic details of the pestilence. The presence of an epidemic, in dense communities, always brings out, in bold relief and in vivid contrast, the noblest and the meanest traits, the brightest and the darkest features, of humanity. In this smitten city of the South, as is the case everywhere in the midst of such a visitation, appeared ministering angels and incarnate fiends—the parsimony of hopeful avarice, and the prodigality of blank despair—the beastly revel of insantiate vice in its accustomed haunts, and the low voice of supplication and prayer in pulpit and closet; in a word, all the contrasts which human passion and human character can exhibit, came forth to pain or to gladden the moral vision of the beholder.

The clergy of the various religious denominations, true to their high office, remained in the city, and dispensed the ministries and consolations of religion to all who needed or asked their aid. To the acclimated, the mission, beautiful and holy as it is, was comparatively free from peril. They were charmed lives, but are entitled, nevertheless, to the full credit of duty nobly performed under the most appalling circumstances inviting to its abandonment. But the unacclimated, who remained, confronted by the almost assured certainty of death—who visited the dying and performed the burial service for the dead, only to contract the infection and die themselves—deserve the meed of praise for a courage higher than that of the battlefield, and their deaths rival, in moral sublimity, the martyrdoms of old.

The ministrations of both classes, however, furnish a striking illustration of the elevating and sustaining power of the religious sentiment. The courage which braves the perils of battle—delineated so often in the poet's lay and the orator's eulogium, as the highest exhibition of human bravery—sinks almost into cowardice when compared with the moral heroism inspired by religion, and exhibited by its ministers in their labors of love amid the horrors of pestilence. The soldier, fired by the contagious courage of numbers, and dulled to insensibility by the rigor of military discipline, the brutalizing effects of his profession, or the madness of real or simulated passion, encounters the dangers of war's direst spectacle with mute indifference, and little racks, in the fulness of his pride and strength, whether he survive or perish in the conflict. But he who wars with pestilence, battles with an invisible foe. He has nothing but his own sense of duty, and his high trust in God, to sustain him. The hot blood which fires the courage and inspires the deeds of the soldier, is not his to animate and sustain him, for his foe floats viewless on the wings of the air, and enters the citadel of life through the inspirations which impart health and nourishment to its vital currents. Pestilence is not a brave enemy that storms by open violence the fortress of existence, but an insidious coward that steals, silent and invisible, upon its victim. It conducts a siege in which no quarter is given, no terms offered to the vanquished, and the flag of capitulation which floats over its close is the sable plume of the hearse, or the mournful drapery of the dead. Who will say that the courage which grapples with a foe like this, is not of nobler mould than that of the heroes of battle and of song? Around are the dying and the dead—the one needing prayers, and the other sepulture. Universal panic prevails among the living. Business has ceased. The pulpits are silent, for the worshippers dread the effect of contact in masses. On every countenance is gloom, and in every heart is sadness. The wail of the bereaved, the groans of the dying, the blasphemy of the impious and the prayers of the pious, go up in blended chorus from the smitten city below to the unpitying heavens above.

In the midst of this scene of desolation and despair, the ministers of religion move and act. The living are admonished, the dying consoled, the bereaved comforted, and the burial service pronounced over the dead. With a mission and labors like these, no human vocation can be fitly compared, and the courage which impels to the one, and sustains amid the perils of the other, is the noblest that man exhibits, and the highest that Heaven bestows.

Three examples of this martyr heroism inspired by religion, occurred during the memorable epidemic of 1853, in the ill-fated city of the South to which reference is intended in the preceding remarks. A brief allusion to each must close this tale.

The epidemic has reached its maximum of malignity and fatality. In a room fitted up with all the appliances of a scholar's study, upon a low bed or cot, a young man lies, smitten with the prevailing fever. He is apparently not more than twenty-two or three years of age. The person is tall and slender, the forehead ample, and the eyes, until dimmed by illness, beamed with the light of a kind, vivacious and intelligent spirit. He has passed through the last great agony of his disease, and the glazing eye and fluttering pulse tell that his end draws rapidly nigh. Beside him sits his spiritual adviser. The physician has made his last visit, saw the fatal symptom of inevitable death, and left him for more hopeful patients. The faithful nurse is with him still. The deep hush in the room, broken only by the low breathing of the invalid, betokens the chamber of approaching death. As the sublime transfiguration from mortal to immortal goes on, let us step softly into the room, and inquire who and what the meek sufferer is.

He was borne beneath the bright skies and amid the balmy airs of a suburban, southern clime. Surrounded by the pleasant sights and sounds of a rural home, he grew up, in loving communion with nature and books, and congenial associates, into genial, hopeful and not very robust manhood. His heart was the home of every noble emotion, and his head a foundation of beautiful thought. He was blessed alike in his moral aptitudes and in his intellectual capabilities. He was, in fact, a man of talents, and became, by assiduous culture, as learned as he was gifted and pure.

The bias of his faculties led him naturally into the pulpit. Blessed with a head and heart which qualified him for its duties, he entered upon his holy office with zeal, and the promise of a lengthened career of usefulness. By the allotment of the ecclesiastical authority to which he was subject, he was stationed the first year of his ministry, in the Gulf city of the South. There he labored faithfully, successfully, and most acceptably to his church, for several months. When the storm of the epidemic came down upon the devoted city, friends abroad and counsellors at home advised him to quit his charge and retire, for a season, to a place of safety. He prayerfully considered, but conscientiously rejected, their advices. He was at the post of duty. Providence had environed him with peril, and could, if best for himself and others, deliver him in the very midst of the pestilence.

Thus comforted by his faith, and sustained by the consciousness that he was engaged in the performance of what he believed to be his duty, he devoted himself, night and day, to the labors and perils of his sacred calling. He preached to the well, he visited the sick, prayed for the dying, and read the burial service of his church at the grave of the dead. Universally popular, and admired by all for the heroism of his spirit and conduct, he was incessantly summoned hither and thither, into all parts of the city. He went whenever called, and did good deeds and uttered good words wherever he went.

But in the midst of his labors and usefulness, he contracted the disease himself, and lies now in his study, rapidly succumbing to its power. He utters no complaint. Audible prayer and snatches of spiritual songs burst occasionally, in feeble ascents, from his lips. He is far from kindred and early friends. No voice or presence of parent, or brother, or sister, soothes his departing spirit. And yet all is well with him. He goes down into the shadow of the dark valley, but not fearfully, or alone. The silver cord of life is gently loosened. Symphonies from choral bands, unheard by ears of flesh, fill the chamber. A sweet smile passes over the face of the sufferer, and the first of the martyr ministers is at rest.

In the same city, and during the same epidemic, another scene invites the recording pen of the chronicler. A beautiful woman, young and sorrowful, bends over the couch of a dying man, and wipes the gathering dews of death from his brow. He, too, is gifted in mind and noble in heart. Though small in stature, he has the marked forehead and beaming eye that belong to the sons of genius. His early advantages have been great. No opportunity which wealth could command, or the solicitude of fond parents could devise, to develope him into robust manhood of mind and heart, has been wanting. As all his aptitudes, both moral and intellectual, were favorable, the result responded fully to the exertions and care expended in his behalf. He ripened into manhood, rich in the graces of the heart, and abounding in all the accomplishments of the mind. Possessed of a brilliant imagination, a ready and graceful elocution, and a scholarship high and rare for his age, he stepped forth into the arena of life, prepared to contend for its noblest prizes, and with every prospect of abundant success. Educated at a military school, he was originally destined for the profession of arms. But a work of grace in his heart, co-operating with an overmastering conviction that it was his duty to labor for the promotion of the spiritual interests of his fellow-men, impelled him to the ministrations of the pulpit as his calling for life. He had labored assiduously and successfully in the ministry for several years, when the year of the pestilence found him stationed in the smitten city of the Gulf. Unacclimated, and so liable at any moment to contract the disease, the husband of a lovely woman, and the father of several small children, his life was deemed too valuable to them and to the world to be perilled amid the epidemic, and he was importunately urged to flee from the city. But his sense of duty forbid the flight. His high courage and unwavering trust in the wisdom and goodness of Providence, resigned him even to the martyrdom of untimely death, if that, indeed, were the ordination of his lot. He felt, it is true, as a father, and loved devotedly as a husband; but a sense of obligation higher than any that human affection can impose, bade him remain at his post and he heeded what he deemed its divine admonition.

In the midst of incessant ministries, at the bedside and at the grave, he fell sick of the pestilence himself, and lay down to die. As he had borne himself meekly in his high office, and kept his record clear, he was ready and, if such were the will of Heaven, not unwilling to depart. Surrounded by wife, children and friends, sustained by an unfaltering faith, and bowing in peace to the inevitable summons, he passed unmurmuringly to the dreamless rest of mortality, and the second of the martyr ministers was numbered with the dead.

One instance more, and the mournful recital ends. When the epidemic was at its height, and the gloom over the city had deepened almost to the blackness of despair, a mild-looking, middle-aged man, with kindling eye and glowing countenance, might have been seen, passing from house to house, and from street to street, bearing the messages and the consolations of religion, and the needed aid of a nursing hand, into the dreariest haunts of the pestilence. He fears not, for he knows that good angels tend round about all who tread in the path of duty. The alert and vigorous intellect, the generous heart, the high culture of letters, eloquence, exalted piety and burning zeal in all the offices of his holy vocation—all these are his, and, with deliberate choice, he lays them all as a sacrifice upon the altar of duty. On the field of his benignant labors he is smitten by the shaft of the pestilence, and goes down, amid the tears and unavailing prayers of all who knew him, to the silent embrace of the tomb.

In one of the cemeteries of the city of Mobile, there are three graves of nearly equal age. Side by side their little hillocks rise,—a triple brotherhood, in that multitudinous city of the dead. In these lie the mortal remains of three Methodists preachers. As in lives, labors and martyrdom, they were united, so in their sepulture they have not been divided. A chaste monument, erected by the joint contributions of the church and of the citizens of Mobile, bears, inscribed upon its marble pillars, the names of Hughes, Starr and Powell—the three martyr ministers of our tale. "Life's fitful fever over, they sleep well" together, where neither the breath of the pestilence nor the wail of its victims can come. Peace be to their ashes, and green evermore, in the sunny land of their birth, be the memory of their virtues, their Christian lives, and their heroic deaths.

THE LAST AGONY.

What is that?

Dr. Drake's address "to the members of the Mississippi Conference," in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of November 17.

At a meeting of the officers and managers of the Tract Society of the Mississippi Conference, held in July, 1855, they passed a resolution, advising the keeping a stock of books at Vicksburg; and instructed the Agent, Rev. R. Abbey, to raise means for that purpose.

At the Conference held in Vicksburg, in November, 1855, the subject was before the officers and managers at two or three meetings. They instructed the writer to establish a Depository at Vicksburg. It was understood in the Conference, that the preachers would send to us for their books—encourage the organization of Sabbath Schools, because they would be able to purchase books so conveniently. Dr. Stevenson, who was at the Conference, urged us to engage in the Agency and have a Depository at Vicksburg, as we could now readily enlist all the preachers to become colporteurs, and sell more books.

So, being encouraged by so many, we went to work; and did—something. Twice—if not nearly three times, the amount of books were put into circulation in 1856, more than had been in any one year since the division of the Church; and we attempt to furnish books, through a Southern publication and Depository system and publishing-house. I know whereof I affirm.

It was no little job to get on a stock of Books, Tracts, etc, procure and fit up a house, put up and arrange the books, hire a clerk, enlist the preachers in the work, travel near six thousand miles, and present the claims of a new project or society to the people and raise over $3,000. Yet Dr. D. would make the impression that but very little was done! Yet I could present instances of awakening and conversion in connection with the year's labor, and circulation of books that would make others say, much was done that was good, very good—a family converted, one of whom is a preacher, a church built, etc. He seems to estimate the amount done, simply by the number of dollars collected. During that year, over three thousand Catechisms were put into the hands of children and servants. I venture to say, that not five hundred of them would have been ordered, if the Depository had not been in our bounds. We could not keep a supply of commentaries on hand when they were ordered every few weeks, as many as twenty-five sets at a time. Yet but little or nothing was done! Can Dr. Drake guess how many hundred Bibles we sold and gave away? or how many hundred dollars worth of books were given to the poor, afflicted etc? Would he believe us, when we say over eleven hundred dollars worth? Yet we were accomplishing but little.

The truth is, Dr. D. has been opposed to the Depository from the first; has always predicted evil, and seems to be determined to make his prophecy true, by doing all he can, in public and private—on his District, in the Conference room, and in the paper, to kill it dead, dead, dead!

So, we have his last agony and death struggle. It must die, or—he will.

His course, with a few others, has been strange—almost beyond comprehension. At our last Conference session, they fought hard to kill the Depository, under the charter; for in March, 1857, a charter had been obtained. All gathered up and arranged, showed that they opposed it; 1. Because they were not the originators; 2. Because they were not consulted in arranging the charter; 3. Because some few certain persons were at the bottom of it; 4. Because mere donors to the society could be made responsible for its debts; 5. Because the Conference would be responsible for its debts; 6. Because share holders were not responsible for its debts; 7. Because it was offering to the Conference the proceeds, to which it, the Conference, was not entitled; 8. Because it was only an incipient step towards establishing a rival Publishing House, and destined to damage the one at Nashville. When there was not a word said in the Constitution or Charter about publishing—except our reports; 9. It was bringing the Church into low repute for a Methodist Depository to enter into the school book and stationery trade, while there were so many others to do it. I wonder if it disgraces the Church for a minister to grow cotton, raise pigs, cattle, etc? thousands of others doing such work; 10. It was bound to be a great failure; 11. The Depository at New Orleans would serve all practical purposes—meet all demands; and we were bound to co-operate with the Louisiana Conference, in building up and sustaining that. So the long chapter went.

Now let any one read these items in connection with Dr. Drake's late address, and I think he will see some strange and contradictory things—I wont say what.

He fling at the lean majority of the General Conference, shows that he needs commiseration. Others are of opinion that a large and fat majority voted for the plan recommended. The editor knows how it was in committee. Each Conference was left to select its own mode of raising funds for a Depository. If the Financial Secretary and Book Committee, arrange and recommend a good plan, let them adopt that.

But Dr. D. thinks the money "will be very hard to raise." Oh! And so it will, if those who ought to be in the front and encouraging the preachers and people to do their duty are in the rear, and using all their weight and influence to discourage the half inclined people.

I believe an Agent could raise $50,000 in one year in Mississippi Conference, if all the preachers would give countenance and encouragement to the plan—that Rev. R. Abbey would have secured notes, money and subscriptions to the amount last year, if he had been let alone and encouraged by all the preachers. H. H. MONTGOMERY.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Tyler, Texas, November 11, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: Our fourteenth session opened yesterday morning, at nine o'clock, by Bishop Pierce, and on the roll being called most of the members answered to their names.

During the past year, but two of our traveling brethren have fallen in their work. They died like faithful embassadors in the holy war. The past year has been one of unusual success in the bounds of East Texas Conference, I think it probable, the next increase will not fall short of two thousand, and perhaps reach above these figures.

On answering the first question, "who are admitted on trial?" There were seven young men received, and judging from the report of their Presiding Elders, they were "safe cases." We have had one re-admission. We have quite an accession to our traveling ranks. We shall have men, we think, to fill up our work, equal in any previous years.

SATURDAY NIGHT.—Harmony has prevailed, the missels let fly at some, in the papers during the year, on the depository and other questions, seems to be harmless. This is all right. We have quite an accession to our traveling ranks, from three sources; first, by admission of a promising set of young men; secondly, by transfers from four or five Conferences; and, thirdly, re-admissions of this class. We got among us men of experience and sound judgment, Rev. J. W. P. McKenzie, in whose name, as a teacher of sciences. Rev. James Graham, principal of Paris Female High School. Rev. W. W. Canider, Rev. W. B. Hill. These brethren know how to wield the "old Jerusalem blade."

Some of the important committees have already brought in their reports, and action had on them. I will name two: the Publishing Committee on Texas Christian Advocate have discontinued the old contract with D. Ayers—taking the entire control of all the interests of the paper, appointing three, as their fiscal agents. The committee called the "Special Committee on the Depository." The action of Conference decided not to become a partner in the Galveston Depository. There is one other important committee to report; committee on education. Outside of said committee there seems to be a division of opinion in regard to the connection we hold with the "Scale University." Many of the brethren entertain the idea, that we should look to the Conference education interests in our own bounds, as we sustain but a nominal relation to that University; it is understood that McKenzie, will convey to this Conference his school with all its appurtenances in fee simple; if so, we will have the best school in Texas. There is now about two hundred and fifty students in the institution.

The Starville Female High School, has not met the expectations of the Conference owing to the fact, that we have not a suitable building. The friends in the immediate vicinity propose to put up a good and spacious brick building, and that without calling upon the Conference for material aid. There has been no school taught in the Fowler institute during the year; too large an amount of dollars and cents in brick and mortar has been expended, to abandon it.

CLOSE OF SESSION.—Conference closed its session, on Tuesday, 16th. There were a few subjects out of the regular course of business, on which some were looking to with no little interest. But when those subjects were reported on, there was but little disagreement in opinion, or at least but little expressed; I will mention two subjects: the Depository and Texas Christian Advocate. A large majority were not in favor of a partnership in the Galveston Depository. There was an effort to have a book agent, whose duty it should be to collect a book fund, and supply the preachers from the publishing-house or depositories. This was reported on, but finally "went by the board." Conference determined not to have a book agent; but follow the old line of business, for every preacher to supply his work with such books, as are found to be in demand. From our peculiar geographical position, it was thought best, not to go into a depository or book agency at this period of our history.

The Texas Christian Advocate was another source of anxiety and some trouble, in the minds of many brethren. There were peculiarities connected with this Texas enterprise; many of us had not forgotten the time when its indebtedness had to be met out of the impoverished purses of the itinerants. It is yet in debt, some four thousand dollars; to meet which and to purchase an office and fixtures, there was subscribed over two thousand dollars in two annual instalments. Quite a number of the preachers settling down their names for one hundred dollars, and many of them giving their notes. East Texas Conference pledged herself to send up five hundred new and paying subscribers by the first of February, 1859. It is hoped they will not forget this resolution, as many do forget Conference resolutions, and never act in accordance with their vote.

Mr. Editor, for fear of occupying too much of your columns, with "Texas doings," I will close.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

Trenton, Tennessee, November 17, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: The Memphis Conference has been in session at this place now several days. Bishop Paine is presiding. The Conference is in harmony and prosperity, the members are mostly present, and their showing in regard to the condition of the Church, in the various parts of the Conference, is good. This Conference is in a thriving condition. They have a fine body of preachers—men of labor, perseverance, sacrifice, self-denial.

The question of a Book and Tract Depository for this Conference, pursuant to the wish and recommendation of the General Conference, was brought forward at an early period, and referred to a large and able committee. The committee, in two several meetings, examined this whole matter carefully, and came unanimously to the conclusion, with perhaps one exception of a member not present all the while, to report a constitution conformable to the plan submitted by the Financial Secretary.

This report was partially considered by the Conference, but business, necessary to be transacted before Sabbath, rendered it necessary to be laid over for the time, and it was accordingly made the order of the day for Monday.

On Monday the subject was extensively examined, and the Conference voted in favor of a Depository, and determined to undertake the raising of $100,000, according to the plan submitted by the Financial Secretary. They locate their depository at Memphis, and undertake in good earnest. Two Agents were appointed, Brothers P. Tagg and J. T. C. Collins, by the request of the Conference, they being the choice of the committee and the Financial Secretary. At a subsequent meeting held for the purpose, the Agents opened their books and received subscriptions to the amount of $4,000.

The slavery resolution passed unanimously, 98 to expurge, more in the negative. R. ABBEY.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1858.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The following, is the Governor's Proclamation. We subjoin an article from the Idependent on the duty of giving thanks. As a community we have special reasons for thankfulness.

Whereas, it becomes us to acknowledge our dependence on and gratitude to a merciful Providence that has extended its protection over us during the year now drawing to a close—

Therefore I, as Governor of the State of Louisiana, would respectfully suggest that Saturday, the 18th of December next, be set apart as a day for thanksgiving and prayer, and earnestly request the good people of the State to suspend on that day all business avocations, that it may be devoted exclusively to the worship of Almighty God.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State, at the town of Baton Rouge, this 15th day of November, A. D. 1858, and of the independence of the United States of America the eighty-third.

By the Governor, ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE.
ANDREW B. ROMAN, Secretary of State.

Be ye thankful!

For what? Reader, have you ever asked for what? Have you ever attempted to enumerate your blessings, and consider how many and how great they are? You live. God has given you the blessings of life under his government, a life beginning on the earth; to reach beyond the stars; beginning in the flesh, to ascend through transfigured forms inconceivably nearer God,—a life making you capable of the best things, and of better things in endless progression! If you apprehend it aright, simply to be with such a God for your Father, with such a Savior, and such a sonship and inheritance, would be enough to fill your heart with thanksgivings. We sometimes speak of mere existence; but there is no such thing. God never gives it apart from the conditions of his wisdom and goodness, and from the glorious possibilities of his grace. We ought never to think of it apart from the purposes and provisions of God our Heavenly Father; and then to think of life, of what it really is, and what it may prove to, is to be thankful not on occasions, but perennially, not in sunshine alone, but as truly in the darkness. Reader! think who God is, and what Christ has done, estimate what life is, given by that God and redeemed by that Savior, and then say to yourself, This life is mine, and be thankful. True, this gift comes to you freighted with heavy responsibilities; and it could not be otherwise and be what it is. But life coupled with the grace of the Gospel, cannot be otherwise than a blessing and an infinite blessing, except through guilty transgression the grace of God be forfeited, and life be torn from the benefits in the midst of which He has embedded it. Be thankful then for the life God has given you, and receive with profound gratitude "the gift of God, which is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Think, too, how many blessings God has dropped upon your path, in past years; recall with a fresher remembrance, and a more immediate gratitude, the benefits of the seasons just past, the sunshine of the summer, the golden harvests, and the bright healthful skies of the waning autumn. Are they not one and all sweet proofs to you of the love of your Heavenly Father, and should you not regard them, as you pass along, as way-marks, and prophetic fingers pointing to the glory yet to be revealed? God's goodness in this disciplinary state, is enough to betoken the higher blessedness he has reserved in Heaven, and we are to be thankful for present mercies, not only for what they are in themselves, but as earnests of the Heavenly Inheritance.

Perhaps these lines are followed by eyes, filling with tears, in fresh experience of severe affliction. Still to such of our readers, we say the same thing, be ye thankful, God is good to you, and if but teachable and patient, in due time you shall know it. In some particulars you can even now see his goodness, and for these render God your intelligent thanks; but be sure, that in other respects, where you see not, and in which what you see contradicts your faith and hope, be sure, that God is equally good. Where God's seeming providence contradicts his written word, it is our duty, a manifest and simple one, to trust and to wait. "Blessed," said the Master, "are they that have not seen, yet have believed." This blessedness can be yours only in these circumstances of affliction; and hence such afflictions. But while you are trusting and waiting, does it seem too much to ask that you should be thankful likewise? And can you not give thanks on the basis of God's word, on the certainty of those blessed issues, which though not foreseen, are nevertheless sure to accrue to them that hope in his mercy? To have no heart for thanksgiving, and to find no subject for it, is a sign that unbelief has laid the heart waste, and made the world and God as poor as oneself.

But while thus exhorting our readers to thankfullness, there is one duty ever to be associated with it, as its truest test and expression, and this is, that you remember the poor, to relieve their wants, and call forth from otherwise desolate hearts fresh thanksgivings. There is no act so suitable to one who feels his obligation to God, as benefactions to the poor, which glorifies God, by enkindling gratitude in other hearts. Be imitators of God, as dear children. If your thanksgivings are cordial, and you really admire and love the character of the Giver of all good, it will be the natural and the necessary outflowing of this feeling, to do good in God's name to others. Thanksgiving is the essence of religion; but its manifestations is this, that you "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." And in the discharge of this duty, expend the time and the care needful to perform it aright and most effectually. Much is given sometimes in a way not to encourage industry, but idleness; not to promote self-respect, but dependence; not to seperate a man from his vices, but afford him facilities to indulge them. We will append two short rules, the wisdom of which has been approved by long experience. First—Give with your own hand to the poor whom you know, to whose houses you have gone, adding to the gift of money, or provisions, the gift of your time, your labor, your spoken kindness. You will then double and quadruple the benefit you confer. You will certify yourself of the worthiness of the recipient, and you, yourself, will be a recipient of a far greater good than you confer, according to the words of our blessed Lord. Secondly—Act through institutions, and thus avail yourself of the economy resulting from a division of labor, and from system, and your benefaction will be multiplied ten-fold in the substantial benefits it confers upon the needy. Remember the orphan, the sick, the aged. Visit the Institutions which Christain munificence has reared for these suffering classes; peradventure some of them are near your own door. Your thanksgivings will rise more acceptably before God, if they mingle, in their ascent, with the thanks and prayers of the poor your charity has gladdened. "Seeing your good works they shall glorify your Father who is in Heaven."

A PLAIN, SIMPLE DEFINITION OF FAITH.

Having obtained the king's pardon for a poor man, cast for transportation, I carried it to the jail to him. Seeing the poor fettered creature fall down upon his knees to render up thanks, caused me to burst into tears of heartfelt joy. I thought, this is just what thou, O my precious Savior, hast done for me! Thou hast obtained a free and full pardon for all my sins; set my soul at liberty, and filled it with peace and joy, by the atonement of thy precious blood! The poor convict had not read his pardon; he had not seen the king's name to it. I only made the report to him, that I had got it. He believed me. Hence he was happy, joyful, and thankful that he had received his pardon.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Mobile, November 23, 1858.

Stopped Vexations.

Faith is often tried—the trials are varied and peculiar sometimes of such a nature as to seriously shake those who pay any attention to "sight." Not willing to leave New Orleans on Sunday afternoon for the Alabama Conference, and unable to spare the time to leave on Saturday; the Conference commencing on Wednesday, when there is but a night and a day, by railroad and steamboat—if connections and regularity obtain—between New Orleans and Macon, Mississippi. I left on Monday afternoon, and arrived here this morning, an hour or two after the cars had gone. Had the connection been made, I should have been at Macon to-night, in good time for Conference opening next morning.

But, be patient. Go to-morrow morning, get there to-morrow night, and lose only one day of Conference. But lo! What is this report? The passenger train leaves every morning only! Will have to wait untill Thursday morning, and lose two days of Conference. Hope not. Ran to the Railroad office to see. Yes, it is even so. Bad, bad. Why, sir, what sort of a railroad have you got? The Jackson Railroad, when it gets the slightest connection with Alabama, will turn travel away from you, if you do not stir up. Forty-eight hours lost in one place, when ten minutes is enough, is too bad. Could be to Memphis—nearly to Nashville—quite, I believe, before I get to Macon. Oh, the yellow fever has deranged every thing, is the reply. What fever? The epidemic of 1858? Talking about that yet? Thought it was forgotten. The epidemics stop no business. Southern cities cannot admit such a sentiment.

Leave the office annoyed. Meet an old friend, J. Elder Esq. He consoles. Can go to-morrow morning on the freight train, and get in only a few hours later than if on the passenger train. Good. But the men in the office say not a moment will be gained. Freight train only goes half way in a day. "But I know better," says he. "I run the train." All right. Thankful.

Walker and the Filibusters.

The end is not yet. The government have not granted a "clearance" to let the vessel take them, and "clear out." Rumor is, that it will be granted. Another rumor is that, if not granted, there will be trouble. What sort? Dont know. Still another rumor is, that the filibusters will go without a clearance. Some say most of them have gone. They have "thinned out wonderfully, at any rate. There were between four and five hundred here. Some are here yet. About twenty-five or thirty came over with us from New Orleans, they say. But what, if they go without a clearance? Could they escape the Government war vessels? If they did, would not the British West India fleet catch them, and hang them? Catching before hanging, but catching, in this case, seems quite possible. Would the British hang them, or shoot them? They had better not. Uncle Sam might not relish it. The American people, filibusters or anti-filibusters, certainly would not.

After all, two things are coming to light. 1. The people of this country have never known, practically, that there was any Federal Government, for them. They have heard of it by the hearing of the ear. They thought it was necessary, to keep up the form of nationality, to whip foreign enemies, to take care of post-offices, land-offices, the revenue, etc. But to stop them from going where, and doing what they please, whoever heard of such a thing? 2. There is such a thing as a Federal Government. We had better become acquainted with it, in some other way than in merely reading speeches in Congress, and voting for President.

But enough of gossip. The promise to write was extorted, and must be kept. A travelling correspondent think up any thing; he must write about what he sees and hears, and what spontaneously rises to the top of the surface of the mind and heart.

Gleeful Religion.

Walking alone, along a street in Mobile, I saw a young, smart looking negro woman approach a paling fence, and address a rather oldish looking woman of the same color who was on the other side. "Why in de name o' sense Whar you bin dis long time? I do'nt see you no whar. I spected you was done lost." This came from the old one. The young one replied: "Oh! I bin kept mighty close. I bin out, close out to de old grave yard. I bin settin up wid one old sister,—old sister. I set up wid her nearly all night, for eber so many nights. She biu mighty sick." "Well now, how is de dear old sister? "Oh, she gone safe!" "Well now, da'nt tell! How you talk! Gone!" "Oh, yes, bless de Lord! Sha landed safe dis mornin, just at de break ob day! I tell you child, she went a shluin and a singin. He! he! he! Hallelujah; child, it was de gloriousest time! We all atood by her till de last minnit, and see her safe troo de last battle De old debil done loss anoder siu—sick and weary Ziou trabler. He don't get her certain! He! he! he!"

"Let me die the death of the righteous!"

THE BEAUTIFUL.

What is it? It is composed of every thing that is good, and noble, and true. It is in all high thoughts—nursed upon the bosom of genius. It sets upon the gorgeous throne of Intellect, and with its handmaids, the Fine Arts, wields a golden sceptre over the heart. From the four rivers of Eden it flashed from the trippling wavelets. It hummed a sweet song in the fragrant zephyr that fanned the cheek of mother Eve. It smiled from leafy Valambrosia, and glittered from the stars that gleamed like lances from "the deep Galilee." It has lingered upon the trembling string of the lyre, and enfolded poetry in its spotless mantle. The Beautiful! It is not in the alluring Tarpia, with her glittering jewels and frozen eyeballs, staring on for ever. In the pomp and pageantry of the earth, it is only mimicked. It is in the simplicity of innocent, holy childhood, sleeping upon the mother's bosom, and dreaming of the angels, or playing beneath shady trees. Manhood moving onward in a noble mission, possesses true Beauty. And then Old Age—the twilight of life—when the stars of eternity begin to shine out from the far off heaven—how beautiful it is! In truth, earth, air and heaven are filled with the Beautiful. It is the great embodiment of "nature and nature's God," streaming from floating clouds, and murmuring rivers, silent groves and solemn forest. Science and art are but keys to unlock the doors to its exhibition. All the Christian virtues cluster, as stars, in its crown. In sooth, we love the Beautiful, and it shall be a part of our mission to develope a keener appreciation of it.

STAMPEDE DURING SERVICE.

The Tyler Reporter, of the 20th, has the following: On Saturday night last, while Bishop Pierce was preaching at the Methodist Church, the cry was raised that the house was falling, and immediately a "stampede" ensued, which baffles description. The utmost consternation prevailed, as every person in the house made desperate struggles to reach the places of exit. The Church was crowded to its utmost capacity with ladies and gentlemen, and the screams of the former and shouts of the latter were enough to appal the stoutest. Pell-mell, over each other they rushed, in their mad panic—the stouter crushing the weaker under foot, until the house was cleared. Windows were dashed to pieces to afford openings for egress, and men, women and children came through so promiscuously, so mixed up, that you could'nt tell "t'other from which." As soon as all had gained the open air, it was discovered that the alarm was a false one, and that no danger whatever had existed. It is not known what originated the alarm. The services were not resumed on that evening. Singular to say, no person was seriously injured in the panic.

OUR CHANGING CLIMATE.

The following beautiful passage by Washington Irving might almost make a March day cheerful: "Here let us say a word in favor of those vicissitudes of our climate, which are too often made the subject of exclusive repining. If they annoy us occasionally by changes from hot to cold, from wet to dry, they give us one of the most beautiful climates in the world. They give us the brilliant sunshine of the South of Europe, with the fresh verdure of the North. They float our summer sky gorgeous tints of fleecy whiteness, and send down cooling showers to refresh the panting earth, and keep it green. Our seasons are full of sublimity and beauty.

"Winter with us hath none of its proverbial gloom. It may have its howling winds and chilling frosts, and whirling snow storms; but it has also its long intervals of cloudless sunshine, when the snowclad earth gives redoubled brightness to the day, when at night the stars beam with intensest luster, or the moon floods the whole landscape with her most limpid radiance. And the joyous outbreak of our Spring, bursting at once into leaf and blossom, redundant with vegetation, and vociferous with life and the splendor of Summer—its morning voluptuousness and evening glory—its airy palaces of sunlit clouds piled up in a deep azure sky; and its gusts of tempests of almost tropical grandeur, when the forked lightning and bellowing thunder-volley from the battlements of heaven shake the sultry atmosphere; and the sublime melancholy of our Autumn, magnificent in its decay, withering down the pomp of a woodland country, yet reflecting back from its yellow forests the golden serenity of the sky. Truly we may say that in our climate, 'The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.'"

"LAY BY ME TILL MORNING."

Last Sabbath evening a—week, at the young men's prayer meeting in the Rev. D. Brainard's Church, in this city, a stranger arose, and begged the privilege to speak, announcing himself as captain of a vessel now in port, and a professor of the religion of Christ. "I wish," says he, "to warn the impenitent here, that delays are dangerous. It is not safe to put off till to-morrow what ought to be done this day. It was my lot, when sailing, to fall in with that ill-fated steamer the Central-America. The night was closing in, the sea rolling high, but I hailed the crippled steamer, and asked if they needed help. "I am in a sinking condition," cried Captain Herndon.—"Had you not better send your passengers on board now?" I replied. 'Will you not lie by me till morning?' responded Captain H. 'I will try,' replied I, 'but had you not better send your passengers on board?' 'Lay by me till morning,' again said Captain Herndon. I made the effort to lay by him; but at night, with such a sea rolling, no vessel could control its position, and I never saw the steamer more. In one hour and a half after the captain said, 'lay by me till morning,' the vessel with its living freight went down, and he himself, with a great majority of his passengers and crew were coffined in the deep. So much for procrastination. But for this delay, the entire crew and passengers of the Central America might have been saved. Sinners, when urged to immediate repentance, don't say to beseeching friends, to offered mercy, to a striving Spirit, 'Not now, lay by me longer, till I have a convenient time.' This night you may sink in the waves of perdition."

WHERE TO SPEND SABBATH DAYS.

In his Journal of Health for August, Dr. Hall evinces himself equally as well qualified, in some cases, at least, to prescribe for the cure of morals as for maladies. Hear him: "Many a man has confessed under the gallows, that his downward progress began with misspent Sabbaths. Upon investigation, it will be often found that the first steps taken, were in what many call, 'innocent recreations'—taking a drive, wandering in the fields, lolterings by the river side, or visiting neighbors. At home, or at church, are the places for spending the hours of the sacred day; especially is it the way of safety for young people—safety from the grog-shops, the engine-house, and the chambers of her whose ways go down to death: and how much of bodily disease are traceable directly to these places, to say nothing of moral corruptions, any city physician, of ever moderate practice, has daily cognizance."

HOW TO HEAR THE GOSPEL.

Rowland Hill paid a visit to an old friend a few years before his death, who said to him: "Mr. Hill, it is just sixty-five years since I heard you preach, I remember your text and part of your sermon. You told us that some people were very squeamish about the delivery of ministers who preached the same gospel. You said, "Suppose you were attending to hear a will read, where you expected a legacy left you, would you employ the time in criticizing the manner in which the lawyer read it? No, you would not; you would be giving all ear to hear if anything was left to you, and how much it was. That is the way I would advise you to hear the gospel." Good advice—well worth remembering for sixty-five years.

The Louisiana Conference will convene at the Carondelet Street Church, in this city, on Thursday, the 16th inst. Brethren will call at this office, No. 112 Camp Street, where they will be shown to their homes.

Commercial Academy.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. Rufus Dolbear, which will be found in another column.

Correspondents and Readers must be patient and forbearing during the editor's absence.

Leiou Richmond's Grand-Daughter.—The neighborhood of Clifton, England, was recently thrown into a most painful excitement, in consequence of the death of a young lady, the daughter of a clergyman in the county of Gloncester, under circumstances of the most appalling description. The young lady in question, Miss Mary Richmond, was about eighteen years of age, and is understood to be a grand-daughter of the Reverend Leigh Richmond. Miss Richmond was on a visit to a connection of her family, residing near Richmond Park, Clifton. On Friday she was observed to wander to a cliff, called the "Lion's Head Cliff," which stands at an elevation of upwards of three hundred feet from the road below, and from which are obtained magnificent views of the Avon, the Hot Wells, the Leigh Woods, Ashton, and the surrounding scenery. From this tremendous height the unhappy young lady fell. The precise circumstances which led to the terrible accident are differently stated, but that it was an accident, and not, as at first stated, a suicide, there can be no reasonable doubt. According to one statement, Miss Richmond was absorbed in the perusal of a book, and she unconsciously walked over the edge of the precipice. Another account states that she was endeavoring to gather one of the rock plants which grow in the crevices of the limestone formation, and that in her effort to reach it she overbalanced herself and so fell. In her descent she was observed to beat against the projecting points of the cliff, and finally to pitch on her head on the winding road which skirts the river. Assistance was at once afforded, but the unfortunate young lady was beyond the reach of any human aid, having been dashed almost literally to pieces. Her face was shockingly torn and mangled, her lower jaw being broken and forced in on one side, several of her ribs, and her arms, and thighs, broken, and the flesh of her legs torn and lacerated. This is the fourth or fifth accident of the kind which, during the last twenty four years has occurred, from the same cliff.

When a man's heart ossifies or turns to bone, he dies at once; but if it petrifies, or, in other words, turns to stone, he invariably lives too long for any useful purpose.

ANOTHER VOICE FROM MISSISSIPPI.

There are some considerations of great weight, as it seems to me, why the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences should have but one Depository. This should be in New Orleans; New Orleans is the great commercial centre for the whole region covered by the Mississippi Conference, except that portion of it lying near the line of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. With this exception, every bale of cotton made in the Conference is sent to New Orleans, and thousands of planters and others go there—some annually, and others, more frequently—to procure family and plantation supplies. Of the people residing in the Conference one hundred trade to New Orleans, to one who trades at Vicksburg. Even the country below, and the one above that in which Vicksburg is situated, find New Orleans to be their cheapest and most natural point of trade. If it is the object, then, to place our books where the greatest number of our people will be drawn together: New Orleans is that place, and not Vicksburg. The Conference may establish a Depository at Vicksburg with a capital of $50,000 or $500,000, but they cannot turn back the stream of trade and travel, which flows into New Orleans from every Circuit and Station in the Conference. We may bring the books to Vicksburg by thousands, but it may do us good to remember that we cannot bring the people there. . . .

The great majority of the people will be dependent upon the preachers for their supply of books. To every preacher in the Conference, outside of Warren county, New Orleans is as accessible as Vicksburg; to nine tenths it is more accessible. All the Sharon District, almost the whole of the Yazoo District, and all the Vicksburg except Warren county, are just as accessible to New Orleans as to Vicksburg; indeed more so, for in the case of New Orleans there would be no transfer from one line of railway to another. As to the rest of the Conference, in five out of eight Districts the facilities for transportation are altogether better from New Orleans. Let any one look at a map of Mississippi, and that part of Louisiana embraced in the Mississippi Conference, and he will in a moment see the strength of the argument. If then we look to the sale of books directly to the people, or the sale to the preachers, New Orleans is beyond all doubt the place for the Mississippi Conference Depository.

To keep up a Depository we shall have to pay house rent, and salaries to clerks, and incur other expenses, amounting to not less than $2,500. This is equivalent in Mississippi to a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars; all this would be saved to the Church by uniting with New Orleans. This sum may appear too small to be considered in an argument, by men who talk of raising one million, but it is different with us who have raised but a little over $20,000, and nearly all that yet to be collected.

What reason, then, is there for a Depository at Vicksburg? It may be answered, that there is a State or Conference pride, which would create an interest in a Depository located in our midst, which would not be felt for one in New Orleans. Surely our people when in New Orleans would not refuse to buy a book before their eyes, because the Conference had not placed it where they do not and never will go. And, surely, they would not refuse to buy from a preacher because he had bought books where he could get them quickest and cheapest. Nor can it be justly argued, that more voluntary contributions would be made because of the Depository's location in our midst. A few, in Vicksburg and vicinity might perhaps, be more liberal towards it but the great mass of giving men would do more for it, if located with reference both to economy and to the convenience of those whose custom is sought. A wise and judicious location, such as would exhibit common sense and business views of things, would be an augury for success, that would gather to its support those who would otherwise stand aloof.

There is another consideration to be urged. If our people are drawn by their business relations to New Orleans, and if the facilities for travel and transportation are such, that New Orleans can and most certainly will command the trade of both our people and preachers, there is no reason under heaven to hope that a Depository at Vicksburg will result otherwise than in a most disastrous failure. New Orleans is just as sure to draw the trade from the Mississippi Conference in books, if the Depository there is well conducted, as it is to draw the trade in cotton. Our preachers and laity just as surely will buy books in New Orleans, as they will pork. What bookseller in the State or out of it, would think of setting up a book-store in Vicksburg, with a capital of $50,000 or $100,000, expecting his customers from a region, brought by river and railroad communications, nearer to New Orleans than to Vicksburg.

It is proposed that $50,000 at least, be the capital of the Mississippi Conference Depository; an agent is now trying to raise this sum. The Depository will buy books to that amount at least, or have some dead capital. Say, the Depository sells at a gross profit of 40 per cent, then it must sell $70,000 worth of books annually, to the Mississippi Conference. There are not more than one hundred preachers in the Conference, in the regular work; each of these must sell and collect seven hundred dollars worth of books, in order to sustain the Depository. The local trade at Vicksburg would amount to little more than the pro rata for the preachers there. Do the preachers believe this can be done? Are they willing to adopt a scheme based upon the presumption that each of them, year by year, will sell seven hundred dollars worth of books? or even the half of that sum? The minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church show, that the whole amount of sales for the last year was only $80,842. The report says, "the number of colporteurs in commission during the year, has been two hundred and sixty-three. These, have been distributed into twenty-nine States and Territories, besides all the British provinces at the North." Our scheme forces us to sell in the territory of the Conference—or else break—almost as many books as the Presbyterian Church sells in all the United States and British possessions! Can anything be more absurd and utopian!

How many of the preachers sold seven hundred dollars' worth last year? how many this? There has been no want of books; they are now scattered all over the Conference, unsold and unsaleable. Brother Copeland at Vicksburg offered the books now on sale by the preachers, at fifty per cent. discount, but they would not sell; and now he asks the preachers to send them back, to be surrendered to Dr. Hamilton, I suppose—for they are certainly not wanted where they are. Why have not more books been sold? Simply because the people do not want any more. Our true policy is to keep up with the demand, increase it as much as we can, but not embark in a wild, visionary scheme that can result only in ruin to our finances, and shame and disgrace to the Church.

Should the Mississippi Conference persist in its present scheme of Depository—and should raise the capital it is now seeking to raise—in a little while the public will think, it is to be feared, that instead of a Geneological Bible, a copy of Don Quixote should have been given to the shareholders and preachers.

YOU HAVE KILLED THAT SERMON.

The preacher labored faithfully this morning. Many were affected under the sermon. Among the rest were some of your children. Now is a good time to come in to help your pastor in the work upon your own family. But alas! instead of doing this, you have destroyed the feeling of conviction in the hearts of those affected. "How?" you ask in astonishment. Why, when returned from church, instead of talking with those serious children, you began to criticise the preacher in their hearing! During the sermon you were half asleep part of the time, and reading a hymn book another part; and now your work must be finished up in a criticism of the discourse. It was rather too long, or too short. It was too cold, or else rather boisterous. The hymns were inappropriate; the prayers too commonplace. Then the preacher was not dressed to suit. All this you have to talk before these children, but a little while ago so thoughtful. When you are done they are thoughtful no longer. You have made them cold. Your words have driven off their good impressions.—Index.

OUACHITA CONFERENCE—ARKADELPHIA.

Mr. Editor: The Ouachita Conference closed its fourth session last Monday evening, at four o'clock, P. M. Thinking an item or two with the appointments, would be of some interest to the readers of your valuable journal, I hasten to send them. This was one of the most pleasant Conferences I ever attended—peace, harmony and brotherly love prevailed. All or nearly all of our members were present. All in good spirits—and, better still, were in the spirit of the high, holy work, in which they were engaged. The past year has been one of great prosperity with us in Arkansas, in spiritual matters. The farmers in many places, suffered from severe drought; but the Church has had a glorious season of refreshing grace. Many, very many have been converted, and the Church of God greatly built up.

The preachers came up with hearts rejoicing in God for His goodness; and, while they felt really thankful for the glorious triumphs they had won, they were ready to advance further still on Satan's receding host—and win brighter laurels still, by bringing men to the Cross. Earth never witnessed a grander scene, than a Conference of holy men, preparing themselves for their holy warfare, by meditating pleas for the world's safety, and praying the one for the other. Of all places I ever visited I never enjoyed any half so well as an Annual Conference. I never met or associated with a nobler body of men than the Ouachita Conference. Why did'nt you come Mr. Editor, as you promised, to our Conference? You must have a very good excuse, to save yourself. You missed a happy season of Christian enjoyment. Bishop Early was with us, in very feeble health, but presided to the entire satisfaction of a large majority of our preachers. Nearly all were perfectly delighted with him; and so expressed themselves in appropriate resolutions, which will be published in due time. We mean what we say, and say what we mean. Bishop Early pleased us, and we will always welcome him warmly and affectionately to our Conference. He is strict, but not too much so, just enough to have business done correctly and promptly. He has lost none of his youthful fire, zeal, and devotion to the interest of the Church. His natural strength is fast abating; but his mind is vigorous, and his heart still warm with holy love. Oh, 'tis a noble sight to see this old war, worn Veteran full of years and scars; still going in the front rank of Immanuel's host, nobly battling for the Church of his boyish love, while the fire of devotion still burns as briskly as ever on the altar of his heart, long since dedicated to God. Bishop Early is a great man. One, that is neither ashamed nor afraid to do his duty—and carry out the discipline. Long may he be spared, to go in and out before his younger brethren—teaching them to do and to suffer. How strong an argument in favor of religion, to see the grey-headed sire, of over three score and ten, on a three months tour on the furthest verge of civilization, urging on our Itinerant army to glorious and certain victory. Brother Watson, your confrere of Memphis, was with us a day or two; but had to leave to attend his own Conference.

Brother Watson is a great favorite with our preachers. We all love him, both as a man and editor. We resolved to continue the Memphis Advocate as our Organ. Dr. Sehon was also with us, in the true spirit of his Mission—and, I tell you, he infused the Missionary fire into our Conference and people finely. A great man with a great soul. He can work, is able to work anywhere—and, better than all, he is willing. He preached twice for us; addressed the Conference; and then made a speech for us on Saturday night, at our Anniversary. His labor was not in vain.

On Saturday our Conference resolved to raise $5000 this year. On Saturday night we raised in cash and subscription $2000. What do you say to that? Louisiana Conference will have to try again. We are a head of all the Conferences but one in the way of Anniversaries. Dr. Sehon made a fine impression, and did us much good. Hope he will repeat it soon. But I must close. Here are

NEWS FROM THE INTERIOR.

Kentucky.

A Mysterious Murder Cleared Up.—The Louisville Courier, of the 20th, has the following:

We understand that for several days past the most intense excitement has prevailed in Larue county, in consequence of the confession of a startling tragedy. John, a slave, the property of Berry Cundiff, who was arrested about one year since, charged with the murder of Miss Mery Shaler, has confessed his participation in the crime, and implicates several other persons.

This Miss Shaler was originally a resident of Bardstown, but at the time of the murder was temporarily living in Larue county, with Mrs. Murphy. The negro has been twice tried, but each time the juries failed to agree. A few days since the negro was induced to make a clean breast of the horrible affair, being threatened with lynching—persons telling him that the Taylor county mob was coming to hang him.

He says that four other persons were connected in the affair, he being a mere tool, and receiving two hundred dollars. The persons charged, are Mrs. Murphy, her daughter, aged sixteen years, James McGavock, and Wm. Pickrill. These parties were all immediately arrested. Great excitement existed throughout the community, and so exasperated were the citizens that it was with much difficulty the officers could prevent the crowd from lynching the accused. In fact, Pickrille was at one time swung up.

The circumstances that led to the murder are said to be owing to the fact, that Miss Shaler was supposed to have a considerable sum of money. It is generally believed, however, that the true cause was, that Pickrill's brother was about to marry the unfortunate woman, concerning whose virtue there was serious reports. His brother and McGavock, a brother-in-law, had her murdered to prevent the marriage.

Missouri.

Atrocious Murder.—A letter of the 9th inst., from Douglas, Missouri, says:

A lamentable affair took place this morning about 11 o'clock, on Third Fork of Platte river, on the east line of Andrew county. A. M. Roselubaum rented some ground of one Amos G. Davies. Mr. R. this morning went to pick the corn, accompanied by a brother-in-law, by the name of Robinson. Davies went into the field with gun in hand, and asked Roselubaum why he did not put up the fence more substantially. Mr. R. replied that Mr. Robinson put up the fence as well as he could, Davies says, You are a d—d liar.

R. replied, that he did, but that the fence was so poor that he could blow hard enough to blow it down. Davies then says, "you are a good great d—d liar," cocking the gun while talking. Robinson says, I don't allow a man to insult me in this way, advancing toward Davies, with nothing in his hand but an ear of corn. Davies shot Robinson instantly, blowing his head into a thousand pieces, and scattering the brains for thirty feet from where he fell.

Roselubaum and his son were the only witnesses. After Davies committed the deed, he asked witness if they would not swear that he shot Robinson in self-defence. Both remarked, "no, never." Davies then returned to the house, sadled his nag and fled. Two hours after he was seen on a different horse, and with different clothes on, going at race-horse speed toward your city. He is undoubtedly gone to Kansas.

I can add no more, only that Davies was formerly from Kentucky. Robinson, two weeks ago, arrived here from Virginia. Both leave families.

Maine.

The Ice Trade.—The statistics in regard to the ice trade present some curious facts. The amount shipped from Boston annually, exceeds one hundred and forty-six thousand tons. The coastwise trade is more important than the foreign, the Southern ports being the best markets for ice. The value of ice shipped to foreign countries in 1856-7 is set down at $219,186. The shipments of ice coastwise are not always entered at the custom-house. The amount reported as shipped from Boston this year, to 31st August, amounted to 42,368 tons. The amount shipped and not reported is stated to exceed 80,000 tons annually, and this was sent principally to Philadelphia and Baltimore. Part of the shipments to Southern ports, are sent by railroad into the interior, and the Knoxville Whig of last summer mentioned the arrival at the place of a foreign car through from Savannah in thirty-three hours, filled with ice. Its editor congratulated the citizens on being able to cool their parched tongues during the summer with ice thus imported, the mildness of the previous winter having prevented them from collecting ice at home. If such a thing were possible, a total failure of the ice crop in this country would be a loss of several millions of dollars.

Alabama.

Mobile, Nov. 28.—The instructions of the Government to the Collector of this port in regard to the Nicaragua emigrant expedition are adverse to granting a clearance to the bark Alice Painter, which was chartered by the agent of the Southern Emigrant Society, for the purpose of conveying the emigrants to Graytown, and the expedition has been abandoned.

The emigrants are quietly dispersing to their homes. Mr. Hessee, the egent, advertises in this morning's papers that the bark Alice Painter has abandoned her trip to Greytown, in consequence of the refusal of the Government to grant her a clearance. He also advertises that all persons holding tickets for Graytown will receive back the amount paid for them on presenting them at his office.

Ohio.

A Locomotive Leap.—The Cincinnati Gazette states that an inexperienced man was sent out with an engine from the Little Miami Railroad depot in that city the other day to bring in some empty cars, but espying a locomotive coming towards him on the same track, he reversed his engine and jumped off. The locomotive, thus left to itself, returned to the depot over a down grade at a tremendous speed, and bursting through an eighteen inch wall, leaped across two road tracks—one about ten feet below the other—without touching either, and embedded itself in a huge pile of coal seventy-five feet from the depot. Before reaching the depot an accidental change of the switch diverted the engine upon another track, else the fugitive engine would have run full tilt into a train of cars, full of passengers, which was standing in the depot.

Louisiana.

Row in the Penitentiary.—From the Baton Rouge Gazette of Saturday last we extract the following: On Friday morning, a prisoner in the Penitentiary made an attempt to take the life of Cap. Hayden, Chief Warden. It appears that the prisoner had become unruly and disobedient, and was reprimanded by Mr. F. Guidry, Assistant Warden. The prisoner was making threats in a loud tone of voice, when Capt. Hayden came upon him, and ordered him off to his cell. The prisoner attempted to evade the Captain, and got under a table, where he drew a small knife used by prisoners in the spinning rooms, and inflicted a dangerous wound in the leg of the Captain.

Two or three of the prisoners came to the relief of Captain Hayden, and one of them with a stick succeeded in knocking down his refractory comrade. This was near giving rise to a serious mistake, when the guard came to the rescue. The name of the refractory prisoner is James Casey, an Irishman by birth, and under sentence for fifteen years for the crime of manslaughter.

Lauranche Crevasse.—In conformity with the decision of the Police Jury of our parish, Messrs. J. A. Scudder and R. L. Gibson have visited the Labranche crevasse and have presented an account of believed renown. Thus, we have Sketches of Daniel Webster, Sir William Jones, and Immanuel Kant. Of the really self made men, there are given Andrew Jackson, Benj. Franklin, Henry Clay and others. The moral of these lives is pointed by no comment—this, the reader is left to gather for himself. From H. D. McGinnis 36 Camp street, New Orleans.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MY SON, HENRY KIRK WHITE MUIR.—Embracing some brief memorials of this character, and essays, from his pen while a student at Princeton College, New Jersey. By his father J. H. Muir, of the Louisiana Bar. New York: John a Gray Printer, 1858. This book will be read with interest by those who were acquainted with young Muir. He was a gifted boy, and possessed a rare intellect. But, above all, he had a noble and kind heart. Much which these letters contain is of no value or interest to the public, but there is a great deal which is highly instructive and entertaining. It is a good work to put into the hands of young men—especially of young men at College. Those who read this correspondence will regret that a youth of such noble promise died so prematurely, and every heart will yield a sympathetic response to the chastened and submissive spirit which the father exhibits in this memorial of a beloved son. For sale at H. D. McGinnis, New Orleans.

WHAT IS TRUE CHRISTIANITY?—By a member of the Louisiana Bar. New York: John A. Gray, Printer. Embracing the prophetic, the evangelical and the apostolic accounts only of the true Ministry—of true Gospel preaching, and the effects thereof. This little Volume of ninety-nine pages 12mo—is, in the main, a collection of Scriptures, setting forth the subject which is exhibited in the title. Short—to the point—and full of unction. From McGinnis, 36 Camp street.

"To spread Scriptural Holiness over these Lands."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Fayette District.—REV. J. G. JONES, writes: "Through the abounding grace of God, the Conference year which now draws to a close has been one of great prosperity in this District. Most of the preachers have had well-marked and extensive revivals in their several charges; and I say with confidence I see no evidences of decay in our beloved branch of the general Church. It is true, there are cases of delinquency, and sometimes of unchristian conduct among a few of our members; and such, I am sorry to say, have always been the case. But "what is the chaff to the wheat?"

1st. The conversions, have been as clear and powerful as I ever witnessed; hundreds, including all grades of society, after a season of deep conviction, and true penitential sorrow for sin, and an earnest seeking for redemption in the blood of Christ, have obtained such bright manifestations of the pardoning love of God, as filled them with joy unspeakable, and gave them an abiding assurance of their adoption into the "household of faith." They have found in themselves the witness of their acceptance with God.

2d. The blessed doctrine of "entire sanctification," as every where taught in the holy Scriptures; and, which has been so repeatedly explained and enforced by our standard writers, but, which has heretofore been trammeled with so many difficulties; which has been so imperfectly understood, even by our own ministers and people, is now being better understood and more fully appreciated than I have ever known it. Many of our members talk, inquire, read and study about it, with an earnest desire to know the truth; and, having learned what bible holiness is, they have sought it prayerfully until many have obtained deliverance from all inward sin, and have been filled with that perfect love which casteth out fear. I have never known our people more alive on this subject than they are now, in various parts of this District; and I have never known more to profess the enjoyment of this "great salvation" than during the present year. This blessed work of the Spirit has been manifested more or less in all our revivals. At the Atopasa camp-meeting, about fifteen, weekly, but confidently, professed to have received this great blessing. Such a fullness of the Spirit I have seldom seen enjoyed by the Church, as was manifest on that occasion. I find this to be one of the most exciting, and encouraging doctrines I can preach to a spiritually minded membership. If they "have tasted that the Lord is gracious," how cheering to be assured that in addition to that "taste" they may "be filled with all the fullness of God?" and when we recollect, that the great object of our mission is to spread Scriptural holiness all over these lands," how strange it is to find some of our ministers even, hesitating and doubting, as to what this matter of "entire sanctification," as taught in the Bible, is?

3d. One of the most encouraging features of our revivals this year, is in the permanent fruit every where to be seen. I think I have never known such a large proportion of young converts to become active, working christians as I have this year. They pray in their families; pray in our weekly, prayer-meetings; pray for mourners, at the altar; and in, what is known among us as the "woods prayer-meeting," and in many other ways they are showing the genuineness of their faith by their works. Not only our brethren, but many of our sisters in Christ are active and efficient leaders in prayer at the family altar, and in the social, and general prayer-meetings. Where the idea originated that an experienced Christian lady should not pray aloud in the Church, I know not. I strongly suspect its origin was not very creditable, either to the piety or intelligence of its author. It is true, the sisterhood should not usurp authority, either in teaching or ruling, which has been deposited by the Head of the Church, in the hands of the stern sex; but why should we be deprived of their melting eloquence, and prevailing faith in prayer? For myself, I have never had a doubt at this point, since in early childhood, I used to hear the sweetly—flowing and earnest voice of my own dear mother, as she led our devotions at the home altar. But I have said enough except, to add that I have quite a number of additions for admission into the traveling connection. Glory to God on high, I have had one more happy and prosperous year before I go hence."

Lafayette Circuit—REVS. G. F. THOMPSON, W. B. JOHNSON, write: "Has seven societies and two colored Missions in its bounds. The Lord has blessed it during the year, just closing with glorious revivals of religion and great prosperity in its pecuniary affairs. In the first part of the year, the state of religion was cold and dishearting. The first manifestation of a better state of things was in our class meetings; they became better attended than formerly, and we had some glorious times in them—this led to the establishment of weekly prayer meetings, which have done great good and are kept up permanently. The next step, was a series of protracted meetings at all the appointments: the Lord was pleased to bless with the precious outpourings of His Spirit these meetings. So far as can be ascertained there have been eighty-six conversions and ninety-seven accessions of white persons, and a few accessions of colored persons. The number of their conversions cannot be ascertained, but probably amounts to thirty or forty.

Fayette Circuit will not be behind in her missionary collections; last Sabbath we held a missionary meeting at Cane Ridge—the collection amounted to $130. Brother J. G. Jones, our presiding elder was present, and contributed greatly to the interest of the occasion by delivering a very able history of the rise and progress of Methodism in this country. At Mount Carmel a fine collection was taken up by brother Johnson; including the amount paid to the two Missionaries of North and South Jefferson Mission, the missionary collections of the Circuit will amount to between $1000 and $1200. An old debt of $200 on the parsonage, which had been a source of embarrassment for several years, has been paid off, and repairs have been put on the parsonage to the amount of $600. The ladies also formed themselves into a financial association, and raised about $400, which they expended in furnishing the parsonage. It is a pleasure to preach and pray with people who show so much consideration for the comfort of a preachers' family. May the Lord abundantly reward these good ladies for their labors of love. The parsonage had become old and uncomfortable, it would soon have become uninhabitable, it is now in thorough repair; furnished with taste and makes a pleasant and delightful home. The members of the female financial association will be ready to receive the preacher's family. The Societies are now all out of debt and in peace, there are no discords or difficulties in them, truly the Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad—to his name be all the glory."

Black Creek Mission.—HENRY P. LEWIS writes: "The Lord has been with us on Black Creek Mission, many souls have been gloriously converted to God and added to the Church. At one Church, called Beasrds' Ilayeu, twenty-five or thirty have joined. At White Plains, another appointment, several have joined; and the members have been revived. The last Saturday in September we commenced a protracted meeting at one of my appointments, the Lord was there—Glory to God! Shall I ever witness such a time again, the congregation was small but very attentive, and much good was done; the meeting lasted four days, we left a crowd of mourners at the altar—we have received in sixty or seventy members this year on probation."

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Pickensville.—REV. G. HAWKINS, writes: "I am now closing up my second years labors on this work. Though the present has not been as prosperous a year with me as the last; yet I have learned to praise God, that we have not been wholly passed by. We have had a few conversions, and some most excellent accessions to our church among the whites; a good work with my colored charge all the year. We have a neat brick church at Carrollton, well furnished, and all paid for; and by the first June 1859, we shall have another, a wood church here. The money to build and furnish it is already made up in good subscriptions, the location selected, and the building let out to experienced workmen, at $2881. My Conference assessment, $60 is paid. I shall get about $200 missionary money, and all my quarterage. I leave my work with a great deal of reluctance. Though a strong believer in our itinerant system, yet after serving a people just two years, many are the strong attachments that must be broken up on departure. There is one consolation however, we are all trying to get to our home in heaven, where pastor and people will all meet to part no more. May this be the case with myself—and the people I am serving."

Bayou Teche Colored Mission.—REV. J. T. FONTAINE, writes: "The parish of St. Mary, is in a prosperous condition; nothing of an unpleasant character, any way connected with the mission having transpired during the present year. The masters and overseers, some of whom at first, looked upon the work with a suspicious eye, are respectful and agreeable, showing no disposition to hinder the free course of the Gospel among their slaves, but, on the contrary, a willingness to contribute liberally to its support. At the beginning of this year there were two appointments, having fifty members, taken from the mission, and added to the New Iberia Station. At present, there are eight appointments—five hundred negroes preached to—one hundred and fifty-two members, and one hundred children under instruction. Seventy-eight infants have been baptized this year. May the Lord bless our missions, and incline the hearts of all masters to deal justly with their servants; that, while they, the noble sons of Ham, by devine decree, bow submissively in bodily servitude, their mind may be enlightened by the word of truth, and their souls made happy, by hope of a home in heaven."

Decatur Circuit.—REV. JOHN A. VANEL, writes: "I have finished all my protracted meetings but one, and the prospects heavenward are glorious. Thanks be to God, in almost every protracted meeting we have had a revival. God has been in our midst. I have one round to make on the Circuit before Conference. Received into the Church one hundred and eighty, the greater part of whom were happily converted to God."

The Very Latest Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

The steamship North Briton—Montreal and Ocean Steamship Line—with dates from Liverpool to the 17th ult. has arrived at Portland, which represent the Liverpool cotton market was firm, and prices in favor of sellers. The sales for three days amounted to 28,000 bales. Middling Orleans is quoted at 6 15-16d. The Arago, arrived at New York with similar dates.

GOLD FROM AUSTRALIA.—Two and a half millions of dollars han arrived in England from Australia.

VIOLENT GALES.—There had been violent gales on the English coasts, during which a number of vessels went ashore, other property was destroyed, and numerous lives were lost.....A very severe gale occurred in the Bay of Biscay, during which some of the passengers on board the Tavlot, then crossing the Bay, were actually washed out of their berths.

RELIEF VESSELS.—The British Government was urged to despatch steamships for the relief of vessels that may have been disabled during the storm.

THE FRENCH EMPEROR has issued a decree to the effect that the equality of religious belief is absolute and complete under the French law.

THE STEAMSHIP INDIAN EMPIRE nineteen days out from Halifax, had not arrived at Galway.

FRANCE AND PORTUGAL.—The French papers were ordered not to publish the speech of the King of Portugal at the opening of Parliament.....The French Government had appointed a Commission to fix the amount of indemnity due from Portugal, in the Charles et Georges affair.....Trade in the Manufacturing districts of France was in an unfavorable state.....Several Jews had been appointed members of the Council of Algeira.....The Bourse was active, and had advanced.

SPAIN—Gen. Concha has been nominated President of the Spanish Senate.....The Riff pirates on the coast of Africa had surrendered to the commandant of the Spanish expedition sent against them.

PORTUGAL.—The King, in his speech at the opening of the Portuguese Chambers, says that a serious misunderstanding has arisen with France, in consequence of the capture of the French ship Charles et Georges. The question being taken from the field of right in which he sought to maintain it, he says he was obliged to yield to the exaction of the delivery of the vessel. The documents relating to this deplorable conflict, he says, will soon be submitted, and he hopes the Chambers will approve of the proceedings of the government, and relieve it of the responsibility it was forced to incur.

INDIA.—Accounts had been received of further British successes in India.

HOLLAND.—A bill had been brought before the States at the Hague for emancipation of the slaves in Surinam and Curacoa. The first colony is to get eleven millions of florins, and the second three millions. Slaves are estimated for indemnity according to a tariff. A negro on a sugar plantation 375 florins; on a coffee or cocoa ditto, 250 florins; on a cotton or rice ditto, 200 florins. There are 37,740 slaves in Surinam and 9000 in Curacoa.

SPAIN.—The Vice President of the Council of State, Martinez de la Rosa, had caused much excitement by delivering a speech in strong condemnation of the Inquisition as a disgrace and an anomaly on Spanish soil.....A despatch dated at Madrid, on the 9th last, says that "the semi-official Peninsular Correspondence states that the affair with Mexico will be settled in a manner worthy of Spain."

DENMARK.—The constitution of Holstein has been abrogated by royal proclamation.

RUSSIA.—The Russian Gazette of St. Petersbrg, of the 30th October, gives an account of the election of Municipal Councilors by the inhabitants of two villages in the suburbs of St. Petersburg. These inhabitants had been attached to the glebe as serfs of the Admiralty since Peter the Great's time, and were forced to work as carpenters. The Emperor Alexander II, by a ukase published in the month of March, this year, enfranchised them, giving them the power of becoming citizens of the capital itself, or of forming a distinct community. The number of persons thus freed amounts to 3435 of both sexes.

TURKEY.—A despatch from Constantinople announces that the commissioners for regulating the boundaries of Monteuegro had completed their labor, and the protocol finally fixing them had been signed by all the members. The body of Ghalib Pachu, son-in-law of the Sultan, who was drowned by a collision with a steamer in the Bosphorus, had been found.....A large number of Turks and Christians from the Levant have been for some time buying up arms, without regard to the price. Their object had not transpired.....At Tripoli, in Barbary, a pilot, concocted by dervises, for an attack upon the Christians, had been discovered. Several consuls, the French among the others, gave shelter in their houses to the residents, under their protection. The government had placed the town in a state of siege and restored tranquility..... The telegraphic cable between the Isle of Crete and Egypt was being laid.....The plague had disappeared from Bengazi.

ASIATIC TURKEY.—Omer Pacha and Iskender Pacha, his lieutenant, are gaining successes over the Arabs. A letter from Bagdad, of the 19th ult, states that the tribes of the territories between the two braaches of the Euphrates, after having been defeated several times, had made their submission to the Turkish general. In one of their combats with Iskender Pacha they had lost 300 men, of whom three were sheiks, and in another 100 horses, 4000 sheep and 1000 oxen were captured from them. Several officers, and among them the Arab colonel Bon Maza, distinguished themselves in the engagements. Omar Pacha was not expected back to Bagdad until about the middle of November.

BUENOS AYRES.—Advices to 19th September, inform us that the Legislative Chambers had been prorogued to the 1st November, after passing an act appropriating money for schools, and another abolishing the land grants of Rosas.....From the Argentine there is little of interest. Gold-seekers were said to be rewarded with an ounce of pure metal per hour. Gen. Lopez, according to the Asuncion Semenaro, has abolished the prohibition upon the exports of grain, sugar, etc.

RECENT GALE IN THE WEST INDIES.—Late accounts from St. Thomas add to the long catalogue of marine disasters, caused by the gales that swept over the Atlantic and the Gulf in the latter part of October. The ship Messenger, bound for St. Catharine's, with coal for the steamers of the Parnguay expedition, had reached St. Thomas with only her mainmast standing, and leaking badly. She suffered severely in the gales, and was obliged to throw overboard part of her cargo. The brig Industry, Capt. Robinson, from Turk's Island for New York, laden with salt, foundered on the 21st ult. Her officers and crew were saved. The brig Mary Jewett was lost near Port au Platt on the 24th ult. Vesseln of all nations, crippled by the storms were daily arriving at St. Thomas.

FROM SAN DOMINGO.—Quiet prevailed at Dominica at last accounts. A vote for Presidential electors was taken on the 1st inst., and beyond all doubt Gen. Santana, the Liberator, as he is called, will be chosen President at the election which takes place on the 6th of December, unless he should choose to designate some other person to fill the office. A bearer of dispatches had left for Washington.

THE CAPTURED AFRICANS.—Dispatches have been received from Captain Chauncey, of the Niagara, dated at Porto Grande, October 22, from which we learn that forty-five of the captured Africans had died during the passage to that place. It was found impossible to break up the filthy habits of the negroes, which greatly tended to spread the ravages of disease. Remonstrance was unavailing. Those portions of the ship allotted to them, in spite of every effort to keep them cleanly, had become almost a pest-house, filling the air with pestilential vapors. Captain Chauncey considers these negroes the most degraded class he had ever seen. The females, however, of whom one only had been lost, were in far better condition of health and habits than the males.

ENGLISH PROPAGATION STATISTICS.—The Register-General of England has published the returns of births, deaths and marriages. There were 39,909 marriages celebrated in the quarter ending June 30th, being nearly 10,000 in excess of the previous quarter, but somewhat less than the number in the corresponding quarter of last year, 157,449 births and 98,260 deaths were registered in the quarter; consequently the natural increase of the population in the 92 days was 59,189, or 643 daily.

MOHAMMEDAN AND CHRISTIAN TROUBLES.—The last Egyptian mail brought very disquieting intelligence from Syria. Great fermentation exists there, as well as in most parts of the Ottoman empire, and the Christian population are placed in the greatest jeopardy. A roving band of Arabs recently surprised the town of Gaza, butchered some of its inhabitants, and then fell upon a neighboring village, where they indiscriminately slaughtered all the men and children. Damascus is represented as a scene of tumult and terror, the Christians being in perpetual fear of plunder and massacre, as Ali Pacha appears to be without power to overawe or control the fanatical portion of the inhabitants.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK MARKET.—The cotton market is firm; sales to-day amount to 3000 bales; Middling Orleans is quoted at 12¾c.

NEW YORK BANK STATEMENT.—Nov. 29.—According to the weekly bank statement, the specie has increased $370,000, and the loans have decreased $90,000. The steamship Illinois, from Aspinwall, with $1,800,000 in specie has arrived at this port.

LOCAL.

BURGLARY.—The tailor establishment of Mr. Caspergue, situated at number 10 Bourbon street, was burglariously entered last night or early this morning, by burglars, by means of forcing open the front door with a crowbar. Mr. Casbergue informs us that they stole ready made clothing and goods to the amount of three thousand dollars. No traces have been discerned of the thieves as yet.

THE COFFEEHOUSE of Frank Kathman, at the corner of Galvitin and Barracks streets, was plundered. From the bar-room were taken $150 in cash and a watch; and some of the trunks of the sleepers up stairs were broken open and despoiled of clothing and other valuables. There was no burglary in this case. The robbery was traced to Fred. Shaffer, a barkeeper employed in the house, and who in the morning was fully as aware as the articles stolen. The police tracked him as far as the corner of Canal and Barone streets, and there lost track, scent and all.

HEATHENISH.—Peter Kaiser was arrested yesterday, charged by the congregation of some church in the Fourth District, with refusing to open the church, and thereby preventing the members from attending to their devotional exercises.

COMMERCIAL.

TUESDAY EVENING, November 30, 1858.

THE following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	—@—	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	8 @ 9¼	Middling Fair	12¼@12½
Good Ordinary	10¼@10½	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10¾@11	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	11 ⅛@11⅝	Good and Fine	—@—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 27th ult., furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business: The operations in most of our leading staples have been to a good extent, and within a few days past the Cotton market has attained more firmness, while the rates for Sugar and Molasses have been full, though with slight variations. In Tobacco, we are still without any noticeable movement. Transactions in Western Produce has been on a limited scale. In the first three days of the week we notice sales of Cotton to the extent of 81 500 bales; the market closing on Tuesday, after an active demand, at firmer rates for the middling grades. On Wednesday, 13,000 bales were disposed of, on Thursday about the same number, at firmer rates for Middling and better grades; and on Friday, still more stringent prices and an advance in freights checked operations, and sales were confined to about 4000 bales. Sales of the week 61,500 bales. We find it necessary now to advance our quotations ⅛@⅛c for Low Middling up. Among the sales of the last few days was a lot of 60 bales Dean Seed variety, superior staple, grown in the parish of St. Landry, in this State, which brought 16c ℔ lb. The receipts of the week, 71,098 bales.....The Honey market is in much the same condition as previously noted—Mutton abundant, and capitalists find difficulty in finding employment for it.

SUGAR—The sales of the week amount to about 10,000 hhds., we quote for inferior and refining, 3¼@4¼; common to good common, 4¼@5¼; fair to fully fair, 5¼@6; prime to choice, 6¼@7; centrifugal and clarified, 6¼@8c ℔ lb.

MOLASSES—The sales of the week are about 12 500 bbls; the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 25@28, primo to choice, 29@29½, bl bbls. 32½@33c ℔ gallon.

FLOUR—Is active, with an upward tendency—sales of 16 000 bbls. at $5 00@5 20 for Illinois and St. Louis superfine, and $5 50@6 12½ for extra; and for choice Tennessee and St Louis extra, $6 50@7 ℔ bbl.

GRAIN—The sales of the week, of Corn, about 9,000 sacks at 68@70 for inferior and ordinary mixed, and 70@75c for good to prime mixed and white. Oats, sales from 60@70c ℔ bushel, for ordinary to prime St. Louis. Wheat, we quote at $1 20 ℔ bushel.

MEATS—Pork is selling at $18 50 ℔ bbl. for Mess; Beef, $14@$16; and Bacon, for shoulders 7¼@7¾, ribbed sides, 9¼@9⅝, clear sides 9⅛@9¼; hams from 9¼@13½c ℔ lb according to quality.

COFFEE—We quote ordinary at 10c, low fair 10½, fair to good fair 11, prime and choice 11¼@11½c ℔ lb.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE, by calling at BEVAN & IRVINE'S, will receive information as to their several places of entertainment. Those who come on the West Feliciana Railroad will be met at the Depot. I understand that members of the Conference will be conveyed from Quinn's Station to Woodville, for five and a half dollars, provided there are ten or fifteen applicants. Those coming on this cars, from Bayou Sara, will not be charged either coming or returning. Brethren will please attain to the Conductor that they are Ministers. If you come to Conference here, which we all desire, take a Vicksburg packet, and not a Bayou Sara packet, as the latter almost always arrive after the departure of the cars; the former, never. Packets leave Bayou Sara at 2½ P. M., and arrive here, at 5 P. M.

THE OBJECT ATTAINED—A few years ago Dr. John M. Good, than whom there is no higher medical authority, declared that there was "great room for improvement in the mode of treating patients who suffered from worms." His remark no longer applies. WORM'S CANADIAN VERMIFUGE leaves nothing to be desired in this respect. Its uniform effect is to discharge the worms from the bowels, and to allay the irritation that cause. This preparation is as harmless as it is quick and thorough in its operation.

One of the Most Prevalent, and at the same time troublesome and painful diseases that attend the human flesh, is the Fever and Ague. For a long time the medical world have been continually bringing forth numerous specifics for its permanent cure; but all without effect. Dr. J. HOSTETTER, an experienced and celebrated physician, has succeeded in furnishing the public with a valuable preparation for the cure of Fever and Ague. The steady and increasing demand lately made for the "Bitters," and the universal success attending its use, have made for it a reputation unsurpassed by any specific of the kind. For the cure of the Fever and Ague, Dr. Hostetter's celebrated Stomach Bitters must and should claim a superiority over any other preparation extant.

INDUCEMENTS.

I. COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE, being the largest School in the State, and one of the largest in the country, can afford to, and does pay such salaries as to secure the services of the very best of Professors and Teachers. No gentleman in the Faculty receives less than $1200 per annum; and the ladies are remunerated in the same proportion. It is confidently believed that no Female College in the United States has more liberal provisions for securing the highest order of talent in the board of instruction.

II. The location is remarkably healthy, there never having been a single death among the pupils boarding at the Institute since its establishment, twelve years ago.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

We are happy in enabling our young friends who are living in a large city, an opportunity of a scamper through "the grand old forest," with so joyous and merry a party as the one so vividly portrayed below, and accompanied by one whose warm sympathies and genial nature adds more brightness and an additional line of freshness and beauty to nature; and——well, get your hats.

LETTER FROM A LOG CABIN.

RATON PARTHOLOMEW, ASHLEY COUNTY, ARK.,
November 6th, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: I need not ask if you have ever been "hickory nutting," for I know you have when you were a little boy, living on the banks of the beautiful Chattahoochee river; so a description of the pleasant times I and my little ones had, up here in Arkansas, will carry you back to the happy days of your childhood.

The day was bright and warm, the deep blue sky cloudless, when with cheerful happiness we started, to ramble through the glorious old woods in search of nuts. How gorgeously beautiful the foliage of the forest trees. The flaming red of the maple, the bright yellow of the fruitful hickorys, the burnt sienna of the wide spreading oaks, the variegated leaves of the mulberry, and the crimson star-leaves of the sweet gum—formed a lovely, waving, ever changing canopy.

We wandered on, over the leafy carpet and the green wood-moss, until we reached the banks of the ever-flowing Bartholomew.

With joyous shouts the children spied a pironge, and all ran down the steep bank to secure a seat in it. With laughter and shouts, that made the "welkin ring," we paddled ourselves across the bayou; and, with baskets and bags we jumped ashore, and were soon busy as the squirrels, but chattering still more lively, gathering up the heaps of nuts the night winds had scattered on the ground.

'Twas a pleasing scene—the children's animated gestures, kind words, and happy smiles; the contented, cheerful face of the servant in attendance, the warm sunshine and flickering shade, the brown nuts, and the little hands fluttering over them—formed a tableau vivant of the most cheering kind.

Little Mattie, with her apron filled with nuts, came running to me—her blue eyes sparkling. "Look here, Ma, me got so many." Looking up with one of her quick, intelligent glances, she said—"Dod made them, Ma; Dod is dood."

A few mornings since, arising before dawn—the usual custom of us country folks—the moon and stars were shining brightly; she looked above, and pointing to the beautiful sky, said—"How beautiful! Dod's book, Ma."

She had never heard the expression used, then how could the beautiful thought have entered the heart of the dear child, if not whispered by her guardian angel? "Take heed, that ye despise not one of those little ones; for, I say unto you, that in Heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father, who is in Heaven."

How sweet the thought, that the wandering steps of our little children are attended by the holy angels. If God so cares and provides for our "little ones," how imperative the duty of parents, by precept and example, to "train them up in the way they should go." To call their attention to the many lovely natural objects about them, to early impress on their minds the greatness and goodness of the Creator; to teach them to trust in Him, to look to Him as a Father who loves and cares for them. Why not as well fill their pure minds with the good and beautiful, as leave them to receive—oh, how rapidly!—the evil and the bad, as too often occurs?

But, to return to the happy times we had, gathering nuts and wandering hither and thither, under the arches of the grand old forest. How we talked, laughed and sang; and how the birds eyed us curiously from their high perches, and the active little grey squirrel ran across our path and up the tall trees; and of the "lots," as children say, of acorns with their nice cups, the crimson berries of the dogwood, the orange ones of the evergreen holly, and black and red clusters of the bay-bush, among the glossy green leaves. And we did not forget to cull the late Indian pinks, the many colored leaves, and the tiny evergreen vines, almost hid by the fallen leaves, to beautify our Herbariums, and as mementos of the delightful Autumn of 1858.

Well, you have, I hope, enjoyed your run in the woods; compose yourselves, and let us visit poor

LITTLE BETTIE.

"Hand me some water, buddy, won't you?"

"In a minute, Bettie."

And Bettie's fevered cheeks were pressed again to the pillow; and little Harry's hands went on as busily as ever with the trap he was making, and at length he entirely forgot the request.

"Please get it now, buddy," he at length heard; and scattering knife, triggers and strings in his haste, he was soon holding a cup to her crimson lips. But she turned her head languidly from it.

"Not this, please; but some fresh and cold from the well," she said.

"O, don't be so particular, Bettie; this is fresh; and I am so busy, I can't go now; won't this do?"

She no longer refused, but quietly took the cup which he offered; and it was the last time she ever called upon her brother for an act of kindness; ere another day had passed she stood beside the river of life and drank its cool waters, never to thirst again.

Of all who wept over that little brown coffin, as it lay on the table before the pulpit, there were none who shed more bitter tears than the little boy, who could not forget that he had refused the last request of his sister.

Little children, are you kind one to another? or, are you cross, selfish and fretful? Remember, then, the time will come when they will be beyond your reach; and then, O, how gladly would you give all you possess to have them back again! You might gather all your books and toys; everything for which you are so willing to contend, but all you could do with them would be to place them on the grave of one you had wronged. It would not bring them back. Henry was a kind hearted boy, and dearly loved his little sister; and she had only been sick a short time, so he did not consider her dangerously ill; but this was no comfort to him after she was gone.

"O, mother," he would say, "if I had only brought that water for her, I could bear it, but now she is where I can never, never wait on her again."

Think of this when you are tempted to quarrel, to be selfish or unkind; for, do you know, if one of you should die, the rest would remember every act of unkindness, every bitter word which had fallen from their lips? But then it would be too late to recall it, too late to ask forgiveness. [N. C. Presbyterian.

DO NOT SEEK GOD BACKWARDS.

Every use of the past which leaves you with the feeling of the past, is a wrong use. If you take the suffering and death of Christ in the old Jerusalem aright, they will lead you to the new Jerusalem, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us. Because the Bible came from the past, we are not to seek God backward, as if Christ was living in his eighteen hundred years ago, and Jehovah, wrapped in his mantle of four thousand years, dwelt upon Sinai. God is the eternal now, and we are to look up and to look forward to the ever-living Savior.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

"Let them learn first, says Paul," "to show religion at home." Religion begins in the family: One of the holiest sanctuaries on earth, is home. The family altar is more venerable than any altar in the Cathedral. The principle of love, which is carried through the universe, is first unfolded in the family.

PRAYER WITH STUDY.

It is a small thing with God to cause us to find that in our souls in one moment, without trouble, which we have sought for years externally, and with much labor.

GOD.

God is a light that is never darkened; an unwearied life that cannot die; a fountain always flowing; a garden of life; a seminary of wisdom; a radical beginning of all goodness.

LOVE.

All things are driven by their own weight, and tend to their own cente; my weight is my love; by that am I driven whithersoever I am driven.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

The Poet Percival.

THE New York Times, in an article on the lamented Percival, gives us an insight into his private life, as follows: Percival was one of the most remarkable men of his time. As a linguist and as a man of science he was more eminent than as a poet, and yet his poetical faculty was marvelously brilliant and prolific. He was a geologist and a geographer: he understood the structure of the earth we live on, and knew all the highways and byways of its surface—roads, rivers and canals—as familiarly as most men know their own domicile or the way to market. His habits of study were peculiar. He would take up a volume at a bookseller's counter, and stand till he had read it through. He never cut the leaves of his books. For many years he occupied rooms at the Hospital at New Haven, and, during the whole, period those rooms were entered only once by a visitor. He had no food cooked during that time, but lived frugally on dried beef, herring, bread, with apples and other fruit, when they were abundant in the market. He read all day and all night—throwing himself on his bed in his clothes, when nature insisted on repose. When his bed-room was opened, after his death, it was covered more than an inch thick with dust, except a path that had been kept free from the door to the bed.

An anecdote is told of him in this connection, that serves to illustrate his character. The law contemplating the survey, provided that the geologist should receive his remuneration after he had made his report and it had been approved by the Governor. Percival waited upon Governor Ellsworth with the report, and was very courteously received. The Governor took the report, and promised to give it his immediate attention, and when he had examined, it as the law required, would make the necessary requisition if it were satisfactory. Percival rolled up his report and withdrew. He insisted that neither the Governor nor any one else was competent to pass upon the merits of his report, and he would not submit to the indignity. He was desperately in want of the money that the report would bring him, but he would not take it on such conditions. Some of his friends finally procured the report from him by an innocent stratagem, and it received, of course, the formal approbation of the Governor, who admitted his incompetence to revise a geological work of Dr. Percival, but was too good an officer not to yield due obedience to the law.

We all remember the story told of the pair of new shoes left at Dr. Johnson's door, when he was a young man and had not a decent pair to his feet. A similar anecdote is related of Dr. Percival. A friend noticed that the cap, which had so long peered above the cloak in which the Doctor enveloped himself, was becoming altogether too shabby, and left word with a hatter on Main street to present him with a more appropriate though less poetical covering. In the most delicate way possible, the shopman intimated to the poet that any hat on the counter was at his service—but the poet turned on his heel with contempt. He would never accept a pecuniary favor of any description. Being at one time somewhat embarrassed by his expenditures on his books, some of his friends made up a purse of $1,400, which they tendered him to relieve his difficulties. He would only accept it as a loan, and not only insisted upon giving security, but actually gave it in a mortgage on his library, from which his friends were ultimately reimbursed, principal and interest.

Of his poetical reputation, Dr. Percival took no care. If he had managed his productions with a tithe of the art possessed by some of his Parnassian brethren, he might have acquired money as well as fame from his writings. Had he studied the secrets of hot-press and embellishment, of cream-colored paper laid between drab covers, or been familiar with blue and gold in giving popularity to inspiration, Percival would have become a favorite, and the favor of the people could have reacted on his selection of topics and familiarized his style. Those few poems of his, in which he treated common and domestic subjects, met a universal acceptance with the lovers of poetry, and all of them deserve a far larger popularity than they enjoy. As to his library, we apprehend it will be ascertained not to suit as a city library for Chicago, and that it will be more useful dispersed among the various institutions of the land, according to their several requirements.

A Revival Incident.

THE town of W——, in Ashtabula County Ohio, shared richly in those showers of Divine grace that descended in such pentecostal abundance on our land, during the early part of the present year. The place was moved by the presence of God, and all classes trembled at his power. Among others, there was a professor of religion, while he had hitherto neglected his eternal interests, and lived without God and without hope in the world.

For some days conscience had been busy at work, calling up his sins to remembrance. He saw their guilt—he felt their crushing weight and destructive power. Concealing as much as possible his feeling from others, he tried to pray in secret, but he found no relief. Meetings were held daily, which he had uniformly attended. But one afternoon he remarked to his wife, that "she might go to meeting, and he would stay at home with the child," a little girl three or four years of age.

His wife accordingly prepared herself, and went. After her departure, his anxiety of mind became to great that he could not rest, and he began to walk the room in his agony. The little girl soon noticed his agitation of mind, and inquired, "What ails you, pa?" He replied, "Nothing;" and endeavored to quiet his feelings, and divert his mind from the subject. But all in vain! Conscience would not hush up at his bidding. He could not calm the troubled deep of his sin-polluted heart. After sitting for a short time, he rose again, and commenced walking to and fro, as before. Soon the attention of his little daughter was again arrested, and wondering, doubtless, at her father's uneasiness, and ignorant of its cause, she looked up sympathisingly in his face, and, inquired, with all the artlessness and simplicity of childhood—"Pa! If you were dry, wouldn't you go and get a drink of water?" The father started, as if a voice from heaven had fallen on his ear. He thought of his sins. He thought of his thirsty soul, famishing for the waters of life! He thought of that Living Fountain opened in the gospel, and he heard the voice of Jesus saying. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink!" "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters!" He thirsted!

"He longed to drink that crystal stream.
That flows the trees of life between—
That its pure waters, in his soul,
Might rise eternally to roll!"

He believed, and straightway fell at the Savior's feet, exclaiming, in heart, if not in words,

"Just as I am, thou wilt receive;
Wilt welcome, pardon, cleanse, relieve;
Because thy promise I believe;
O Lamb of God, I come, I come!"

From that hour he dates the dawning of a new light, and the beginning of a new life. How simple, and yet how varied, are the means which God employs to enlighten and save men! How mighty is the feeblest instrumentality when employed as the sword of the Spirit!

What encouragement to faith, what stimulus to prayer and effort, do such examples afford! [Congregationalist.

Universalism in Smooth Water.

A Christian gentleman, one Colonel Richardson, was in a boat along with two Universalists, on the river, some distance above the falls of Niagara. The Universalists began to rally the Colonel on his belief of future punishment, and expressed their astonishment that a man of his powers of mind should be so far mislead as to believe the horrid dogma. The Colonel defended his opinions, and the result was a controversy, which was carried on so long and earnestly that, when they after some time looked around, they found that the boat was hurrying with great rapidity towards the falls! The Universalists at once dropped the oars and began to cry to God to have mercy on them. Richardson laid hold of the oars and exerted all his strength, and, by God's mercy, pulled ashore. When they had landed, he addressed his companions: "Gentlemen, it is not long since you were railing at me for believing in future punishment. Your opinion is, that when a man dies, the first thing of which he is conscious is of being in heaven; now I want to know why you were so terribly frightened when you thought that in five minutes more you'd be over the falls into glory?" The Universalists were silent for some time; at length one of them, scratching his head, said, "I'll tell you what, Colonel Richardson, Universalism does very well in smooth water, but it will never do to go over the falls of Niagara!"

DOES THE BIBLE GROW OLD?—"What shall you do, when you have read your Bible through?" asked a little child, as she looked curiously at the marks in her mother's Bible. "What will you do when you come to the end?" "Why, begin to read it again," replied the mother. "But will you not know it all?" When you have read other books, you put them away and read something else. Why do you read the Bible so many times?" "Because," answered the mother, "the Bible is always new; if we study it all our lives, we shall not exhaust it." It is like a rich mine of gold: you may dig, and dig, in it, but still the gold is not gone. Hundreds of years ago, men began to dig in this Bible mine, but there is enough left for us, and for all that shall come after us. No, the Bible never grows old. So long as the world lasts, its books will be still new and living, and able to save to the uttermost, all who believe it." [American Messenger.

YOUNG MEN.—Our correspondent of last week who had just visited the State Prison, stated that the prisoners are almost all young men. He farther informs us that Orlinski, who seems to be about forty, is apparently the oldest. Out of five hundred and forty-one prisoners, nearly all are under thirty. This is a painful and suggestive fact. How many lives suddenly ended, so far as honor and earthly hopes are concerned. Ignominy surrounds them and will follow them while they live. In each of these cases, life—the only life they have to live—has been utterly a failure, disappointing every bright dream, ending in shame and agony. None become suddenly vicious. The loss of their all is to each the consequences of the small beginnings of sin. By all that is precious in an honorable life, by all that is dreadful in the ignominy, and sullen gloom of prison, let men beware of the beginning of vice, for it leads inevitably downward. [Exchange.

THE TRUE CHURCH.—By his Church our Savior did not mean a party, bearing the name of a human leader, distinguished by a form of opinion, and, the ground of this distinction, denying the name or character of Christians to all but themselves. He means by it, the body of his friends and followers, who truly imbibe his spirit, no matter by what name they are called, in what house they worship, by what peculiarities of mode and opinion they are distinguished, under what sky they live, or what language they speak. These are the true Church—men made better, made holy, virtuous, by his religion—men who, hoping in his promises, keep his commandments. [William Ellery Channing.

SOLECISM IN MANNERS.—There are few things more disagreeable than to be kept waiting in a drawing room or library, when you have come to pay a visit to the lady of the house. To be kept waiting indicates either that your call is intrusive, the lady is not acquainted with the rules of good breeding, that you are upon such intimate footing that any liberty can be taken with you, or that an elaborate array is absolutely essential to the hostess being at all presentable. This evil prevails to a disagreeable extent, and its prevalence manifests a degree of carelessness in domestic dress, which is worthy of all reprehension. It is presumed that a lady is always neat, and derives no adventitious succor from the circumstances of the toilet. She should, therefore on the announcement of the presence of visitors, hasten to receive them in the same attire in which she appears in her family circle, and by the readiness of her reception evince its cordiality and welcome. A delay of a quarter of an hour should be taken as a tacit hint that a repetition of the call will be considered a bore, while any further delay should be construed into a decided and most unequivocal affront.

SIMPLE FAITH.—A missionary in Africa asked a little boy if he was a sinner. The boy said. "Yes, we are all sinners." The missionary then asked him who could save him from his sins. He replied, "Jesus Christ." "What has Jesus Christ done to save sinners?" "He has died on the Cross." "Do you believe Jesus Christ will save you?" "Yes." "Why do you believe it?" "I feel it; and would he send his servants the missionaries from such a fare country to tell us about salvation, and after all, cast out a sinner?" Not so, indeed, with respect to all that come to him in faith; for he has said, "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."

RARITY OF A TRUE GENTLEMAN.—Perhaps a gentleman is a rarer gentleman than some of us think for. Which of us can point out many such in his circle; men whose aims are generous, whose truth is constant, and not only constant in its kind, but elevated in its degree; whose want of meanness makes them simple, who can look the world honestly in the face with an equal manly sympathy for the great and the small? We all know now a hundred whose coats are very well made, and a score who have excellent manners, and one or two happy beings who are what they call in the inner circles, and have shot into the very centre and bull's eye of fashion; but of gentlemen how many? Let us take a little scrap of paper and each make out his list.

ASTRONOMY IN THE UNITED STATES.—It is a highly honorable state of things to the scientific progress of our country that seven American astronomers have been elected associates of the Royal Astronomical Society of London. We subjoin a list of names, with the dates of their election:

Prof. W. C. Bond, of the Cambridge Observatory, Jan. 12, 1849.
Prof. B. Pierce, of Harvard University, April 12, 1850.
Prof. A. D. Bache, of the Coast Survey, April 12, 1850.
Prof. O. M. Mitchell, of the Cincinnati Observatory, April 12, 1850.
Dr. B. A. Gold, Jr., of the Dudley Observatory, Jan. 12, 1855.
Dr. Brunnow, of Ann Arbor University, Jan. 12, 1855.
Lieut. M. F. Maury, of the Washington Observatory, Jan. 12, 1855.

The whole number of the Associates is fifty-two.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

SISTER PHERIBY COX, aged about thirty-six years, died at her residence in Bibb county, Alabama. Early in life she was impressed with the responsibility of an immortal soul. She professed religion early; and her pious walk and Godly conversation adorned that profession. A breach in the family circle has occurred—her companion with nine loving children, and many friends mourn her loss; but they mourn not as those without hope. Though the grave has closed above our friend, her pure spirit has gone to realms above. All that remains for us to do is, to imitate her example, that our end may be like hers.
November 6, 1858. B. W. CROWN.

SISTER LOUISA C. PRICE, relict of the late Dr. J. Price, departed this life, on the 26th October, 1858, at Tigerville, Terrebonne, Louisiana, in the forty-fifth year of her age. Sister Price has long been an ornament to Protestant Christianity. Her house was a home for the toiling itinerants, while they were planting pure religion in this section of the State. Difficulties of no ordinary cast have opposed the progress of religion in this section, from its first introduction. But upon her friendship, the servants of Christ have confidently relied; and to her example they might point as reflecting a steady light. We found her, at the commencement of this year, a child of deep affliction, confined to her bed; and for many weary months deprived of her much loved church privileges, but always resigned to the will of God. I never knew one, who suffered so long and so severely, so uncomplaining. A few days before her death, in the midst of sufferings almost unparalleled, she had a fearful conflict with the tempter; but her victory was complete. She remarked to one of her daughters—The clouds are all gone, my sky is clear. After which she sang a part of the hymn, known as "Happy Day." Thus lived and died Sister Price. May God sanctify this sad providence, to the salvation of her family and friends. N. A. CRAVENS.
Napoleonville, La., Nov. 15, 1858.

MRS. MARY A. GLOVER, wife of Allen Glover, deceased, died of consumption in Demopolis, Alabama, on the 21st of October, 1858. She was born in Winchester, Virginia, Sept. 18th, 1806. She joined the Methodist Church in Demopolis, long before any Church was regularly organized—and was the first and oldest member. A consistant and pious woman, and truly benevolent—she was devotedly loved in all the relations of life. She lived to see the Church grow and prosper; and all, but one, of her children, and many relatives attached to it. Under the shaw, but sure inroads of the fatal disease, she suffered long and severely, but grace triumphed. For some months before her death, the subject of sanctification was a frequent theme with her pastor. She embraced the doctrine in its fullness, and declared that not a cloud or doubt dimmed her faith. She called her children and relatives to her bedside, and counselled them with words of wisdom—urging the necessity of living religiously; she then prayed earnestly to depart, and he with Jesus. She fell, gently to sleep, and was with the Lord. J. W. H.
Demopolis, Nov. 13, 1858.

MRS. ALETHIA A. DIXON, daughter of Randle and Elizabeth Goolsbe, and wife of H. F. Dixon, of Amite County, Miss., departed this life Oct. 29th, 1858, aged 39 years. She was born in Amite Miss., Sept. 4th, 1819, and there passed her earthly pilgrimage. Her disease was consumption; and long and painful was her affliction.

Sister D. united with the Baptist Church in 1845, and continued a consistent member of the same until her Master said "it is enough, come up higher."

She managed her household affairs quietly, and all was neat and in order; her husband never received from her an unkind word, but she ever sought to render him happy. Her children loved her, for she was so tender toward them; she was as a sister to her neighbors; she was a kind mistress; and (in the language of her Pastor) "she was one of the main pillars of the Church;" at her house the weary minister of Jesus found a hearty welcome, and a comfortable home. She bore her affliction with Christian fortitude and resignation. Calmly and without alarm she spoke of her death, and gave directions concerning her burial. She called her family and friends around her, and taking them by the hand, one by one, gave them her dying admonition, and said, "Farewell, meet me in Heaven." To her husband, who asked her if she was willing to die, she said, "Perfectly so," and added, "I thank my God, I have not served Him in vain;" she had the doctor called; she said, "Doctor, I am almost gone." He asked her if she was willing to go? She replied, "Yes, perfectly." A few minutes previous to her death, her husband asked her if she felt assured that all would be well with her when gone? Her reply was, "Entirely so." To an irreligious neighbor, who had recently lost his wife, she said, "Cousin Henry, I am going to Heaven, I shall meet your dear companion. Oh! seek religion, be a Christian, and meet us there." She said to her husband "oh do keep my children from sin;" and to her eldest son, "be sure to attend to your Sabbath school business." She left a husband and seven children, with a large circle of friends.—Her last words were, "oh blessed Jesus, how sweet thou art—I put my entire trust in thee. Thou art my only sure friend. Oh take me home to Heaven where thou art." A FRIEND.

HAPPY DEATH OF A SERVANT.

BEN, servant of Mme. L. Davis, died on the 11th inst., in the thirty-fourth year of his age, in Camptn, Natchitoches parish. Religion is slow in progress, but death is rapid. Far more sickness has prevailed this year in North Louisiana than in any former year within my recollection. Among the killed is Ben, whose piety and good conduct made him a pattern for all the blacks. His mistress says, he never told a lie, even in boyhood, but has always been proverbially honest and moral. He has set an example worthy the imitation of all, for he showed us how to die. When told, by his mistress, he must die; he said calmly, "Raise my children, as you have raised me." Thanked her for all favors, and bade her good-by. He revived a little, and told his wife and mother many good things, and obtained a promise from them to meet him in heaven. He exhorted, reproved and warned his fellow-servants. His work was done. He raised the victor's shout for some moments then waved his glad hands, and left all weeping. May Ben's recorded death, do good to many servants. WILLIAM A. SMYTH.

YELLOW FEVER! YELLOW FEVER!
TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS!
Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately. It cures burns, boils, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at J. WRIGHT, & CO'S, Drug Store, 21 and 151 Chartres Street. Price $1 per bottle. 6 22

DR. T. McGOWN'S
SARSAPARILLA
AND
IODINE OF POTASI,
THE GREAT
BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer to Panacea or Catholicon than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colodet, Baron, Baradsley, Manson, Rheard, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin: Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McOwn's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Consumption, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Kidneys, Bladder; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fordyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in combinations enfeebled and enervated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR.—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux etc.

McGOWN'S IRONWOOD AND IRON.—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL.—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS.—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT.—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

POETRY.

DEATH OF THE REDEEMER—BY ELIZ. M. ALLISON.

Translated from the Italian of Onorio Minzoni.

When the Redeemer, in his last lament,
Unclosed the tombs, and the deep mountains rent,
Adam astonished; from the grave uprose,
Stood on his feet erect, and felt earth's throes.
The torpid pupils of his eyes roll'd round,
With awe and wonder, at the sights he found.
With palpitating breast, he saw the cause—
A bleeding God:—outraged creation's laws.
When he beheld it, o'er his fleshless brow,
O'er his gray locks—streaming like wintry snow—
And o'er his hollow cheeks, repentant shame
Was marked, as if in words of living flame.
Then turning to his consort mourning sigh'd,
While to these words, echoed the mountains wide,
And all the yawning tombs made answering cry,
'Twas I, that gave the son of man to die.

LETTER FROM BAALBEC.

Journey of the River Barada—View of Damascus, its Scriptural History—Tombs, etc.—Burial-place of Abel—Baalbec—Ruins, their luxury grandeur—Immense Blocks of Stone.

SYRIA, APRIL, 1858.

I LEFT DAMASCUS for this place, after three days, and ascended a hill upon the mountain-pass which overlooks the city and vast plains below, commanding one of the most beautiful panoramic views of Damascus it is possible to imagine, and the only place where it is seen to advantage. As we left the city gate, and passed out from the walls, along the hill-side, the falling domes and crumbling minarets proclaimed the doom of Moslem power. The gardens, along the river Barada or Abana, were beautiful beyond description, with fruit trees of the richest foliage, and green sward of the liveliest hue; fields of grain were waving in the wind—and the whole scene was one of nature bursting into fresh life, rife with all the blessings of earth.

The rivers were rushing down the hills over the rocky beds like a torrent, refreshing the whole valley below.

We ascended the mountain to an elevation which commanded a magnificent prospect of Damascus and its environs. Its domes and minarets rose upon the sight, in the midst of this oriental Paradise, like gems of pearl set in emeralds—reflecting shades of exquisite coloring studded with the softest dyes.

The city is surrounded by groves—perfectly enchanting; the olive, orange, pomgranite, lemon, citron, and other fruits of temperate climates grow to perfection; gardens of almonds, which tower into lofty trees; also peach, pear, apple, plumb, apricots, and nuts of various kinds, flourish together. The Barada branching off, diversifies scenery of romantic beauty, and enriches every spot where it flows. The mountains, in the distant perspective, throw a charm over all, forming an outline, relieved by a lovely sky, unconfined space to the vision, between them and the city increasing their amplitude—one range rising beyond another, their different shades adding beauty and magnitude to the delightful scene—perfectly unique in character and unrivalled in charms.

A soft, hine haze settled down upon the gardens, which for miles around the city—between it and the mountains beyond—which gave to them the delicate tinge of blue, and appeared like the sea, in reality. Upon another side the bold, rocky cliffs which crowned the mountains and hills nearer to us, shaded with a deep relish brown, and far away beyond these, appeared ranges of a more delicate hue, increasing the distant perspective—upon which the eye loves to gaze, and reposes with peculiar pleasure; while imagination funcys the scene beyond, rife with beauty, which nature loves to unfold in all the variety of light and shade, to captivate the soul.

We looked upon this novel and charming picture—which has left a fadeless impression upon the mind, never to be erased. It was Damascus—a place renowned in scriptoral history, with associations clustering around it of immortal and undying splendor, connected with the conversion of St. Paul, and peculiarly honored of God in that event.

The prospect was most lovely! associated as it is with the vision of St. Paul, opening into heaven, formed a climax for hallowed thought.

We ascended the bleak, rocky hills, and soon lost sight of this gem of oriental beauty; and, winding among the mountain heights, looked down upon the romantic but narrow valley of the Burada—the only green spot we saw all day.

Little villages were nestled along its borders, where ever it had width—and clusters of huts or walls, covered with earth, which serve as streets, rising one above another in terraced forms—as all these ancient cities or villages appear to be built.

Through terrific mountain gorges, of the most bold and romantic character, we continued our course. The wild passes, frequently precipitous, and fearful to look down.

We crossed a single arch bridge of stone, under which a torrent was rushing like the roar of a cataract. The mountain gorge opened upon right and left, in bold and rocky ledges of rock; upon one side, part of the way up, were tombs and broken columns, which once adorned some temple near the mountain's brow. The river still rushed down, with the noise of a torrent, like those in the valley of Chamounie from the sea of ice.

We wound around another mountainous region of rock, which rose to a height of eight hundred feet, of a most peculiar character. Some distance up its sides were caves, cut in the solid rock for tombs, a great number of them—some looked like entrances to caves. It is said by those who have entered them, that they are churned with niches for the dead—similar to those at Jerusalem, and other places in the East. They were so high up the cliffs that they appear inaccessible—but steps are cut in the rock which lead to their entrances. The ancient city, authors tell us, once occupied a site near this spot, called Abila, capital of Abilene; where, it is said a synod was held in veneration by the people, of this being the burial-place of Abel, and that his tomb was in the mountain.

We passed, in our ride, some very fertile spots upon the road-side, with the white and red hawthorn, fragrant with blossoms. And large fruit orchards in full bloom, in lovely contrast to the barren, rocky hills which towered above them. The valley of the Barada was rich in production—large fields of grain as well as fruit were growing, in rich luxuriance. The little terraced villages, teeming with inhabitants, who thronged about us to sell their eggs or chickens. Women, with premature old age at thirty, marked upon their withered face and wrinkled brow. They marry so young in the East, that they have comparatively no days of childhood and youth, to develope either physical or mental powers; ignorance and imbecility mark their declining years with a most repulsive aspect. It is mournful to look upon the condition of woman in the East, her destiny is without one redeeming circumstance—hopeless and sad.

We rode up the valley between the two mountains—Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon—to reach Baalbec, whose summits were still covered with snow, although at their base, the valleys were beautifully green. We soon came in sight of the imposing ruins of Baalbec; and now we were before the most magnificent monuments of architectural grandeur seen in the world.

Our tents are struck in front of the building, with a fine view of its external aspect, sublime in its dreary impression of grandeur at the first glance.

A walk among the ruins increases the wonder, and the mind is perfectly absorbed in contemplation.

The lofty columns, with beautiful Corinthian capitals, the magnificent shafts rising sixty-two feet, with a sculptured entablature of nearly four feet more—making in all seventy-six—were perfectly astonishing. Six were detached from the building, the walls of the portico having fallen. They stand, the monuments of greatness and strength, as models of beauty and grace. The whole place is strewed with enormous broken columns of granite, thrown down from a temple by an earthquake.

We reached the grand portal, by creeping up a low passage, almost filled with earth and rubbish, to look at that wonderful specimen of art, still fresh and nicely preserved from the ravages of time. Its width is fourteen feet six inches, and height twenty-four. The elegantly sculptured wreaths of fruit and flowers, which surround its sides are the admiration of all who see them. Over the top a cornice, a border beneath, and so delicately has the artist performed his work, that no two flowers are alike—neither the clusters of grapes which adorn its sides, leaves or buds; a wreath of flowers and of grapes encircle the whole. One large block at the top of the portal with its cornice, has given way and fallen, by some convulsion of nature, from its original position, but hangs, wedged in by two blocks below so that it cannot escape, although it looks perilous to stand upon the threshold beneath. Upon its surface, is carved a large spread eagle.

This portal opens into a large magnificent hall, with arched recesses. The lower part of the room is filled with rubbish, which must have had considerable depth below, by the square blocks of stone seen in some places. It was difficult to find our way among these heaps of ruins, but every step unfolded the greatness of the original design, the perfection of its plan and the finish of its work. Doric capitals of immense size lie scattered among the fragments, which surround this wonderful temple. Courts and dilapidated porticoes, now in ruins, surround the building, and extend over a space of 1000 feet in length. Large blocks with sharp edges lying up, and broken columns ashut, and some upright, with broken shaft, make the passage troublesome and difficult, and to climb up, we needed assistance.

The western wall is considered the most imposing, rising at a level with the columns fifty feet above the surface of the earth, and in it the immense stones, celebrated by travelers for their size—one, sixty-four feet by sixty-three feet five inches, and sixty-three feet, height thirteen feet—twenty feet above the ground; below, there are seven others of the same thickness, but smaller dimensions.

The foundations of this temple are of solid stone, fifty feet high, to give the building an elevated and imposing aspect, as it is situated in a valley. Under it is an arch of considerable height, extending the whole length of the building, forming an underground passage, entered by arched portals at each end—quite a perspective of the distance is given, standing at the entrance and looking through the tunnel. It is now a habitation for domestic animals—mules and donkeys walked deliberately in while we were there. Vaulted arches are seen on other sides, but not so extensive as this, designed for the convenience of this massive building and its idolatrous purposes.

[To be concluded next week.]

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Deputation from Canada—Methodism in Scotland, its economy and Working—Support of the Ministry, etc. etc.

Mr last was in reference to the Queen, and as that, from the very nature of it, must necessarily be a princely subject, I may not so summarily dispose of it.

About the time of the Queen's visit to Scotland, a deputation from Canada waited upon her Majesty, to solicit the attendance of some member of the royal family, at the opening of the Canada Crystal Palace, on the 1st of October; but, on the ground of the lateness of the season and the youth of the Prince of Wales, (who only could be spared) she was not able to comply with their request, though she highly appreciated and acknowledged this expression of the loyalty and devotion of her Canadian subjects to herself and the throne; and intimated the possibility of their wishes being met hereafter. From this answer, from her known fondness for travel, and the desire to render herself still more popular with her North American subjects, it seems to be the settled opinion on all sides, that the Queen will visit Canada during the early part of next summer, and, as a consequence, the United States also. The latter is expected, from the fact, that while our present President was minister at London, the Queen paid great attention to his niece, Miss. Lane; and that he, in return for her majesty's kindness, (if not for a stroke of policy a la Napoleon) can do no less than invite her majesty to visit Washington—which doubtless she would be proud to do.

So Brother Jonathan may be getting a hat ready, that will bear hard usage during a royal progress to and from Washington.

But what of Methodism during all this time? I think I hear both you and many of your readers, say. Well I will try and inform you.

I called on the Wesleyan Minister of Aberdeen, soon after my arrival there, and found him (Rev. John Drake) a very affable, christain gentleman; and from him principally, with considerable reading and observation, I learned a good deal of the working of Methodism in this country and elsewhere. From these, as well as my observations there, in 1849, I am sorrowfully compelled to say, that I consider Methodism in Scotland, as gradually dying out. The gospel, in the hands of the ministers, though preached with all fidelity, is not so successful in the building up of a Methodist Church all over the land, or in the conversion of souls unto God, as it is anywhere else; and yet, the Wesleyan ministers, among all others, bear a name for piety, labor, and even usefulness, that is very refreshing to the heart of a well wisher to our common Methodism.

Whether this want of success arises from the cast of the national mind, (which is abhorrent of what they think is Arminianism,) or whether it arises from the great preference of a vast majority of the people to a Presbyterian form of church government, I do not know; I must content myself with stating the fact, and letting speculation alone.

Nine years ago, there were two districts in Scotland, the Edinburgh and the Aberdeen, besides the missions in the Orkney and Shetland Islands, originally established by Dr. Adam Clarke, but now, there is but one district besides these missions in the whole of Scotland; and then, again, I hear of preaching places having been abandoned, and of the members in society being more than decimated in many others. I have no kind of doubt, from the information Mr. Drake gave, but that their flysheet troubles, and the movements and great popularity of the Free Church of Scotland, about the same period of time, have largely contributed to such a result. From their minutes for this year, a copy of which I have with me, they report only 2267 members in society, for the whole of Scotland, exclusive of the mission already referred to. The territory embraced in this district, includes all the valuable portion of the country, extending as it does, from the extreme south, and as far north as Inverness, about one hundred miles north-west of this present writing. In it are fourteen circuits (for they have no stations,) and twenty-one ministers, each of whom is supported by some particular society, because he fills the office, and bears the relation of pastor to that particular society, no matter what other, or many offices that minister may fill. Thus: John Drake is chairman of the Edinburgh and Aberdeen district, but he is not paid for that—not even his traveling expenses. But John Drake is also superintendent of the Aberdeen circuit; but he has not even his traveling expenses in the discharge of the duties of that office. He is moreover, pastor of the Aberdeen society, and in that relation to the work he is paid his quarterage and table expenses, and has his home there, etc.

The allowance to a preacher is four guineas a quarter—twenty dollars for quarterage, and a good house, plainly and respectably furnished, with coal, water, light and taxes, and a minimum assessment of fourteen shillings per week for table expenses—three dollars and forty cents. The same allowances of quarterage and table expenses for a wife, if married; and in proportion for children, with some other allowances to the latter for schooling, etc.

I have said that the minimum allowance of the conference, is fourteen shillings for table expenses, that is: they will not send a preacher to an appointment, where he is not guaranteed in the receipt of his quarterage, house, &c., and at least fourteen shillings per week for his table expenses; but, in nine-tenths of the circuits at least, the stewards, do not confine themselves to paying this minimum of quarterage and table expenses, they pay what they please, and as they wish their minister to appear among other ministers as a gentleman; their entire allowance, where they are able, which they generally are—is very satisfactory.

I am quite convinced, that there is a healthy state of religion among British Methodists in this exhibition of the fruit of the spirit, in caring for the necessary comfort of their pastors, that would admit of considerable imitation in many parts of our Methodism.

There is considerable departure from the usages of Methodism allowed in the societies of Scotland. The superintendent of a circuit in England, though he has his residence fixed, always in a certain locality by the quarterly conference, which also does the same for each of his colleagues, follows a plan of preaching in the circuit in common with his brethren, but is not pastor of any particular society, which is otherwise (as has been said,) in Scotland. There is also, the anomaly in Scotland, of having society members and church members. The society members meet in class, keep all the rules of Methodism, and are only counted in the annual minutes, as belonging to Methodism, while the church members only occupy sittings in the churches or houses of worship, admit of pastoral visitations, and receive the sacraments, just like the members of other denominations. What number of church members there may be in Scotland, I am not able to say. But to return to the duties of the offices filled by some of the ministers, as already referred to, I would say:

That there are two meetings a year in each district, one before, and one after the meeting of the annual conference. The meeting before conference, is to make a cast of appointments in the district for the ensuing year, to be forwarded to the stationing committee, which meets in advance of the annual conference, and also to appoint representatives for the district, to appear in the stationing committee, etc. etc.

In the absence of the president of the conference, the chairman of the district, is president of this meeting, as also of that which meets after conference, to hear reports from the annual conference. The president of conference, generally visits Scotland and Ireland once a year, but is only allowed his travelling expenses out of the contingent fund, for doing so. His pastoral charge, meets all his claims. The present president, John Bowers, is House Governor of Didsbury Institute. He also, visits important points of the work in England. Besides the duties already spoken of, as belonging to the chairman of the district, he also, in a sense, have charge of all the preachers in the district; because should any one of them be charged with offence in the internal conference, he must try the delinquent, in accordance with the law of the discipline.

If a vacancy should occur in the district, by the death, or disability of any of the preachers, it is also his duty to apprize the president, so as to have one of the Theological students on the president's reserved list sent, to supply the vacancy. He, also, upon being applied to by any circuit or party in the district, is required, and expected to give an exposition of the law in any given case that may arise between parties in the district; in other words, he is an exponent of the laws of Methodism. The title you will thus see, is honorary and not remunerative.

As superintendent of a circuit, he visits for the purpose of administering the sacrament, meeting the classes, and inquiring into the general state of the work once a quarter in each society. This circuit consists of the Aberdeen society, and the societies of Peterhead, thirty-two miles north-east, and Inverury, sixteen miles north-west; and when John Drake visits Peterhead or Inverury, the preachers of those places supply his pulpit—but each pays his own traveling expenses. He is thus absent once in six weeks from his own pastoral field of labor to give a look into the labors of his colleagues. This however, I ought to say, is not a sample of the circuits of Methodism in England, either in the country or cities; though the principle of pastoral operations and oversight, is identically the same. The variation, is doubtless intended to accommodate Methodism to the Scotch notion of settled pastors.

The circuits of England, whether in the city or the country, usually embrace a good number of appointments; have from two to six ministers, and are supplied with preaching and pastoral visitation by all these ministers in rotation, according to the plan of the circuits; while the administration of discipline, should any be requisite, devolves upon the superintendent only. Thus, the evidently great office in British Methodism, is the pastorate; for, whatever office the pastor is, in the Providence of God called upon to occupy at any time, whether as missionary, secretary, chairman of a district, or president, he at the same time, never loses his identification as a member, in the ranks of methodist pastors.

Francis A. West, was president of the conference for last year, but yet, though filling that high office, was at the same time superintendent of the Ninth London Circuit. He is in charge of the same circuit again for the present year. John Bowers, the present president, though House Governor at Didsbury, stands in the relation of a pastor or chaplain to that institution. In short, they appear one and all, as overseers of the flock of Christ, for the spiritual good of that flock, and not for place or filthy lucre's sake; much less as lords over God's heritage. They magnify the pastor's office, and God greatly blesses, and is blessing their labors in various parts of the world in consequence. Of all, and to all of which, I can only say, "esto perpetua."

I had intended in this communication, to give your readers a comparative view of Methodism, from a British stand point; but my limits are already exceeded, and I must defer this to a more distant opportunity. My intercourse with the minister here, has been most pleasant to me indeed. He invited me at once to preach for him, and urged me to attend his other meetings, and I was both pleased and profited, I trust, in being able to do so. Their church is now in an out of the way, back lane, where, to the knowledge of your correspondent, it has been for upwards of thirty-three years. The pulpit is of the high box, Wesleyan sort—as seen by us in pictures of Wesley's preaching—with galleries all round the church. In some of their prayer meetings, the spirit of awakening and conversion is abroad, and I hope and pray, that it is the beginning of better times to them.

I regret, exceedingly, that I have to leave before the coming of the president of conference on his annual visit to Scotland, which is fixed, I see, for the 17th of October, accompanied by Wm. M. Hunting, (the son of Dr. H.) and Wm. M. Punshon, the eulogist of Bunyan, and in some degree, a rival of Spurgeon—fully so, in eloquence at least, though he does not, as yet, draw such crowds out to hear him. I have a great desire to hear him but find I must be disappointed, as neither time, tide nor steamships, will wait for any man. My departure from this side of the water, is fixed for 12th prox., via. Dublin and Galway, Ireland.

My next will give some account of the state of religion and Presbyterianism, etc. and, in all likelihood, will close labors of your Occasional Correspondent,

CONFERENCE DEPOSITORIES.

Dr. Drake's third objection to Conference Depositories, is, that it will require some of our ablest men for the "Begging Bureau," and an "eternal begging to keep up the Depository." The inference is, that these able men will be doing no good; no preaching, no visiting, no praying in families; and that no souls will be converted under their ministry. If it were not egotistical, one Agent would be willing to compare notes with the Dr. and several other preachers he wots of.

If I am not mistaken these Agents come in very good place at camp-meetings, and protracted meetings. They are not useless even on such occasions.

But the "eternal begging" is intended to be figurative only, I reckon.

There are some strange views entertained by some people—especially those called Methodists—about begging collections, giving money, "honoring God with their substance," etc, which I think are rather antiquated, old-fogyish, etc. The idea of quarter-dollar (quarterage holds on to them yet. Hence, a "begging sermon"—"gospel sermon" ought to be the phrase—is a most untimely thing, kills a revival, destroys all the devotion of a very devotional people, puts them fast to sleep—at times. And a preacher can have no worse name, in their estimation, than to be known as one who preaches that half of the Gospel. He is dreaded at a meeting, among such. Why? Because they are in ignorance of their duty, and are kept so by a set of whining preachers who refuse to circulate an elevating, enobling, liberal, gospel literature, and never instruct the people as to their duty; and debase themselves, the people and the gospel, by publishing to the people, "I don't want your money, I am not preaching for money, I want to see you converted and get shouting happy." As if they really believed that people could be converted and get shouting happy, out of their duty. Such a course is degrading—will keep a people low; estop elevation and improvement; and make the ministry an object of pity and scorn. Hence it is, that religion in all its phases, is regarded as a secondary thing with many; poor log huts without comfort or convenience are looked to as Churches—the very sight of which is enough to disgust a decently raised slaner, with religion—supposing him to associate religion with the hut. And some of those preachers opposed to the eternal begging, would travel a Circuit fifty years and not exert themselves to have a decent house put up for the worship of God, and the service of religion! I know that the presentation of the money-laws of the Bible will influence the people to do right, though some of them may get mad. I knew an instance where an appointment was made for a preacher in a hut of a house. He presented the money-side of religion, declared it was an insult to God for them to call such a "hog-pen" as that a Church. After sermon, the people selected an elegible place for a Church. That afternoon a subscription was started for funds; and in a few months a comfortable framed Church, was ready for the service of God and religion. All this was done notwithstanding some of the old fogys felt their temper up, under the discourse. So much for "eternal begging."

But those persons are especially tender when the begging, a misnomer, is for anything connected with Methodism. They are willing that Agents of the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the American Sunday-school Union; and any other society not Methodistical shall preach, lecture, explain, appeal and take collections, notes, subscriptions. But, ah my! how they shake their heads when a Methodist Agent comes! "Our Church is ruined by so much begging." "Religion is brought into disrepute, by our preachers getting up so many things which require money." "Yes, money, money, seems to be all that some of them think about."

Yes; the other societies may collect half a million a year; cheaper books have colporteurs and agents all over the country, and nothing is said. It's all right. Is it not strange that methodists will talk so? What if we were to collect $100,000 per annum in the Mississippi Conference the next ten years, for the book and tract business! Would any one be injured by it? No! not I said in April, 1856, in a sermon preached in Livingston, Miss., "That there were persons, several of them, living within ten miles of that place, some before me, who ought to give at least, $100,000 each, to religious and benevolent institutions; that if they did not, I feared their property would be a curse to them and their children. And I doubted not, but there were many more in our State, who ought to give as much or more. The amount might be given, thus: $25,000 to A. H. C.; $25,000 to Education; $25,000 to Missions, and $25,000 to the Book and Tract cause—to endow and assist our Publishing-house at Nashville, which is strugling to keep up and do good. And if these sums were given by all who are able to give them, and by others in proportion to the Mission fund as an endowment for twenty-five years, before the principal is to be used; that my opinion is, by that time, the world will be almost converted and christianized, so that the millennium will then begin to dawn, etc.

I am still of opinion, if some men could be got up to the point of honoring God with their substance, they might be religious. But while they are burried under cotton bales, cogrees, stock, money, etc., they can't breathe a christain atmosphere. O, for a trumpet voice, that they might hear, understand, and be converted.

Now, if an agent should be successful in arousing one such man in a year to do his duty, a great deal would be accomplished, his "eternal begging," would do some good.

An agent accomplishes much by enlisting others in the book business—becoming colporteurs, etc.

And suppose, that it required all the donations to the society to meet the current expenses for a few years, are we to desist, because of that? No! Our success is not to be estimated by that one item. People are beginning to think, to feel, to act, who would never have done either, if the agent had not gone on his mission. And an influence has been started, which will roll on while time lasts, and gather within its embrace, others every year, who will be saved. Let us not "despise the day of small things." The morning star appears before meridian splendor.

LORD ELGIN'S VISIT TO JAPAN.

IN THE interval between signing the Treaty of Tien-sin and setting its details at Shanghai and Canton, Lord Elgin utilizes his leisure by a visit to the Islands of the Japanese Empire, and within two months of the accomplishment of the Treaty with China sends us home an unlooked-for, or, at any rate, an unhoped-for, Treaty with Japan. Nothing could have been more apparently hopeless than the attainment of any such object. We had no ground of quarrel with the Japanese, or even cause of complaint against them; and we were even 'expressely, and by our own recent act, forbidden to ask for any new privileges.

Admiral Sir James Stirling—a name which in future generations, when the history of events in these seas has been truly written, will call a glow into the face of every Englishman—had, in 1854, made a treaty whereby he obtained the great concession that English ships of war might go into two ports to water; and in return for this great privilege the English undertook to respect the monopoly of the Dutch and never to seek to alter the treaty then granted. The only excuse which Lord Elgin could have under these circumstances to go to the Japanese Court was, to present a steam yacht, which, as an acknowledgement of the Stirling treaty, the Admiralty had sent out to the Emperor. But inasmuch as this yatcht was confided to the Admiral, and not to Lord Elgin, and under strict instructions to deliver it up at the distant port of Nagasaki, the yacht offered no great facility for negotiation.

Moreover, it soon appeared that the present of a pleasure yatcht to a Japanese Emperor is like the present of a pair of spectacles to a blind man,—the first and most fundamental laws of the Empire being that the spiritual and temporal Emperors of Japan shall never pass the outer gates of their palaces. With a curious facility we had thus hit upon the only movable thing in the whole world which an Emperor of Japan could have no chance, not only of ever using, but also of ever seeing. The Admiral, finding no one at Nagasaki able to receive this present, and perhaps a little disgusted with the ridiculous position his instructions and the character of this present placed him in, handed over "the Emperor" to Lord Elgin, and went his way toward Canton. Our Ambassador-errant was now, probably to his great satisfaction, left alone to his own devices, with two steamers of war and a gunboat as a guard, and his little toy steamer, the name of which was now judiciously changed from "the Emperor to "the Dragon," as a bait, or bribe, or peace offering.

Fortune favored the boldness of the enterprise, and American astuteness helped us. Lord Elgin reached Nagasaki on the 3d of August, and found no one there but some Japanese noderlings and some Dutch official, who naturally gave him small hopes. Thence he went, staggering through one of the tremendous gales that vex these seas, to the wretched harbor of Simoda, where the Americans are in power, and at this place he for the first time discovered the workings of the echoes of his own doings on the Peiho. It seems that as soon as the Tien sin treaty was arranged the American Commodore rushed off to Japan to take advantage of the consternation certain to be created by the first news of the recent events in the Peiho. It was smartly imagined. He found at Simoda the American Consul-General just returned from Jeddo, whether he had been upon a six months' mission, vainly importuning for some commercial privileges. The commodore immediately took him on board his ponderous steamer Powhattan, and steared right away for Kanagawa, a station well known to the American men of war since Commodore Perry's time, about 15 miles below the capital city of Jeddo.

Terrible stories and frightful anticipations had for some time possessed the minds of the Japanese. Japan, like other countries of ancient institutions, has its conservative and progressive parties. The Prince of Boringo had stood stoutly for the ancient Japanese constitution and no foreign competition. But when the American ship of war appeared, and when the American version of the warlike operations in China circulated, a strong feeling gained ground in favor of the progressive party. Prince Boringo retired, and Prince Bitsu took his place. Under the new administration Mr. Harris, the Consul-General, was admitted to an interview with the Emperor; ports were opened, and commercial tariffs agreed upon pretty much as is set forth in the statement we borrow from the North China Herald.

When Lord Elgin arrived at Simode he found Mr. Harris in high spirits at having completed this treaty, and the precedent gave him an opportunity whereof he sadly stood in need. We must here—having recently spoken in terms of complaint to our American friends for sending their silliest men upon Embassies—acknowledge that Mr. Harris acted throughout these transactions with a frankness and courtesy worthy of the representative of a great friendly power. Mr. Harris acted like a man who was strong in his own knowledge of the interests of his country. Lord Elgin departed at once for the anchorage below the capital, where he found the American, and also the Russian war steamers. The neutrals had been quick to scent the game from afar; they had run a race against us to gather not only the spoils won by our arms, but even the contributions to be exacted by terror of our deeds. Beyond this anchorage of Kanagawa were rocks and whirlpools and perils innumerable, all faithfully deposed to by Japanese pilots.

Captain Sherard Osborn, who has the reputation of being confident, and not unreasonably confident, in his own seamanship, believed in none of these things. Steaming over the anchorage he held on up the Bay of Jeddo, and, stimulated by the sight of Jedeo city, which slowly unrolled itself in the Northwest angle of the gulf, he pursued his course, undeterred by a full gale of wind, until he could cast anchor within gunshot of a series of well constructed batteries, which run across the shoals facing a portion of the city. Lord Elgin's well judged confidence in his captain was thus rewarded by a position which, considering he had to deal with Asiatics, insured his success. It was a bold move made at a timely moment, for he could have done nothing at a distance. Since Mr. Harris obtained his Treaty there had been a re-actionary movement in Jeddo, directed by the Independent Princes and hereditary nobles. They had ousted the Minister who signed the Treaty, and Prince Boringo ruled again.

But the apperition of the British steam frigates Furious and Retribution, intruding even upon the sacred seclusion of the capital, spread consternation throughout the camp of the obstructives. We made no menaces, and used no threats, but we fear there was something like the pressure of a force which was not altogether moral put upon these gentle Japanese. Our excuse must be, that if the Americans had obtained concessions upon the strength of the terror created by the roar of the lion it would have been hard that the lion could get nothing on his own account. We need not tell how Lord Elgin went on shore in due state and lived in a gaudy temple, and negotiated for fourteen days, and visited many parts of that mighty city of Jeddo, with its two millions of inhabitants and its hundred square miles of habitations; the result has been a treaty, which gives us all we can require for the present. It gives us free commercial access to an interesting and amiable people, to a charming region in a beautiful climate, and to a country rich in coals and minerals. As we improve or abuse these opportunities, so will the event be our profit or our shame.

It is our turn now to hear that remote empires and vast portions of the human race, hitherto as separate as if they belonged to another sphere, have suddenly been added to the community of nations. After China, with its three hundred millions, Japan, with a population no larger than that of these Isles, may seem no such bulky addition to the human brotherhood; but, if China was separate and unknown, Japan was ten times more so.

However, we don't stand exclusiveness. We hold that the world is made for us all; and so we have gradually edged, and finally pushed our way close up to the city of Jeddo, through rows of junks, abreast of green batteries, and dropped our anchors where barbarian ship was never seen before. We took advantage of a panic, and did it with a rush. While we were concluding matters up the Peiho the Russian and American plenipotentiaries were off with breathless haste to Nagasaki, to reap the first fruits of our harvest. They got start enough to get all they wanted, and give time for a re-action. However, Lord Elgin was not far behind; and when he came up he capped the achievements of his brother plenipotentiaries, and got for them more than they had ventured to ask for themselves.

So, with the "Open Sesame" of a little resolution, we have rent the curtain of ages. Captain Osborn reports that there must be a channel, and up they all steam. The mountain side opens, and European eyes rest on objects never seen before but on cups and saucers, and never to be seen, as many believed, till the consummation of all things, the Millenium, or the great mustering for the battle of Armageddon. Lord Elgin went ahead; the bigger ships followed the day after; they bring a handsome present with them, which they wisely judge worthier to be delivered in the presence of an Imperial city than at a distant outport; they come with peaceful bearing, except that they head no signals; they receive the courteous Japanese officials with quiet courtesy; but the spectacle tallies so exactly with the terrible reports from the opposite shores of China that in a moment Japan throws away its palladium of perpetual isolation. Jeddo is at once European.

It is said there are the white temples perched on cliffs, the high thatched cottages, the green batteries, the square-rigged junks, and the interminable city; but these are now only the decorations of a pageant, in which a British gunship towns a dozen boats full of soldiers and sailors, bearing to his lodgings in Jeddo a British nobleman, accompanied by some frightened Japanese officials. He lands and makes his progress through that fabulous city as if it were some seaport in the Levant, distinguished from Europe with a thin veil of Mahomedanism. The crowds run after him, and have to be kept off the line by side ropes; gate after gate opened at his approach; the simple, unsuspicious folk, run out of the baths to see the wondrous foreigners, who find themselves in comfortable quarters, on clean soft mats. It is in a temple, just as travelers used to be entertained by convents, and monarchs with large retinues were quartered on a rich monastery.

By and by the strangers sally forth to license Jeddo. They go to the bazaars and make purchases; they find they are at the West-end of the town, in the Grosvenor-square district, or rather its Belgravia, with the aristocrasy all about them. In their wanderings they find themselves near the Palace. It is something of a Palace. We can hardly believe the figures, except that they are in keeping with the rest of Jeddo. A ditch seventy or eighty yards across, and as many deep, enrrounds a castle of Cyclopean architecture, capable of housing 40,000 men. This accords with a wide populous street, ten miles long, and may perhaps be a necessity in the midst of a House of Lords consisting of 360 feudal barons, some of whom bring "to town" for the season ten thousand retainers.

But, though surprised and ripped open, turned inside out, Anglicized and vulgarized in a day, we confess that Jeddo is still a mystery. Had we thirty years to prepare for angelic visitors we should never get London so ready as Jeddo appears to have been without any warning at all. Every street, everybody clean; washing and bathing as regular institutions as meat and drink; no beggars, no cripples, no squalor, no poverty, no drunkenness, no fighting, no bad smells,—in fact, nothing to remind the Englishmen of their own beloved city. Yet it would be difficult to find a closer parallel in natural circumstances than that between the Japanese and and the British group of islands; the same area, same population, same climate, same insular position between a great continent and a great ocean; and a maritime metropolis with the same population. How is it these semi-barbarians manage these things better than we do.

When we are taunted with the thrift and industry of the Chinese, it is a comfort to think that, after all they are ugly, disgusting brutes, with but the dregs of a religion and the bare threads of an old civilization. What can we throw into the scale against Japan? They shame us at every point. Not a word yet about opium. They were all seen drinking tea in pleasant tea-houses, to be found wherever a spot of natural beauty attracts the eye and gives an opportunity of landscape gardening on a reasonable scale. Graceful and neat-handed houris wait on the tired traveller. But, unless our informants are very blind, or very sly, even here Japan shames us. In the utter absence of prudery is the best proof of their innocence. The most unadorned beauty disturbs not the well regulated Japanese mind. Our poor countrymen were carried through scenes that an Italian poet might have delighted to imagine, but an Englishman kindly ventures to describe. In all these novelties this is the newest and the strangest. [London Times.

RELATIONS OF SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

In certain quarters, apprehensions seem to have arisen from time to time, that the labors of science might in some way be found unfriendly to the interests of Religion, that in the progress of future developments the Faith of the Christian world might be exposed to great and unprecedented trials. How groundless are all such fears, it is scarcely necessary to say. He who can be disturbed by them must either have little true faith, or little clear conception of the wide difference between the province of revealed religion and the province of natural science—and indeed, of all mere human philosophy. Expectations, whether of good or evil, from Science to Religion, are for the most part equally vain. They touch each other at very few points, and have very little in common. The one treats of natural—the other for the most part, of things supernatural; and completely as many branches of science have been revolutionized within the last 1800 years, vast and astounding as have been many of these discoveries made, they have of course left all the great truth of revealed religion just where they found them. They had no power, and could, in the nature of things, have none either for good or evil. A few comparatively unimportant texts, relating to things on the earth, and once read erroneously in the light of imperfect knowledge, have been read in a little different sense under more correct views of the system of the material universe, but no vital truth is in the slightest degree affected by these changes, and all that makes Christianity what it is, remains seated serenely aloft in the third Heaven, above the mutations of human Science, the same yesterday, to-day and forever!—Bishop Potter.

A CONSTANT MIRACLE.

THE BIBLE itself is a standing and an astonishing miracle. Written, fragment by fragment, throughout the course of fifteen centuries, under different states of society and in different languages, by persons of the most opposite tempers, talents, and conditions, learned and unlearned, prince and peasant, bond and free; cast into every form of instructive composition and good writing, history, prophecy, poetry, allegory, emblematic representation, judicious interpretation, literal statement, precept, example, proverbs, disquisition, epistle, sermon, prayer; in short, all rational shapes of human discourse, and treating, moreover, on subjects not obvious, but most difficult; its authors are not found, like other writers, contradicting one another upon the most ordinary matters of fact and opinion, but are at harmony upon the whole of their sublime and momentous scheme. THANKSGIVING DAY IN ALABAMA.

Blessed be all Sabbaths; whether, amid the ordained Sanctities of God's appointed day, or amid the rarer solemnities of conventional celebration. Sweet interludes be they in the dull monotony of this droning world-chorus! Green isles amidst the restless billows of this storm-tossed ocean of life! Calm breathing-places betwixt the aching brow of yesterday, and the struggling heart of the unborn to-morrow! Devoutly recognising the hand of providence, Gov. Moore, of Alabama, set apart Thursday, November 25th 1858, as a day of thank-offering, humiliation, and prayer. Peace amidst the jarring nations of the old world, and peace within the borders of our own happy country; fanatical India reduced to quiet subordination, and pagan China welcoming triumphant Christendom to her populous domain; lightening-messages flashing amidst the coral groves of the ocean, and leviathan steamers careering through the "azure, turbulent" realm of Neptune; bursting granaries, and warehouses groaning with produce; levees piled with cotton bales, and dripping with the sweets of the sugar-house; trade revived, credit re-established, commerce revivescent, bankruptcy averted, faction quelled, national prowess undiminished, and national honor untarnished—all these afford subjects of congratulation and rejoicing. But, above these, the Christian heart found occasion of jubilant Thanksgiving in the great revival, which gloriously emulous of the pentacostal flame, promises soon to wrap the world in a mantle of millenial glory.

Away North.

At this glad season, amidst the hills of New England, and in the old Puritan homesteads, many are the happy, heart-thrilling reunions. The hoary sire and the venerable matron; the sturdy sons and buxom daughters; the young Collegian, fresh from musty rules of Locke and Bacon; and the country humpkin, fresh from the haymow and the farm-yard; the truant boy that went over the sea, and the hoyden Miss from the boarding-school; the bashful Zekle who, in the poets rhyming phrase,

> "Creep up, quite unbeknown,
> An' peeked in thru' the winder," and the shy, yet blooming Huldy; the reverend pastor, and the re-doubtable dominie of the village school—not one away from his accustomed place at that hospitable board. Then flows the blood of unoffending turkeys; then crisps "the exterior tegument" of tender pigs, whose "memory," saith Elia, "is odoriferous;" then smokes the huge sirloin; then steams the savory onion tribe; then swims the punegnt spice about the foaming cup—the cup "that cheers, but not inebriates;" the rosy apples grace the board, the nuts are cracked, and many a joke as well, while innocent mirth rings along the old rafters, awaking the slumbering echoes of the unforgotten long-ago! Not thus, however, did we celebrate.

Thanksgiving day in Tuskegee.

With us it was a rest. Stores and shops were closed; account books were laid aside; the scribe threw down his pen; the lawyer put up his briefs; the "terrible clangor" of hammers fell away to silence; the smithy left his anvil, and the carpenter his saw, while over all, the mellowing brightness of a calm autumnal day threw its investing robe of beauty and of joy. In a town so full of good people, there must needs be preaching. Accordingly, in the Presbyterian Church, at 11 o'clock, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Small, spoke to his congregation from those beautiful metaphorical expressions of David, wherein he represents the full-orbed year in its pomp of seasons, and its royal plenitude of blessings, as "crowned with" God's "goodness," and the paths of the Lord as dropping "fatness." We learn that the discourse was a stirring exhortation to gratitude, as well as an admirable exposition of divine mercies. Mr. Small is a late incumbent of the Presbyterian pulpit in our town. His physical characteristics harmonize with his name, for, like teachers in the Scripture narrative, he is "little of stature." Not so in spirit. Courteous and affable in manners, genial and kindly in his social intercourse, consistent in his devotion to the interests of Christ's kingdom, faithful in the duties of his pastoral, Catholic in the expression of his opinions, yet withal, stanch and well-read, Calvinist too, his settlement here is an accession to the community, and a help on the Lord's side.

But I must tell you, more particularly, of our thanksgiving exercises.

At the College.

By, invitation, our Methodist folk united with the faculty and pupils of the Institution, in an appropriate and impressive celebration of the day. At 11 o'clock the spacious College Chapel contained a respectable audience of ladies and gentlemen. At the moment appointed, the choir in the gallery burst forth in that stirring doxology of the inspired singer, the 150th psalm. Ringing through that still November air, and rolling along that lofty ceiling, the anthem of praise swelled higher and higher, until it seemed to reach "the firmament of his power," throbbing with the voice of "his mighty acts," and radient with outbeamings of "his excellent greatness." It gave us, at least, a fairer idea of what that glorious psalm must have been when, in the grand old ritual of the temple service, with the high priest in his glittering vestments and the white-stoled levites in their humbler garments, its exultant strains pealed along the gorgeously fretted ceiling mingling with the accordant strains of "trumpet" and "stringed instruments," and "highsounding cymbals."

Preliminaries finished, Dr. Lipscomb announced the basis of his discourse, as the 3d and 4th, verses of Ps. 100. In these words, the philosophical mind of the speaker found human nature set forth as a ground of Thanksgiving; 1. In the divinity of its origin, 2. In its supremacy over the material universe. 3. In its mighty capacities for growth, culture, and power. 4. In the glorious transcendancy of its religious sensibilities. You are sufficiently conversant with the characteristics of the Doctor's preaching to know, that the effort was marked by thorough analysis, strict conformity to logical developement, simplicity of statement, affluence of language, and beautiful appositeness of illustrative imagery. It contained passages of sustained eloquence which thrilled through and through his audience. In it there were passages of simple beauty to charm, and simple pathos to melt. In conclusion, he felicitously contrasted the death-bed scene of the eloquent Atheistic French Orator, Mirabeau, with the subduing tenderness, or rather the ecstatic ravishment of Wesley's closing hours. "Sprinkle me with perfumes," said Mirabeau; "crown me with flowers, and amidst sweet strains of music, let me sink into my eternal sleep." Heartless, profane, abandoned, Epicurean wretch! Sending his unshriven ghost, drunk with sensuous delights, into the dread presence of an insulted God! John Wesley, in age and feebleness extreme, brought to the swelling verge of Jordan, clasps his pale, thin, quivering hands, and with expiring energy breaks forth,

> "I'll praise my Maker while I've breath,
> And while my voice is lost in death—"

then ceasing, the sharpened sense of those who gazed upon that seraphic face, might seem to hear, falling down from the eternal calm of the New Jerusalem, the responsive chorus of angel voices, dying away in sweetest cadence,

> "My days of praise shall ne'er be past,
> While life, and thought, and being last,
> Or immortality endures."

The devotional exercises of the morning finished with the Hallelujah chorus. The young ladies are not easily excelled, should one look either at the sweetness of their beaming faces, or the becoming neatness of their holy-day attire, or the quiet dignity of their winning behavior. A critical ear may hear worse singing, too, even before the flashing footlights of a crowded play-house, than was heard on that day, under leadership of the accomplished professors.

Dinner.—

We tasted Thanksgiving Turkey with Dr. Lipscomb that day, eight of us, as jolly "a company of sundry folk," as those, who in the quaint old Chaucer's Tales, did "by aventure yfall in fellowship" at Tabard Inn, bound "to Canterbury with devout courage." When I tell you that Judge Robert Dougherty was there, you will at once be "filled with inextinguishable laughter," at the remembrance of his "merrie jestes." Noble in mein, is his Honor, with personal portliness consonant with the dignity of his office. His mind is well stored with reminiscences of men and things, and the fidelity of his memory is wonderful. His appreciation of the ludicrous side of human life is intense, and his power of delineation unrivalled. That day, though suffering from recent sickness, he set the table in a roar, and with his genial humor enlivened all the hours of the cheerful afternoon. He is a man of great tenderness of spirit, and his mirth is of that pleasant cast that fills us with a kindlier sympathy for erring humanity, while it stirs our laughter at its many foibles. He holds the scales of justice with a manly grasp, and aims ever to vindicate that hearty speech of the learned Hooker, in which he says of law, "that her seat is the bosom of God; her voice the harmony of the world."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The Alabama Conference:

This body assembled at Macon, Mississippi, November 24, and closed on Friday night, December 3d, having been in session ten days. Though an important session, involving the settlement of several important questions, it was a most peaceful and harmonious one. The blessing of God had been upon the labors of the preachers, and an increase in the membership of over six thousand was reported. The New Orleans Christian Advocate was adopted as the "Organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the bounds" of the Conference, and its prospects there are more encouraging than ever. The Missionary collection for the year amounted to the noble sum of over thirty-two thousand dollars. The Depository enterprise was inaugurated, Drs. Hamilton and Neely were appointed its Agents, and over sixteen thousand dollars in stock were subscribed at the Conference. Great enthusiasm prevails—the Agents commence work immediately, and the $100,000 will be raised, we donbt not, in a short time—some even speak of $200,000. Enough for the present.

BANCROFT'S PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON.

Courage was so natural in him, that it was hardly spoken of to his praise; no one ever, at any moment of his life, discovered in him the least shrinking in danger; and he had a hardihood of daring which escaped notice, because he was so envelmped by superior calmness and wisdom. He was as cheerful as he was spirited, frank and communicative in the society of friends, fond of the fox-chase and the dance, often sportive in his letters, and liked a hearty laugh. This joyousness of disposition remained to the last, though the vastness of his responsibilities was soon to take from him the right of displaying the impulsive qualities of his nature, and the weight which he was to bear up was to overbuy and repress his gayety and openness.

His hand was liberal, giving quietly and without observation, as though he was ashamed of nothing but being discovered in doing good. He was kindly and compassionate, and of lively sensibility to the sorrows of others; so that, if his country had only needed a victim for its relief, he would have willingly offered himself as a sacrifice. But while he was prodigal of himself, he was considerate for others; even parsimonious of the blood of his countrymen.

He was prudent in the management of his private affairs, purchased rich lands from the Mohawk valey to the flats of the Kannwha, and improved his fortune by the correctness of his judgement; but as a public man, he knew no other aim than the good of his country; and in the hour of his country's poverty, he refused personal emolument for his services.

His faculties were so well balanced and combined that his constitution, free from excess, was tempered evenly with all the elements of activity, and his mind resembled a well ordered commonwealth; his passions, which had the intensest vigor, owned allegiance to reason; and, with all the fiery quickness of his spirit, his impetuous and massive will was held in check by consummate judgment.

He had in his composition a calm which gave him in moments of highest excitement, the power of self-control, and enabled him to excel in patience even when he had most cause for disgust. Washington was offered a command when there was little to bring out the morganized resources of the Continent but its own influence, and authority was connected with the people by the most frail, most attenuated, scarcely discernible threads; yet, vehement as was his nature, impassionate as was his courage, he so restrained his ardor, that he never failed continuously to exert the attracting power of that influence, and never exerted it so sharply as to break its force.

In secrecy he was unsurpassed; but his secrecy had the character of prudent reserve, not of cunning or concealment.

His understanding was lucid, and his judgment accurate, so that his conduct never betrayed hurry or confusion. No detail was too minute for his personal inquiry and complete supervision; and at nhe same time he comprehended events in their widest aspects and relations. He never seemed above the object which engaged his attention, and he was always equal without an effort, to the solution of the highest questions, even when there existed no precedents to guide his decision.

In this way, he never drew to himself admiration for the possession of any one quality in excess, never made in council any one suggestion that was sublime but impracticable, never in action took to himself the praise or the blame of undertakings astonishing in conception, but beyond his means of execution. It was the most wonderful accomplishment of this man that, placed upon the largest theatre of events, at the head of the greatest revolution in human affairs, he never failed to observe all that was possible, and at the same time to bound his aspirations by that which was possible.

A slight tinge in his character, perceptible only to the close observer, revealed the region from which he sprung; and he might be described as the best specimen of manhood, as developed in the South; but his qualities were so faultlessly proportioned, that his whole country rather claimed him as its choicest representative, the most complete expression of all its attainments and aspirations. He studied his country, and conformed to it. His countrymen felt that he was the best type of America, and rejoiced in it, and were proud of it. They lived in his life, and made his success and his praise their own.

Profoundly impressed with confidence in God's Providence, and exemplary in his respect for the forms of public worship, no philosopher of the eighteenth century was more firm in the support of freedom of religious opinion; none more tolerant or more remote from bigotry; but belief in God, and trust in his overruling power formed the essence of his character. Divine wisdom not only illumines the spirit, it inspires the will.

Washington was a man of action, and not of theory and words; his creed appears in his life, not in his professions, which burst from him very rarely, and only at those great moments of crisis in the fortunes of his country when earth and heaven seemed actually to meet, and his emotions became too intense for suppression; but his whole being was one continued act of faith in the eternal, intelligent, moral order of the universe. Integrity was so completely the law of his nature, that a planet would sooner have shot from his sphere than he have departed from his uprightness, which was so constant that it often seemed to be almost impersonal.

They say of Giotto, that he introduced goodness into the art of painting; Washington carried it with him into the camp and the cabinet, and established a new criterion of human greatness. The purity of his will confirmed his fortitude, and, as he never faltered in his faith in virtue, he stood fast by that which he knew to be just, free from illusions, never dejected by the apprehension of the difficulties and perils that went before him, and drawing the promise of success from the justice of his cause. Hence he was persevering, leaving nothing unfinished; free from all taint of obstinacy in his firmness, seeking and receiving advice, but immovable in his decrotedness to right.

"Of a "retiring modesty and habitual reserve," his ambition was not more than the consciousness of his power, and was subordinate to his sense of duty; he took the foremost place, for he knew, from inborn magnanimity, that it belonged to him, and he dared not withhold the service required of him; so that, with all his humility, he was by necessity the first, though never for himself or for private ends. He loved fame, the approval of coming generations, the good opinion of his fellow men of his own time, and he desired to make his conduct coincide with their wishes; but not the fear of censure, nor the prospect of applause, could tempt him to swerve from rectitude; and the praise which he coveted was the sympathy of that moral sentiment which exists in every human breast, and goes forth duly to the welcome of virtue.

There have been soldiers who have achieved mightier victories in the field, and made conquests more nearly corresponding to the boundlessness of selfish ambition; statesmen who have been connected with more startling upheavals of society; but it is the greatness of Washington, that public trusts he used power solely for the public good; that he was the life, and moderator, and stay, of the most momentous revolution in human affairs, its moving impulse and its restraining power. Combining the centripetal and the centrifugal forces in their utmost strength and in perfect relations, with creative grandeur of instinct he held ruin in check, and renewed and perfected the institutions of his country. Finding the colonies disconnected and dependent, he left them such a united and well ordered commonwealth as no visionary had believed to be possible. So that it has been truly said, "he was as fortunate as great and good."

JAPAN AND THE JAPANESE.

Of the Bay and City of Nagasaki, one of the Times's correspondents says:

Nothing can exceed in picturesque beauty the bay of Nagasaki and the situation of the city at its extremity. Boats of quaint construction, with sharp pointed prows and broad sterns, above which flutter two black and white flags—the Imperial colors—glance across the harbor, propelled by stalwart naked figures, who skull to the tune of a measured chant. The fore part of the boat is covered by a roof, and contains a posse of two-sworded officials, who incontinently board each ship as it anchors, speak very fair Dutch, are extremely inquisitive, but very gentleman-like and good natured; and who, after official curiosity had been satisfied, proceed to make their reports, and return, in all probability, to circumnavigate the ship, as a guard boat during the rest of its stay in the harbor. A Dutch merchant ship and a Japanese man-of-war screw steamer were the only vessels in harbor when we arrived, and anchored about half a mile from the shore.

The city of Nagasaki covers a plain at the end of the harbor, but it has outgrown its area, and the houses cluster up the spurs of the hills that sink into it, and the streets are in places so steep as to render steps necessary. They are broad, clean, and free from foul odors; the people civil and courteous; and if the shops in the town do not afford many interesting objects of speculation, the bazaars, which are stocked with lacquer, china, &c., for the express benefit of foreigners, are so tempting that few can leave them without experiencing a considerable drain upon their resources.

Another correspondent says:

Nagasaki is one of the most beautiful places I have ever seen—the land high and precipitous, some of the hills rising to fifteen hundred feet, covered with fine trees and vegetation of all kinds, the most common trees being not unlike a magnificent Scotch fir. The outer harbor is formed partly by islands, partly by the main land, the islands rising perpendicularly out of the sea. From the outer there is no appearance of the inner harbor, till you are almost at the head of the former, when the inner one suddenly opens to the view round some wooded islets, the town of Nagasaki laying at the further end, built in a valley formed by two hills; up the side of which a few temples and houses have crept. Nagasaki is the port at which the Dutch have been settled for two hundred years, on a small island connected with the town by a small bridge; the island is only about four hundred yards long by three hundred broad, and, till within the last few years, the Dutch were kept rigorously to it, never being allowed in the town or country. They, as well as all foreigners, are now allowed to walk at pleasure about the town and into the country. Every where foreigners are received with the greatest civility by the people.

Of Simoda, the first quoted writer says:

Simoda is a lovely but dangerous harbor. Its apparently sheltered nooks and secluded coves woo you into their embraces, and when the south wind blows fiercely you are dashed to atoms upon their ribs of iron. The earthquake which wrecked the Russian frigate Diana changed the surface of the bottom, and there is now no good holding ground; but it is a fairy land to look upon, and, in calm weather, the picture of repose and security. Here too there is a goyoshi, or bazaar, and a better display of lacquer and China than at Nagaski, but it is a town of no local importance, containing three or four thousand inhabitants, and when, under the new treaty the port is shut up, will sink into its normal condition of a fishing village. At the head of the bay the American flag flaunts proudly; for two years it has waved in solitary magnificence over the exiles who during that period have represented American interests in this remote corner of the globe.

Describing Lord Elgin's visit to Jeddo, the writer gives the following account of the approach to the capital:

Simoda is about eighty miles from the city of Jeddo, situate at the extreme point of the promontory which forms one side of the capacious bay, or rather gulf, at the head of which the capital is placed. Up this bay the squadron proceeded with a fair wind on the morning of the 12th, and passing through the straits of Uraga, the left shore of which is feathered with rich verdure and indented with little bays, reached a point opposite the port of Kanagawa, beyond which no freight ships had ever ventured, and where the Russian squadron could then be discerned at anchor. Capt. Osborn, however, professing his readiness to explore the unknown waters at the head of the bay, and to approach as near the city as possible, Lord Elgin seemed determined not to lose an opportunity of establishing a precedent likely to be so important in our future intercourse with Japan; and, to the astonishment of both Russians and Japanese, the British ships deliberately passed the sacred limit without communicating with the shore, and a few minutes after were cautiously feeling their way round a long spit of land, which runs far out into the bay and offers some danger to the navigator. An instinct for deep water must have guided the ships along the channel, which was afterwards found to be sufficiently narrow and tortuous, but at last all doubts as to the feasibility of the enterprise were removed by the appearance of several large square-rigged Japanese vessels at anchor, the draught of water of which was a guarantee for our own. Behind those, rose gradually out of the waters of the bay, a line of insulated forts which marked the defences of Jeddo, while an extensive suburb, running along the western shore, formed a continuous street as far as the eye could reach. The ships ultimately anchored in three fathoms of water, about a mile and a half from this suburb, and the same distance from the fine Island-forts above mentioned, which are situated on a sand bank, the intervening channels being always covered with water. About a mile beyond these forts and parallel to them lay the main body of the city, the wooded height on which is situated the castle of the Tycoon, forming a conspicuous object.

Speaking of the landing of Lord Elgin at Jeddo, the writer proceeds to give the following account of the city and vicinity, the manners and customs of the people, etc.

The band struck up "God save the Queen" as Lord Elgin ascended the steps of the official landing place near the centre of the city, and was received and put into his chair by sundry two-sworded personages, the rest of the mission, together with some officers of the squadron, following on horseback. The crowd, which for upwards of a mile lined the streets leading to the building fixed on as the residence of the embassy, was dense in the extreme. The procession was preceded by policemen in harlequin costume, jingling iron rods of office, hung with heavy clanging rings, to warn the crowd away. Ropes were stretched across the cross streets, down which masses of the people rushed, attracted by the novel sight; while every few hundred yards were gates partitioning off the different wards, which were severally closed immediately on the passing of the procession, thus hopelessly barring the farther progress of the old crowd, who strained anxiously through the bars and envied the persons composing the rapidly forming ancleas.

During Lord Elgin's stay of eight days on shore, nearly all the officers of the squadron had an opportunity of paying him a visit. His residence was a portion of a temple situated upon the outskirts of what was known as the Princes' Quarter; in other words, it was the Knight's Bridge of Jeddo. In front of it was a street which continued for ten miles, as closely packed with houses and as densely crowded with people as it is from Hyde Park Corner to Mile End. At the back of it stretched a wide and somewhat dreary aristocratic quarter, containing the residences of 350 hereditary princes, each a petty sovereign in his own right, many of them with half a dozen town houses, and some of them able to accommodate in these same mansions 10,000 retainers. Passing through the spacious and silent (except where a party of English were traversing them) street, we arrive at the outer moat of the castle; crossing it we are still in the Princes' Quarter, but are astounded as we reach its farther limit at the scene which now bursts upon us—a magnificent moat, 70 or 80 yards broad, faced with a smooth green escarpment as many feet in height, above which runs a massive wall composed of stones, Cyclopian in their dimensions; this is crowned in its turn by a lofty palisade. Towering above all, the spreading arms of giant cedars proudly display themselves, and denote that within the Imperial precincts the picturesque is not forgotten. From the highest point of the fortifications, in rear of the castle, a panoramic view is obtained of the vast city, with its 2,500,000 inhabitants, and an area equal to, if not greater than, that of London. The castle alone is computed to be capable of containing 40,000 souls.

But the party on shore did not confine itself to exploring the city alone; excursions of ten miles into the country were made in two different directions, and but one opinion prevailed with respect to the extraordinary evidences of civilization which met the eye in every direction. Every cottage, temple, and tea-house was surrounded by gardens laid out with exquisite taste, and the most elaborate neatness was skilfully blended with grandeur of design. The natural features of the country were admirably taken advantage of, and a long ride was certain to be rewarded by a romantic scene, where a tea-house was picturesquely perched over a waterfall, or a temple reared its carved gables amid groves of ancient cedars. The tea-house is a national characteristic of Japan. The traveler, wearied with the noonday heat, need never be at a loss to find rest and refreshment. Stretched upon the softest and cleanest of matting, imbibing the most delicately flavored tea, inhaling through a short pipe the fragrant tobacco of Japan, he resigns himself to the ministrations of a bevy of fair damsels, who glide rapidly and noiselessly about—the most zealous and skillful of attendants.

In their personal cleanliness, the Japanese present a marked contrast to the Chinese; no deformed objects meet the eye in the crowded streets; cutaneous diseases seem almost unknown. In Nagasaki, towards evening, a large portion of the male and female population might be seen innocently "tubbing" at the corners of the streets. In Jeddo they frequent large bathing establishments, the door of which is open to the passer-by, and presents a curious spectacle. But it would not be possible to condense within the limits of a letter the experiences and observations of a residence in the capital of an empire about which the information at home is so very scanty, and which presents probably a greater variety of interesting and curious matter to the stranger than any other part of the world. Suffice it to be recorded as our general impression that, in its climate, its fertility, and its picturesque beauty, Japan is not equalled by any country on the face of the globe; while, as if to harmonize with its surpassing natural endowments, it is peopled by a race whose qualities are of the most amiable and winning description, and whose material prosperity has been so equalized as to insure happiness and contentment to all classes. We never saw two Japanese quarrel, and beggars have yet to be introduced with other luxuries of western civilization. It is not to be wondered at that a people rendered independent by the resources of their country, and the frugality and absence of luxury which so strikingly characterize them, should not have experienced any great desire to establish an intercourse with other nations, which, in all probability, would carry in its train greater evils than could be compensated by its incidental advantages. Their exclusiveness has arisen, not, as in China, from an assumption of superiority over the rest of the world, but from a conviction that the well-being and happiness of the community would not be increased by the introduction of foreign tastes and luxuries; and that every propensity to imitate and adopt the appliances of civilization, so foreign to the Chinaman, is so strongly developed in Japan that their rulers foresee that the changes now being effected will, in all probability, some day or other revolutionize the country—an apprehension which need cause the Emperor but little alarm. No one can doubt who has visited the two countries that the Chinaman will still be navigating the canals of his country in the crazy old junks of his ancestors, when the Japanese is skimming along his rivers in high-pressure steamers, or flying across the country behind a locomotive. We have yet to discover what the exports of Japan may be, beyond camphor, wax, and copper; but, from a consideration of the natural readiness and "go-ahead" disposition of the people, there can be no little doubt that a market at some future day exist in these islands for the produce and manufactures of the West of sufficient magnitude and importance to secure for them a high place in the list of Great Britain's customers.

Another correspondent writes as follows:

Nagasaki and everything Japanese bears a striking contrast to everything Chinese. You cannot be five minutes in Japan without seeing it is a progressive country: the country towns, houses, and people all show this. The streets are wide and paved in the centre; houses open throughout on the ground floor, with matting, formed in frames, fitting neatly all over the room. On this they sit, sleep and eat, and everything is kept scrupulously clean. Behind each house is a small garden, with a few green shrubs and occasionally a fine tree. Cleanliness seems one great characteristic of the Japanese; they are constantly washing in the most open manner.

The Japanese are eager for knowledge. Never was there a people more ready to adapt themselves to the changes and progress of the world than they are. It is curious that, while some of their customs are what we would deem rather barbarous, and while they are ignorant of many common things, while they still rip themselves up and shoe their horses with straw, because ignorant of any other method, they have jumped to a knowledge of certain branches of science which it has taken nations in Europe hundreds of years to attain. At Nagasaki they can turn out of their yard an engine for a railway or a steamer. Japanese captains and engineers command their men-of-war, of which three are steamers. They understand the electric telegraph; they make thermometers and barometers, theodolites, and, I believe, aneroids. Their spyglasses and microscopes are good, and very cheap. They have a large glass manufactory, which turns out glass little inferior to our own. They have a short line of railway somewhere in the interior, given by the Americans. Many of them speak Dutch some English, all anxious to learn. Everything is done by themselves, and when it is considered that it is not much more than ten years ago since they made this start, the advance they have made in that short time is perfectly wonderful.

Jeddo, without exception, is one of the finest cities in the world; streets broad and good, and the castle, which includes nearly the whole centre of the town, built on a slight eminence. There are three walls or enclosures round this quarter. Within the inner the Tycoon Emperor and heir apparent live. The houses of the princes and nobles are palaces, and you may imagine the size when some contain ten thousand followers. They are built in regular order, forming wide streets some forty yards broad, kept in perfect order; an immense court yard, with trees and gardens, forms the centre of each enclosure, in the midst of which is the house of the owner; the houses containing the followers, servants, stables, &c., form this large enclosure. They are built of one uniform shape. The gateways leading to the court yard are exceedingly handsome, of massive wood work, ornamented with lacquer and other devices. From the road that leads by the moat to the second wall is one of the finest views I ever recollect seeing—on one side is the Gulf of Jeddo, with the high hills rising beyond, while on the other is a portion of the great city of Jeddo, with its trees and gardens, picturesque temples, and densely crowded streets, extending as far as the eye can reach towards the Interior; then there is a view of the trees and green fields in the distance, far away beyond a thickly built suborb; the most striking view of all is that close by—the well kept green banks of the second defence, rising some seventy feet from the broad moat below, with grand old cedars over a hundred years of age growing from its sides. The fine timber, the lay of the ground, the water lilies in the moat, the grandeur, good order, and completeness of every thing equal, and in some ways far surpass, any thing I have ever seen in Europe or any part of the world. We made an expedition into the country. The cottages were surrounded with neatly clipped hedges; the private residences as well railed and kept as any place in England. The same completeness and finish exist in every thing. The Botanical gardens are very good, and well cared for; good nurseries of young pines, cedars, &c.

The following passage is all we had in relation to the governmental system of Japan, and with this we close our extracts from this very interesting correspondence:

There are two Emperors of Japan, one the spiritual, the other the working one. The former lives at Misco and is the descendant of the old race who were turned off the throne by the ancestors of the reigning Emperor; The spiritual Emperor has nothing to do with governing the country, and is partly looked up to as a heavenly being; one condition of which is, that everything he wears or uses is destroyed each night, and new clothes supplied the next morning. It is to prevent any one using the sanctified garments. The reigning Emperor lives here, and is elected, but in what manner I am not sure, but I believe by the princes. It appears a mere nominal election, for the son regularly succeeds the father, and has done so since his ancestor usurped the throne. I believe the descent of the spiritual Emperorean be traced—names and dates, with inmay of the branches of his family—for twenty-five hundred years. The country is held by Princes, who owe feudal duty to the Emperor, who obliges them to reside for six months in the year at Jeddo, with their families; during the other six months he allows them to visit their estates, but keeps their families hostages in Jeddo. This restrains them, and the practice is intended to prevent the princes from obtaining too much influence over the people. It is difficult to discover what the military system of the Empire is, but that it must have the power of bringing an immense number of men to the field is beyond doubt—they have numerous and well-appointed batteries.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Portsmouth, Virginia, Nov. 29, 1858.

Mr. Editor: The Virginia Conference, after a most patient, lengthy and careful examination of the subject, adopted the report of their Committee on the subject organizing a Book and Tract Depository, to be located at Richmond, with a cap

NEWS FROM THE INTERIOR.

District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6th.—The Thirty-Fifth Congress commenced its second session to day. The Senate met at ten and received the President's message at ten minutes to two o'clock this afternoon. The following is a synopsis:

The President in his message to Congress, referring to the Tariff question, says, that when Congress met in December last, the business of the country had been crushed by one of those periodical revulsions, caused by an unsound and extravagant bank credit system which inflated the currency of the country, and manufacturers and all public and private enterprises were suddenly arrested, and thousands of mechanics and laborers were deprived of employment in consequence.

The commercial, manufacturing and mechanical classes, says, suffered severely, not because of the reduction of duties, but because there is no demand for their products at any price.

Articles of prime necessity are only wanted. Iron manufacture suffered more than any other; railroad enterprise being brought to a bad stand, as a matter of course, the iron manufacturing interest suffered also from that cause.

The President says that no government, and especially one of limited powers, could have prevented the disastrous revulsion of last year.

The same result, he says, would have ensued had duties been higher. The Tariff of 1857 had no agency in the recent financial disturbances which existed throughout the country and throughout the world. They could not be controlled by legislation to any particular country.

The effects of the late revulsion, he says, are now slowly, but surely passing away, and the energy and enterprise of our citizens, together with the unbounded resources at their command, will doubtless within another year, restore the country to a state of wholesome industry.

Trade and capital has again accumulated to our large cities, interest is low, confidence is generally restored or reviving, and as soon as capital can be profitably employed to commercial and manufacturing enterprises, and the construction of railroads, and other works of public and private improvements, prosperity will again smile throughout the land.

To tariff short of absolute prohibition can prevent the evils of the inflation of our currency beyond that of other countries, whose manufactures come in competition with ours.

From these causes, our imports have been abridged, and therefore has proved inadequate to meet the constantly increasing expenses of our Government.

The act of the 23d of December, 1857, authorized the issue of Treasury notes to the amount of twenty millions of dollars. This proved inadequate to meet the estimated expenditures, and the act of the 14th of June, 1858, authorized a Governmental loan of twenty million in addition.

No statesman would approve this increasing national debt to liquidate the ordinary expenses of Government. It would be a ruinous policy to pursue. It would be unwise to continue to borrow, and besides incidental protection by a revenue tariff would, to some extent, give an impetus to our industrial interests.

No one, he says, will object to such a result. Sound policy requires specific duties wherever practicable.

Upon such articles as iron, raw sugar, and foreign wines and spirits, a specific duty is the best, it not the only means of securing the revenue against frauds, and giving our manufacturers the incidental advantage of a revenue tariff.

The present system of the sliding scale operates disadvantageously to our manufacturer.

The President says, that he has no objection to offer, but granting a fair compensation to the Government of Nicaragua for a transit through their territory, but that the route should not be closed by any arbitrary decree of that Government.

He recommends Congress to authorize the employment of force, to prevent its obstruction by lawless violence, and says that a similar necessity exists for the protection of the Panama and Tehuantepec routes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—One hundred and eighty-six members answered to their names.

In the House, Mr. Craw, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill to amend the Court of Claims act, to prevent creditors from suing in the District Courts, or United States Courts of Iowa, for the construction of the Central Pacific Railroad.

Mr. L. Dewart, of Pennsylvania, asked leave to introduce a resolution instructing the Committee on Ways and Means, to report a bill increasing the duty on coal and iron; and in compliance with the request of several members of the House, he would add, lead, sugar and such other articles as needed protection.

A suspension of the rules was moved and negatived by two hundred to 87 nays—a two-thirds vote being necessary to carry it.

In the House, the President's message was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The House then adjourned.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE.—In the Senate, Senator Cooper, of Pa., moved that twenty thousand copies of the President's message be printed.

Mr. Hale, of N. B., objected to the motion, because the President had, according to his opinion, abused his constitutional prerogatives and interloped a false history of the various difficulties. Mr. Hale's comments upon the message and otherwise were characteristically sarcastic.

THE SUGAR CROP OF IBERVILLE PARISH.—The Plaquemine Gazette, of the 4th inst., says:—The sugar making season is drawing to a close. Many planters have finished grinding; others are about finishing. From the information we possess, we do not hesitate in saying that the crop of this parish will be a large one, and that the quality will be of a very superior quality. The frost has not damaged the cane as much as expected. We presume this is owing to the cold weather which has continued since the frost up to this time.

Texas.

GALVESTON, Dec. 6.—Movements of the Nicaragua Emigrants. It appears that the apparent abandonment of the Nicaraguan expedition, on account of the refusal of the Government to grant a clearance to the Alice Painter for Greytown, was only intended as a blind to deceive Judge Campbell and the Grand Jury. It has been ascertained that one hundred and fifty or two hundred men have been encamped about one mile from the city for several days instead of having returned home as reported. They are only awaiting the termination of the examination of the Grand Jury of the Supreme Court before attempting an illegal expedition. Their concealment has been kept a profound secret to the public. They left their camp at about 11 o'clock on Saturday night, and united, one after another got on board the vessel and dropped down the Bay.....Several persons well known being connected with the Nicaraguan movement are missing this morning, and it is reported that a number of sleighs were observed last night going down the Bay from the city at a late hour.....It is believed General Walker has been concealed near the city, directing these movements, and has probably joined the vessel at some point and gone down the Bay.

GEN. BEALE'S WAGON ROAD PARTY.—The Fort Smith Herald of the 24th ult., says: Mr. Edwards, one of the party, arrived here on yesterday evening, just as our paper was going to press, direct from Lieut. Beale's camp, on the south side of the Canadian, about 215 miles. He reports all the company well, and the road to be excellent, as it is a natural road unsurpassed. The country he reports to be beautiful and rich. Lieut. Beale intends to move on as soon as the escort overtakes him, which is expected in three or four days behind. The camp is beyond Colonel Leavenworth's old trading-house. The mail from Neosho, via Albuquerque, under the charge of the contractor, Mr. Green, is at Mr. Beale's camp. He was prevailed upon by Lieut. B. to remain with them until they get into the Cauuache country. It is the intention of Lieut. Beale, to go through to Albuquerque this winter. Edwards is on his way to New York, on business connected with the road, and expects to join the expedition at Albuquerque, some time during the winter.

Texas.

The Brownsville Reg of the 23d ult., says that the prominent men in the Juarez or liberal party of Mexico—or at least those of them on this frontier—are in favor of a treaty of extradition which will embrace not only the ordinary refuges for criminal offences, but slaves also. They have learned from experience that this latter class is no acquisition to the progress of the country. They desire the friendship and intercourse of their immediate neighbors, which can never be effectually secured while they afford an asylum for the property of those neighbors. As it is said the Constitutional Government, or that of President Juarez, is the one to be recognized in future at Washington, would it not be well to negotiate on this subject? We call the especial attention of our representatives in Congress to the matter as one of paramount importance to Texas.

PHILADELPHIA.—Death of Bishop Onderdonk.—H. W. Onderdonk, formerly Bishop of this Diocese, died on the 6th inst., of dysentery.

UNITED STATES AND THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

In the Sandwich Islands, an interesting question has come up. The Hawaiian Government has taken possession of Coruwallis Island, and it is claimed that the act is a trespass on American territory. The story is told as follows, by the Honolulu Commercial Advertiser, of Sept. 30. Some time in February last, the American schooner Palestine left this port and sailed for a guano island to the southwest of this group, which she reached in March, took possession of the principal island, which they called Johnson Island, erected a staff with the name of the President of the United States on it, returning to San Francisco with a quantity of guano. Early in June, the Hawaiian schooner Kalama sailed in search of what subsequently proved to be the same islands, and they were taken possession of in the name of the Hawaiian Government. In July, the schooner Palestine was again sent from San Francisco to the same islands she had before visited, and found the marks which had been left on her first voyage destroyed or mutilated, and the Hawaiian flag flying, and by observations, found the latitude and longitude the same as those claimed by the Hawaiian Government.

The agents of the Palestine, in San Francisco, hearing that the cook employed on the schooner Kalama during her voyage thither, was in that city, took his testimony of the affair. His affidavit, sent to the United States Commissioner, states that the island was visited by the Kalama, that the American flag was torn down, and also the cross with the name of the President of the United States, and the Hawaiian flag raised. Mr. S. C. Allen and Capt. Hooper both deny that any marks were found on the islands, indicating that they had been previously visited. The whole transaction has been laid before this Government by the United States Commissioner.

As the affair now stands, it places this Government in the rather awkward position of trespassing on American territory.

PATIENCE VS. COURAGE.

Courage is an occasional act or effort of the soul; patience, a continuous habit. Courage is the mission of some; patience, the duty of all. Courage courts observation, and sustains itself by every possible outward prop and stimulus; patience is lonely and quiet—its warfare is within, its victory without sound of trumpet, for the eye of God and the award of heaven. Courage may give its strength to evil, and may nerve the arm of the thief or the man-slayer; patience dwells only in the bosom of piety, and always beholds the face of her father in heaven. And again, patience derives nourishment from the hope of heaven—not from the mere belief of immortality, but from the personal appropriation and consciousness of it. What makes courage a much easier virtue than patience, is, that it is called into exercise for a crisis which will soon be passed, and beyond which hope easily extends; while patience belongs to those protracted trials which offer no immediate or definite hope of their termination.

SECRET OF BEAUTY.

The editor of Life Illustrated, in commenting on Bayard Taylor's description of the unusual beauty of Polish women, discloses the secret of their good looks as follows:

"It is perfectly natural to all women to be beautiful. If they are not so the fault lies in their birth or training, or in both. An organism which is perfectly healthy in all its parts will be harmoniously developed, and, whether male or female, it will be perfectly beautiful. Hence there can be no true beauty without health, and there can be no permanent health in the future man or woman unless the child is properly cared for. We would therefore respectfully remind American mothers that, in Poland, a period of childhood is recognized. There, girls do not jump from infancy to young ladyhood. They are not sent from the cradle directly to the parlor, to dress, sit still, and look pretty. No, they are treated as children should be. During childhood, which extends through a period of several years, they are plainly and loosely dressed, and allowed to run, romp, and play in the open air. They take in sunshine as does the flower. They are not loaded down, girded about, and oppressed every way with countless frills and superabundant flounces, so as to be admired for their much clothing. Nor are they rendered delicate and dyspeptic by continual stuffing with candies and sweet cakes, as are the majority of American children. Plain, simple food, free and various exercise, and abundant of sunshine during the whole period of childhood, are the secrets of beauty in after life."

FLIES.—A German naturalist has described six hundred species of flies, which he has collected within a district of ten miles. Thirty thousand different kinds of insects which prey upon wheat have been collected. This suggests the multitudinous infinitude of the total tribe.

We would respectfully call the attention of our readers to a series of Lectures, for the benefit of the Public Library of the First District of this city, to be delivered at the Lyceum Hall, for further information see advertisement.

LOCAL.

OUR GROWTH.—The returns of the assessment for the ensuing year in Jefferson City show an increase in the value of property, for the last twelve months, that affords a striking evidence of the growth of Orleans. Jefferson City, with the exception of the stock business concentrated on its lower limit, has no local industry that would increase its population or add to the value of its real estate. It is improved by the population of New Orleans seeking homes in that pleasant, rural town. Its property rises or falls with the prosperity or the stagnation of business in this great centre of trade. That suburban city is, therefore, an index of the growth or decline of New Orleans.

During the past year an addition has been made to the value of the property of Jefferson City, according to the assessment rolls just completed, far beyond that of any previous twelve months, while the slave property owned in the town has increased $36,000. The pressure of our swelling population outward has effected this desirable result, which is a striking proof of the prosperity that marks our city. The increased activity at the centre of population is felt in the far outskirts, and a stimulus is given to enterprise rarely witnessed.

The people of Jefferson begin to feel assured of the future, and they are taking the steps to provide for the wants of a population that must inevitably grow with great rapidity, converting unoccupied lots into the abodes of refinement and taste, repeating in that town the history of the Fourth District. A public square has been purchased; a council and a market house are to be erected, and other improvements are projected, which betoken an unusual energy on the part of the public authorities.

These improvements are evidences of the constant growth of New Orleans. To strangers they furnish some idea of our progress under the stimulus of the natural increase of business and the opening of new routes for commerce.

It is worthy of remark, that in the whole West, and, indeed, through out the Middle and Eastern States, the effects of the commercial reaction of 1856 and '57 are still felt. Business has not regained its former activity. The prices of crops are depressed, although in many States the harvest has not been abundant. Distrust of the credit of merchants and traders, and of the projected public improvements, to some degree, paralyzes trade, and with the notes of thanksgiving for the blessings enjoyed, are blended the voices of complaint.

Here, on the contrary, as it were, as sudden as the shifting of the scenes of a kaleidoscope, an unusual briskness of trade, and an unexampled confidence in the future, has succeeded a temporary but not disastrous stagnation of business.

The imports into New Orleans for the last quarter have largely exceeded those of any previous three months. The arrivals of produce and of the staples of our trade, figure up a handsome surplus, over what has been received in the opening months of the fall and winter of other seasons; and a new cycle of prosperity has evidently been entered.

Real estate in the suburbs is sure soon to feel the influence of increased confidence and hope in the future of this city. For months it has been in more than usual demand, not for purposes of speculation, but for permanent investment, and for solid improvement. Many, who were migratory in their habits, and seemed desirous only of acquiring the means of handsome independence in some other section of the Union, now show a determination to make their permanent homes in New Orleans. The conflict of opinion on the subject of slavery has had some effect in producing such a decision, while the opening of the Tehuantepec Isthmian route, and the general prosperity of Southern enterprises, have also operated in our favor.

The foundations of the prosperity of New Orleans are but just laid. Its growth is destined to be more rapid as its advantages are better understood. It will rise into an important city of the first class, and the time is not far distant when the villas of its merchants and business men will be found scattered over the beautiful territory between the Carrollton Railroad and Magazine street, above the upper line of Jefferson City, on towards Carrollton. New Orleans Picayune.

COMMERCIAL.

TUESDAY EVENING, December 7, 1858.

THE following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	7 @ 8	Good Middling	11¾@12
Ordinary	8¼@ 9¾	Middling Fair	12¼@12½
Good Ordinary	10¼@10¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10¾@11¼	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	11¼@11¾	Good and Fine	—@—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 27th ult., furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business: The past week has been a period of quite a fair degree of activity in several of our leading staples, and it will be seen that Cotton has been taken to quite a fair extent, and at improved prices. Sugar and Molasses have also been in good request, though with increased receipts prices have yielded slightly for the latter article. The Tobacco market remains quiet; business in Western Produce continues limited. The sales of the first three days of the week sum up 26,500 bales. On Wednesday the demand was renewed, with a less ample supply, and the sales reached 14,000 bales, with more full prices. These rather large operations left the market with a still further reduced supply and less favorable assortment on Thursday, and more full prices claimed and to some extent obtained, the market was less animated, about 7,500 bales being sold, the next day, under similar circumstances, about 8,000 bales were sold. Sales of the week, 56,000 bales. Good Ordinary to strict Middling has advanced, upon last week's late quotations. We notice nothing new in the Money market.....Total receipts of Cotton for the week, are 61,298 bales.

COTTON.—A good demand prevailed on Saturday, and the sales amounted to 11,000 bales; and on Monday again, 11,000 bales were taken.

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to about 11,000 hhds., we quote for inferior and refining, 3½@4¼; common to good common, 4¼@5¾; fair to fully fair, 5¼@6; prime to choice, 6¼@7; centrifugal and clarified, 6¾@8¾ ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—The sales of the week are about 15,000 bbls; the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 24@27, prime to choice, 27½@28½; hf bbls. 31½@32¢ ₱ gallon.

FLOUR.—Rather inactive, the sales not reaching 9000 bbls.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn are light and the demand moderate—67@68 and 70¢ ₱ bushel, for inferior mixed yellow to good white. Oats have been in good request, at 57@58 and 70¢ ₱ bushel, for ordinary and new to prime old. Wheat still arrives slowly, we quote red $1 00 white $1 25 ₱ bushel.

PORK.—The transactions in Mess are principally on private terms, we quote $18 ₱ bbl.

BEEF.—Prime Mess and favorite brands are selling at $14@$16.

BACON.—Sales at for shoulders 7¼@7½, ribbed sides, 9¼@9¾, clear sides 10¢, and hams from 9¾@11¢ ₱ lb, according to quality.

LARD.—We quote at 10¾@11¢ ₱ lb.

BUTTER.—Soft, 20@22¢ ₱ lb.

COFFEE.—We quote 11¾@11¢ for fair to good fair, 11½@11¾ for prime.

LIVE STOCK.—The supply is ample, and the market easy. We quote Beef—Western, @8¾, Common 3@7; Texas, $22@40, inferior to ordinary $10@12; calves and yearlings $3@0; Hogs $8@8¼; Sheep $2@3 75. Cows $40@75.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MEMBERS OF THE CONFERENCE, by calling at BRYAN & BRINK'S, will receive information as to their several places of entertainment. Those who come on the West Feliciana Railroad will be met at the Depot. I understand that members of the Conference will be conveyed from Quinn's Station to Woodville, for five and a half dollars, provided there are ten or fifteen applicants. Those coming on the cars, from Bayou Sara, will not be charged either coming or returning. Brethren will please state in the Conductor that they are Ministers. If you come to Conference here, which we all desire, take a Pickabug packet, and not a Bayou Sara packet, as the latter almost always arrive after the departure of the cars; the former, never. The cars leave Bayou Sara at 2½ P. M., and arrive here, at 5 P. M.

To the Share-holders of the Book and Tract Society of the Mississippi Conference:

YOU WILL PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, That the ANNUAL MEETING of the Society will be during the session of the Mississippi Conference, which meets December 8, 1858.

As business of importance to all the Share-holders will be transacted, you are requested to be present in person or by proxy.

As there seems to be a tub-smiter-building in reference to monies, we hope all interested will be in attendance; and that all who have applied for books for their sunamites, which we have not, will be easy till the Society decides. Our Society is a Joint stock Association, and each is interested in the regulations of the Society, and success of the business of the same. Each Share holder should feel it to be his duty to build up the Depository.

UNION PRAYER MEETING HYMNS.—A NEW edition of this popular little Hymn Book, is now ready for Sale. This book was prepared last Spring, under the advice of several clergymen of different denominations, to meet the wants felt in the prayer meetings in LITNER'S HALL. It soon found its way into the daily prayer meetings in the principal cities of the United States, thence into the towns and villages. One hundred and fourteen hymns have been added to those compiled in the first edition, thus making a collection, which, while it is so small as to be carried in the vest pocket, contains all the hymns in use, among most worshipping assemblies. These hymns are all purely devotional. Christians may here find the good old hymns which they have loved from their childhood, side by side with those of more recent date. Among them will be found hymns suitable for the daily prayer meeting, the family altar, and the private devotions of the Christian. Published and for sale, in different styles of binding, by THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION,

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.—Author of "Sweet Home."

Our little readers have often heard the song, "Sweet Home." Here are some of the lines.

'Mid pleasure and palaces, though we may roam,
Still, be it ever so humble, there is no place like home,
A charm from the skies seem to hallow it there,
Which, go through the world, you'll not meet elsewhere.
Home, Home,
Sweet Home!
There's no place like home—
There's no place like home.
As exile from home pleasure dazzles in vain,
Ah! give me my lowly thatched cottage again;
The birds singing sweetly that came at my call,
Give me them, and that peace of mind, dearer than all.

O, how beautiful! They are a thousand times more beautiful when well sung. Get some of your friends to sing them for you. We want to tell you something about the man who wrote them.

John Howard Payne was a native of New York. Was born on the 9th June, 1792. His father, shortly after left there, to take charge of a school at Boston. The son displayed unusual precocious abilities. In 1805, he returned to New York, and entered a counting-room. But his pen was employed not only in commercial writing, but also in editing the "Thespian Mirror." The talent it displayed made friends for the youth; one of whom, Mr J. B. Seaman, offered to pay for finishing his education at Union College. Payne at once accepted, and went to Albany, accompanied by his friend, the celebrated Charles Brockden Brown, the American novelist.

Payne, Sr. became a bankrupt, and his son determined to support himself. He unfortunately adopted the profession of an actor, and went on the stage. He appeared on the stage till the winter of 1813, when he went to England. He spent the years that elapsed until 1832, there and in France, and then returned to the United States, where he issued a prospectus for a literary periodical, but it never was published. He was twice afterwards appointed United States Consul at Tunis, and died there in 1852.

Payne wrote many pieces for the stage when he was in England, and experienced all the ups and downs and bitter pangs of poverty and ill-regulated talent, which so many literary men have suffered. The operatic play, "Clari, or the Maid of Milan," was produced at Covent Garden theatre, under Charles Kemble's management. The song of "Home, Sweet Home," occurred in it and made the success of the piece, and the fortune of every one who had any thing to do with it—Payne excepted. In two years after it was issued, its publisher had made nearly if not quite $10,000 by it. Miss M. Tree, who first sang "Home, Sweet Home," gained a wealthy husband by it, while the author lost $125 that was to have been paid him for the copyright.

He had the consolation, however of knowing that the heart of the world thrilled responsive to his touch in this thrilling song, which finds an echo in the bosom of poor and rich, young and old; the healthy man in the pride of or robust enjoyment; the sick man on his pallet; the prisoner in his gloomy cell; the most wretched human being in his hour of veriest torture and despair. Money cannot compensate for an hour like this, and the sweet emotions and tender tears that Payne's simple ballad gives rise to, will embalm his name forever in our hearts and in those of our children's children.

A PRETTY STORY.

This story we find in the Pittsburgh Advocate: My mother died when I was a little boy. I well remember the night when the angels came and took her to heaven. She was a good woman, and left the world willing and cheerfully. A short time before she died she sent for her children, and before bidding us farewell, she gave us some excellent advice. Among other good things which she said, these words have always remained fixed in my memory: "Try to be useful to somebody every day.—It will make you happier, and what is better, God will love you for it."

I have repeated my dear mother's last words to a great many boys and girls, and I don't believe I ever knew one of these young people who did not express a wish to be useful, though almost all of them said they didn't know how. Blessings on the dear children! [Many of them do know how to be useful and to make others happy. They have kind hearts, and they make the little world in which they move, happier and better by their kind words and kind acts, while they are too innocent, too modest, too unselfish to perceive that they are doing any good. Their good deeds come from their hearts, as pure water gushes from the fountain. Still I have no doubt, there are many, and perhaps some of my readers, who really would like to be useful, but are puzzled to know where to begin. Now I have a great mind to tell a story or two which I have in my mind, just to give you some hints as to the different ways in which you can do a great deal of good.

I know a girl in one of the Sunday schools in Philadelphia, who is scarcely ten years old. She is a good girl, and her teacher loves her very much. Her name is Sarah. Well, this little girl wanted to be useful. She had no notion of living just for herself alone. So she determined to get new scholars to come to Sunday school. She set herself about the business in earnest. Not content with speaking to those whom she knew, she picked up ragged boys and girls in the street, and persuaded them to attend the Sunday school, and walked with them to the school room. She was very successful in her work of love. Her teacher told her that in less then three months she has brought into the Sunday school thirty-two new scholars. Think of that. Remember that a good number of these children were ignorant and wicked, when Sarah found them, and now they are learning how to live and how to die.

Another little girl, who lives in one of the pleasantest little villages imaginable—I am almost afraid to say where, for fear I shall bring her to notice and make her blush—who made herself very useful in quite a different way from the one which Sarah chose. She was one day reading about a minister who was working away, with all his might, trying to do good among the Indians in our Western country. The good man, however, was very poor, so poor that he could not buy books for himself and family. "This minister must have a library," said the little girl. "I'm going to see what can be done to get him some books."

And she set about the business at once. That is just the way always, when people really want to be useful. As soon as they find out how to do a good thing, they go right off and do it. The first step this girl took was to ask her mother for a gold dollar which had been given to her as a New Year's present. The dollar was placed in her hand. Then she went to see her young playmates, and got something—not very much, for children are not generally rich—from them all. With the money collected in this manner, her father bought thirty or forty choice books, and he and some of his friends contributed money enough, to make the number in all over a hundred volumes.

I must tell you one more story, in which I think you will find another good hint. It is about my young friend Arthur. Arthur is brim-full of fun and frolic. He is one of the best natured fellows that ever you saw. I scarcely ever knew him to be in a bad humor. It is very rarely that one sees him when his face is not lighted up with smiles. But this is not the best part of the boy's character. He loves to be useful—to be useful, if possible, to every body. One day last Summer, he went to the funeral of a man who had been a laborer in his father's family. On his way home he heard two men talking about the widow and children whom this man had left behind him.

"Poor woman," one of these persons said, "what will become of her and her large family?"

Arthur questioned his mother about the widow when he got home, and learned that the poor woman was left without a dollar in the world.

"Mother," said the kind hearted boy, "why not get her a sewing machine?"

"That would no doubt be a very good thing, but it is not quite so easy to do it I'm afraid."

"Could she support herself and her children," Arthur asked, "if she had a machine?"

His mother thought so.

"Then," said Arthur, clapping his hands together, "Mrs. Simpson must have a sewing machine."

And she did have it.

Arthur got his father to write a subscription paper, and in less than three weeks, without any assistance, raised money enough to buy one of Grover & Baker's best sewing machines.

The last time I saw Arthur, he was in high glee.

"I dropped in to see Mrs. Simpson the other day," said he, "and I saw her make over a thousand stitches in a single minute, with her new sewing machine."

"BLUE SKY SOMEWHERE."

Children are eloquent teachers. Many a lesson, which has done our heart good, have we learned from their lips. It was but the other day another took root in memory. We were going to a pic-nic, and of course, the little ones had been in ecstacies for several days. But the appointed morning broke with no glad sunshine, no songs of birds, no peals of mirth. There was every prospect of rain—even Hope hid her face and wept.

"Shan't we go, mother?" exclaimed a child of five, with passionate emphasis.

"If it clears off."

"But when will it clear off?"

"Oh, look out for the blue sky!

And so he did, poor little fellow, but never a bit of blue sky gladdened his eyes.

EDUCATION.

Thewald thought it very unfair to influence a child's mind by inculcating their opinions before it should have come to years of discretion and be able to choose for itself. I showed him my garden, and told him it was my botanic garden.

"How so," says he, "it is covered with weeds,"

"O," I replied, that is because it has not come to its age of discretion and choice. The weeds you see, hath taken the liberty to grow, and I thought it unfair in me to prejudice the soil towards roses and strawberries."—Coleridge,

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Liebig.—

The following account of the eminent chemist, Liebig, is from a European correspondent of Moore's Rural New Yorker: "On the last day which I passed in Munich, I went to hear the world-renowned chemist, Liebig, lecture. His laboratory and lecture room are in the same house in which he resides. When he entered the lecture-room the students all rose to receive him, and he acknowledged their attention with a polite bow. He wore a black dress coat and white pantaloons. Liebig is a fine, intellectual-looking man, tall though not broad; has iron-gray hair, which has fallen off from his brond and projecting forehead; he wears no beard. He lectures in a very conversational manner, part of the time sitting; makes many gestures, and good ones too. His face is expressive. He is, indeed, a good deal of an orator, and perhaps the best popular lecturer in Germany. Liebig was fifty-six years old on the 12th of May, 1857. He was born in Darmstadt, and at the age of twenty-one was made professor at Giessen. In 1852 he came to Munich. Between the years 1832 and 1856 he published one hundred and seventy-seven papers, many of which were very elaborate. He is said to be proud and overbearing; he is, however, on the side of progress, and heads the reform party in the University."

Madame Ida Pfeiffer.

At the age of sixty-one, Ida Pfeiffer, the well known traveler, departed on that journey from whence none returns in this world. In middle life, on the death of her husband and the settlement of her children, she commenced her series of tours. First, to the Holy Land—whence a book. Then, through Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Ireland—thence another book. And so on for over twenty years' travel and book-making. She veriously visited Brazil and Chili; Otaheite, China, Japan, and Ceylon; Southern Africa, Borneo, Sumatra, and California, Oregon, Peru, Panama, Aspinwall, and thence through the United States and Canada; lastly to Madagascar and the Mauritius and home, where she died on the 27th October, from the effects of a violent fever which she had in Madagascar.

—Madame Pfeiffer was a small, very plain, active old lady when we saw her four years ago at New York. In her last book of travels she contrives to attack, in some way or other, every person who did not render her substantial aid on her travels. If ever a woman merited the appellation of Queen of the Dead heeds, it was Madame Pfeiffer. She expected to travel free of expense, and if she carried a letter of introduction to any one, without being immediately invited to make his house her home and his purse her bank, she was pretty sure to chronicle his want of hospitality in her next book. She wrote exceedingly well, observed closely, had great recollection, and—though she tells some very wonderful stories—did not draw the long bow much more than travelers often do. As she was two-thirds of her time on the wing, traveling at any and everybody's cost but her own, and her various books always sold largely, Madame Ida Pfeiffer must have realized considerable amount of money. She was more than forty years old before she took up her pilgrim's staff. During the following twenty-one years she was the incarnation of feminine restlessness.—Philadelphia Press.

John Wesley's Mother.—

The mother of John Wesley taught him the alphabet nineteen times, failing of permanent success the eighteenth; but he afterwards became a minister and reformer, taking for his motto, "the world is my parish." And he is said to have traveled some two hundred and fifty thousand miles, principally on horseback, written two hundred volumes of books, preached more than forty thousand sermons, and given away a hundred thousand dollars in charity. He was the institutor of an evangelical sect, which numbered, while he lived, two thousand ministers, and eighty thousand church members; and is now multiplied to thousands and tens of thousands of apostles, and more than a million of disciples, scattered throughout the entire world. Little did that mother think that she was training one who was to take the lead in awakening a corrupt church from the slumbers of generations, that she was by him shining in the golden candlestick of the Church, preaching the gospel of reformation in both hemispheres, and spreading Scriptoral holiness through the earth.

Robert Hall and Matthew Wilkes.—

The celebrated divine, Robert Hall, and Rev. Matthew Wilkes were, on one occasion, guests in the same house; and after the services, held during a convention of the denomination of Beptists, were seated in the parlor, surrounded, of course, by numerous friends.

Mr. Hall, full of wit and pleasantry, and as cheerful as the painful disease from which he suffered permitted him to be, entertained the ladies, and was the life of the party. Presently, up spoke old Wilkes.

"I am surprised, Mr. Hall, after the very serious discourse you gave us this afternoon, to see you display so much levity as you do this evening."

"My dear sir," said Robert Hall, "there is just this difference between you and me: you have your nonsense in the pulpit, and I have mine in the parlor."

Matthew was quiet the rest of the evening.

Dr. Dwight.—

A gentleman of nervous temperament once called on Dr. Dwight, President of Yale College. One of the Doctor's boys was rather boisterous, and pestered the nervous gentleman somewhat, whereupon he said to him, "My boy, if you will keep still while I am talking to your father, I will give you a dollar." Instantly the boy hushed down gentle as a sleeping lamb. At the close of the gentleman's remarks he attempted to leave without giving the boy the dollar; but Dr. Dwight was too fast for him. He put a dollar into the man's hands, saying, "You promised my boy a dollar for good behavior. Give him that as you promised. If, sir, we lie, our children will be liars also."

Death of a Descendant of Walter Scott.—

Mrs. Hope Scott, the sole surviving grand-daughter of Sir Walter Scott and the daughter of Mr. John Gibson Lockhart, died at Edinburg on the 26th ult. Like nearly all the descendants of the great Scottish novelist and poet, she has been cut off in the prime of life. She was married a few years since to Mr. Hope Scott, the eminent barrister, who took the latter surname on his acceding to the Abbotsford estates. Mrs. Scott leaves two young children and an infant of five weeks old, the only descendants of the author of "Waverley."

John Randolph's Mother.—

The late John Randolph, some years before his death, wrote to a friend as follows: "I used to be called a French man, because I took the French side in politics; and though this was unjust, yet the truth is, I should have been a French atheist, if it had not been for one recollection, and that was when my departed mother used to take my little hands in hers, and cause me, on my knees, to say—"Our Father which art in heaven."

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

JOHN H. GEE, was born in Lunenburg county, Virginia, November 7, 1810. In 1830, emigrated to Tennessee; where, in 1832 he married Julia A. Tanner. In the Autumn of 1834, he removed with his family to Sumter county, Alabama. Brother Gee joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Sumterville, July 1841; and since that time, he has been a devoted Christian and worthy member of the Church. He left home in September, to attend to some business in Tennessee; and, was on his way home, when he was taken sick, and died at Sumterville, Winston county, Alabama, October 8th, 1858. The writer was interned, that brother Gee was resigned to his fate, although away from home, from the companion of his bosom and children. Yet, the best of all, "God was with him." And in his last remaining moments upon earth, he felt that,

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

J. M. R.

MRS. CORDELIA McLEOD, the wife of Alexander McLeod, died in Yazoo, county, Mississippi, on the 1st of November, 1858, in her thirty-fourth year. She was a native of Franklin county, Mississippi, and daughter of Mr. James and N. Yearns; she had been an exemplary and devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for fourteen years. Sister McLeod acted a prominant part in sustaining a camp-meeting of nine days, commencing the 8th of October, and closing the 17th. It was a glorious time. Sister McLeod, was indisposed when the meeting closed she grew worse, and gradually sank, until she breathed her last. In the language of her husband, her death was peaceful, indeed a triumph over death; among her last words were such as these, happy, happy, happy! O, Heaven! Sweet Heaven, my home! O, sing to me of Heaven. Sister McLeod, was an amiable lady, a kind wife and mother; a worthy member of the Church; she was esteemed and beloved by all. She lived a Christian, and died a Saint and is, I have no doubt, in Heaven. D. M. W.

MRS. FRANCIS TURNER, relict of Hesluck Turner, was born in Lincoln county, Georgia, October 4, 1794, and died in Enterprise, Mississippi, November 7, 1858. She was married in her 17th year—removed to East Alabama in 1838—was left a widow in 1845. In 1857, she removed to Mississippi, to be near her son, Rev. W. C. Turner. She was a woman of strong and vigorous mind, and was an enlightened and spiritual christian—well read in Wesleyan theology—and fully capable of giving a reason for her faith. Sister Turner was the daughter of Isaac and Milly Tatom—at whose house the two first Methodist Missionaries, who ever came to Georgia, Humphries and Mayors, found a christian welcome. Their daughter was then a little girl, but was awakened under the teachings of those good men, and joined the Church in her 11th year. From thence forth, through the long course of 41 years, she witnessed a good confession. And at last, after a long and painful illness in which she suffered much, peacefully closed her Christian life; leaving behind the brightest evidences of her ripeness for heaven. Enterprise, Mississippi, November 20, 1858. J. E. NEWMAN.

The Southern Advocate please copy.

She continued to talk for several hours after, though less connected, her thoughts wandering; yet she droped no word to indicate that her Christian confidence was in the least shaken. But O, the last enemy of man is now to be encountered! Friends shrink away from the chamber; nature sickens and gives back, to see one so young, so beautiful, and so much beloved struggling in the iron grasp of death. And as the contest drew to a close, and her restless eyes became still, they seemed to settle on her father, the only surviving parent, who stood with clasped hands, in prayerful silence by her bed, while her soul passed gently away. But do we hear from his lips one word of complaint? O no! the soul that had been tried so often in the fires of affliction was faithful still; and was enabled to exclaim, thank God that my child was saved from a sudden death, and permitted to cheer my lonely home for a few brief months! I have witnessed her penitential tears, I have seen her happily converted to God, and have heard her discuss with intelligence the plan of salvation. And while his bereaved little ones gather around his knee, he points them to the skies, and tells them of a land where there will be no more disaster, sickness or death; and speaks of a re-union of their broken family—can we, who witnessed this scene, withhold a tear? No—weep we must! "But we sorrow not even as others who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so those also who sleep in Jesus, will God bring next time."

MRS. MARY E. FOUNTIN, wife of Mr. W. G. Fountain, and daughter of Cyrus and Elizabeth Allen, was born in Campbell county, Georgia, the 16th February, 1830, died on the 13th of September, 1858, at her residence near Grove Hill, Clarke county, Alabama. She has been married nearly ten years. Was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for some time previous to her death. She was greatly estimated in all the relations of life. Strong in her affections as a wife and mother—so much so, that after enduring a long and painful illness which had emaciated her so that she was a mere skeleton, and had chased away every hope that her friends had entertained of her recovery, yet her husband and children were the burden of her thoughts, and caused her to desire to live for their sake. But, as sister Fountin approached death, she was enabled through grace to meet and vanquish the last enemy, and with a shout of triumph enter into that rest that remains for the people of God. The writer of this notice had been with her awhile before she died—heard her exhort some of her relatives to reform their lives, and meet her in a better world. And heard her, with a strong voice, bid farewell to her surrounding friends; and heard, solemn promises made by some of these friends, to try to live so as to meet her in Heaven, which altogether made an impression on their minds that will not soon be effaced. And may God grant that these promises may be honestly put into practice by every one that made them; so that they too may be enabled through grace, in the hour of death, to triumph like her. G.

MISS SALLIE TURNER, daughter of H. G. Turner, formerly of Sumter county, Alabama, but now of Washington, died on the 22d of September, of measles, aged seventeen years, at her fathers residence. The deceased was a passenger on the ill-fated steamer, Eliza Battle, which was lost on the Bigby river, on the 25th of February last, by fire. She witnessed the untimely death of her kind stepmother and dear little sister, with many other kind friends who from effects of cold, were droping from the trees in which they had climed, into their watery graves—amidst the exciting confusion occasioned by the fury of the elements, she manifested much presence of mind, and care for the preservation of others. Her own life was saved by the mercy of a kind providence. Two noble and generous hearted young men, the names of whom we cannot withhold on this occasion—Messrs. Frank Stone and Tobias Cox, are the noble spirits here alluded to. The deceased, never ceased to express her gratitude and admiration of these generous and self-sacrificing spirits. We must be permitted to refer to the noble and generous conduct of Dr. T. Clanton, who fell a victim at the same time. He snatched from the burning wreck, the wardrobe of the mother and daughter, and insisted on their dressing, even assisted them with his own hands. He spoke many encouraging words to the sufferers, while he himself was grappling with the pangs of death. These three spirits though one of them is dead, will long be remembered among the brave and the good; and the friends of the dead imbrace this opportunity to tender them their lasting thanks and heart-felt gratitude. Mr. Cox, in a letter addressed to the deceased, some time after the disaster, enquiring after her welfare, uses this expression, "you asked a question, amid our perilous condition that I never shall forget," "are you a Christian?" Although, at this time she was without hope herself, yet we find her enring for the souls of others. And may we not confidently hope that, ere this time, this question, asked with innocence and sincerity, can be answered in full assurance of faith. Yes, I am a Christian. After a days rest, her health appeared to be as usual, very good, and her spirit cheerful; but she did not cast away the solemn warning, but sought the forgiveness of her sins through Christ; and was happily converted several weeks before her illness. While sick, her conversation was much on religious subjects, frequently wishing to hear the Bible read, and conversing about its sacred pages. About seven o'clock in the morning, her friends discovered that nature was fast sinking; she called for her Testament, which was handed her, but her trembling hands were growing cold in death, and could not hold it in a position to read. With a pleasant look, she requested some one to read for her—the 14th chapter of St. John's Gospel was selected; every sentence of which she seemed fully to comprehend, and listen to with unspeakable delight. Soon after, she exclaimed—O, I long to fly away, and be at rest in the arms of my Savior! She was then silent for a moment, when she again exclaimed—

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high."

Then looking up for a short space, as if waiting a reply, she continued with much emphasis,

"Poor tempest tossed soul be still
My promised grace receive,
'Tis Jesus speaks, I must I will,
I can, I do believe."

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

BRO. JOSEPH A. NETTLES, died suddenly in the city of Philadelphia, Pensylvania, on the 4th of July last, at the age of 28 years. The quotation, at the head of this obituary, were the last words of the last will and Testament of brother Nettles. The passage is evidently addressed to his little daughter, Coelia, and to his brother and father-in-law, the executor of his will. But, by the word of divine truth, it is addressed with solemn emphasis to every man—in view of death, the grave, the judgment and eternity. How, wise are they that hear and obey. It is the full obedience of faith and practice, concentrated in a single command. The Law, the Gospel, "Prepare to meet thy God." Brother Nettles was born and raised in the parish of East Feliciana, Louisiana, and resided, at the time of his death, in East Baton Rouge. He was educated at Centenary College, Louisiana, where he graduated with honor in July, 1859. He subsequently graduated in medicine. As a student he was diligent and thorough in his studies; scrupulously obedient to college law; was courteous and gentlemanly to his fellow students and the faculty. As a citizen, he was quiet, neighborly, and ever the firm supporter of public order and public morals. As a planter and physician, he was attentive and successful. As a brother, father and husband, he was firm but affectionate; and as a man, upright and respected by all that know him. While in the senior class in college, during a gracious revival of religion, he was happily converted, and united himself with the Methodist Church. He afterwards maintained this relationship, by an upright, Christian walk and conversation. He appears to have had a permanent consciousness of his acceptance with God, which kept his mind in perfect peace. In his Christian walk, there was no stumbling, no faltering to the right or left—no standing still, as if in doubt or in dalliance with passion. His feet were upon the rock. The seed took deep root, in good soil; it sprung up, and bore fruit, every day. His piety was quiet, steady, and fruitful—a light in a candlestick, giving light unto all in the house. A lovely wife went before him to the silent grave; a beautiful daughter, an only brother, and a large circle of relatives and friends, remain to morn his loss. He has exchanged the Church militant for the Church triumphant. He sleeps, as sleep the sainted dead, in Christ. But his works do follow him. His last will, written just before he left for the North, is perhaps as beautiful a specimen of Christian composition, and as beautiful an exhibition of Christian character, as ever come from the hands of one so young, and with such promise of long life and happiness. So brief, and yet so full; so sensible of the goodness of God, and of his providence; so resigned to God's will; so desirous to be right, and do right, and to promote God's glory; so affectionate to his little daughter, and anxious and prayerful for her salvation. It would seem as if he was laboring under a presentiment that death was near, and He even at hand. His works follow him, and though dead he yet speaketh, and shall speak to the young, congregated in the halls of his Alma Mater, to the negro, as he looks up from toil, and the Heathen as he stretches out the hand to God, in foreign lands. Brother Nettles did not forget that he held his property as the steward of God. He bequeathed to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, $400 for Home Missions, and $500 for Foreign Missions. He also bequeathed to Centenary College, of Louisiana—the institution at which he was educated and where he was converted—$1000, toward the endowment of one or more Professorships. Reader go thou and do likewise. Let me die the death of the righteous.

YELLOW FEVER! YELLOW FEVER!

TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS!

Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned inquiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, workers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately. It cures burns, bites, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In this City the HOWARD ASSOCIATION, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

TRY IT—It can be had at, J. WRIGHT, & CO'S., Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. s.22

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA

AND

IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from FRESH ROOT, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearer a PANACEA or CATHOLICON than any; and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fortyce, Brodie, Liebig, Combel, Bacon, Bateman, Bardsley, Hanson, Howard, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Piles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores (McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tuberculae, Hooping Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Fortyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparation of Sarsaparilla."

FEMALE COMPLAINTS.—Amenorrhea, Dysmenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Uterus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility; etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

The above prepared and sold in Memphis by H. S. HUGHES, Druggist, No. 343 Main st.

McLEAN'S

Strengthening Cordial

AND BLOOD PURIFIER.

THE GREATEST REMEDY IN THE WORLD!!

THIS Cordial is distilled from a herb known only to myself, and chemically combined with some of the most valuable medicinal Roots, Herbs and Barks known to the mind of man, viz: Blood Root, Black Root, Wild Cherry Bark, Yellow Dock, Dandelion, Sarsaparilla, Elder Flowers, with others, producing the most infallible remedy for the restoration of health ever known.

IT IS NATURE'S OWN REMEDY,

curing disease by natural laws. When taken, its healing influence is felt coursing through every vein of the body, purifying and accelerating the circulation of the blood. It neutralizes any bilious matter in the stomach, and strengthens the whole organization.

McLEAN'S STRENGTHENING CORDIAL

will effectually cure Liver Complaints, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Chronic or Nervous Debility, Diseases of the Kidneys, and all Diseases arising from Disordered Liver or Stomach, such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Rush of Blood to the Head, Sourness or Sickness of the Stomach, Heartburn, Disgust of Food, Fluttering of the Heart, Swimming or Pain in the Head, Choking or Suffocating Sensations on lying down, Dimness of Vision, Night Sweats, Fevers, Dryness of the Skin, Yellowness of the Skin or in the Eyes, Pimples or Blotches on the Face or Skin, Inflammation of the Blood, Melancholy or Depression of Spirits, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Bloody Flux, Constipation of the Bowels, Inward Piles, Diseases arising from the use of Mercury, Pain in the Bones, Coughing, Debility, Nervousness, Gravel, Impure Blood, Loss of Memory, Bilious Chills, Ague, Liver Complaint, and Fever and Ague or Chills and Fever. It will also cure diseases of the Bladder and Womb, such as Seminal Weakness, Incontinence of Urine, Strangury, Inflammation or Weakness of the Womb or Bladder, &c.

THERE IS NO MISTAKE ABOUT IT.

This Cordial will never fail to cure any of the above diseases, if taken as per directions on each bottle, in English, German and French.

OVER HALF A MILLION OF BOTTLES

have been sold during the last six months, and in no instance has it failed in giving entire satisfaction. Who, then, will suffer from weakness or debility when McLean's Strengthening Cordial will cure you?

TO THE LADIES.

Do you wish to be healthy and strong? Then go at once and get McLean's Cordial. It will strengthen and invigorate your whole system, causing a healthy and pure circulation of blood to flow through every vein, and the rich, rosy bloom of health to mount to your cheek again.

EVERY BOTTLE IS WARRANTED TO GIVE SATISFACTION.

FOR CHILDREN.

We say to parents, if your children are sickly, puny, or afflicted with complaints prevalent among children, give them a small quantity of McLean's Cordial, and it will make them healthy, fat and robust.—Delay not a moment.—Try it and you will be convinced.

IT IS DELICIOUS TO TAKE.

EVERY COUNTRY MERCHANT

should not leave the city until he had procured a supply of McLean's Strengthening Cordial. It sells rapidly, because it always cures. A liberal discount will be made to those who buy to sell again.

Caution.—Beware of imposition and spurious articles which may try to palm upon you some Bitter or Sarsaparilla trash, which they can buy cheap, by saying it is just as good. Avoid such men. Ask for McLean's Strength-ening Cordial, and take nothing else. It is the only remedy that will purify the blood thoroughly, and at the same time strengthen the system.

One table spoonful taken every morning fasting is a certain preventive for Cholera, Chills and Fever, Yellow Fever, or any other prevalent disease.

Price only $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5

McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT.

THE BEST LINIMENT IN THE WORLD FOR MAN OR BEAST.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE CURE

Performed by McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment. Read for yourselves: Thomas Ford, a blacksmith, living near Cass avenue, on Tenth street, had a horrible running sore on his foot. He tried various Liniments, Salves, etc., but could do it no good. He despaired of ever being able to work at his trade again, because he could not bear any weight on his foot, and by one small bottle of McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment, he is now perfectly cured.

Rheumatism, paralysis, neuralgia, bruises, sprains, stiffness in the joints or muscles, swellings, sore throat, earache or toothache, wounds, fresh cuts, sores, burns, scalds, pains, etc., yield to the "magic" influence of this wonderful Liniment.

For horses and Cattle it is an infallible remedy for chafes, galls, scratches, cracked heels, lameness, spavin, sweeny, spavin, splint, bruises, swellings, wounds, rattlesnake bites, and various other diseases which animals are liable to from injuries or accidents.

Every country merchant should obtain a supply of McLean's Volcanic Oil Liniment. It sells rapidly, because it always cures.

A liberal discount will be made to merchants who buy to sell again.

Circular Temples—The Quarry—The Stone—Halt at Zehleh—Passage over Lebanon—Mecca Pilgrims—Turkish Post and Officers—Beyroot—American Mission Schools—Presbyterian Mission.

SYRIA, April, 1858.

THE TEMPLE OF THE SUN surpasses all description—it is entirely impossible to do justice to this noble structure or the beauty and grace of the designs which adorn it. The broken columns, lying upon the ground—with fragments of sculptured cornices and capitals, with delicately carved frieze—astonishing specimens of art and skill. The colonnade in front of the building, part of which remains, gives it an air of unequalled grandeur. What it must have been in its glory, may be perceived by that which remains. In its ruins it is magnificent, and surpasses what we saw in the palaces of the Cesars, or elsewhere.

There is a small circular temple of marble, supported by Corinthian columns, with niches between for statues; this building is detached from the great pile, and is well worthy of admiration. It is said to have been used for the rites of the Greek Church until a recent date.

The views, of the mountains of Lebanon and the valley, seen from this temple are truly grand, presenting a variety of the most pleasing objects to the eye. The valley is seven or eight miles wide between these mountains, and is exceedingly fertile: the plains open into extensive vineyards and mulberry orchards—where the silk-culture appears to be carried on to a considerable extent.

The atmosphere in this valley was much cooler than in Damascus; the height above the sea, and the snow-crowned mountains of Lebanon, rendered it many degrees cooler. We really suffered, from the severity of the cold, which was very bleak and cold at Baalbec.

We left this place, satisfied that we had seen a view so celebrated that the best descriptions fall infinitely short of the reality. It appears, that nothing short of an earthquake could shake the foundations of such a massive building, and lay its lofty columns in the dust. Some still stand, isolated, with the winds and storms of centuries passing over them—the wonder of the world. Near the pedestal, the steps have been broken to take out the iron, which gives them an appearance of decay, as if they must fall.

On our way we visited the quarry where these massive blocks of stone were hewn—one stands there still, regularly squared, seventy feet in length, fourteen in breadth and several feet high, never severed from the original rock, doubtless designed for some part of the building but never finished.

We rode an hour and a-half in this beautiful valley; passed three columns standing alone in the plain with no other fragment of ruins near. The view of Baalbec, going up this side, must have been most magnificent, presenting the temple in its finest position for exhibiting its magnitude and grandeur.

We rode through highly cultivated fields with extensive vineyards, passed some little villages on the sloping hillsides of Lebanon, before we ascended its height over which we were to pass to reach Beyroot, on the coast of the Mediterranean. The storm beat in our faces as we proceeded on our journey and the wind blew with great force—rain and hail followed in succession—and it was difficult to keep our horses in the path or sustain ourselves upon them—so violent did the wind blow, we suffered severely from the intensity of the cold.

We stopped at the village of Zehleh for the night, at a comfortable house though plastered with clay, and without a pane of glass to let in the light. The roof, like all the terraced houses, covered with timber and embedded with earth; the people were members of the Greek Church. They brought us in a furnace of coals to warm ourselves, and treated us very kindly, for which we were grateful. Our Dragoman supplied us with beds and food, and made us comfortable in this strange land.

It is almost impossible to satisfy the curiosity of these people. As soon as we arrived, they gathered around us, and filled the room—men, women and children—it was perfectly annoying; at length our party was compelled to drive them away; even then, it was difficult to keep them out. They would bring in their chiboques, sit down and smoke, with perfect good-nature; talk to us in Arabic, whether we understood them or not.

We stayed at this village all the next day, on account of the cold; and left, the third, for a passage over Lebanon—difficult and dangerous in many places; and none but horses trained to such roads could ever travel them.

The hills were blackened with caravans of mules, laden with goods for Damascus and other places, piled with boxes and trunks to an enormous height. It is wonderful how these animals carry such loads, especially among such rocky passes.

The snowy summits of Lebanon were still above us, but we passed through only one drift, which was not deep. We had a rough and fearful road, but we had become familiar with such scenes and encountered the difficulties with increasing fortitude. We ascended hill upon hill, with a cold and cheerless wind blowing in our faces, like that of March, and no alternative but to keep on our way.

We met a large caravan of pilgrims on their way to Mecca—the Sultan's mother and a military escort. There were three canopys of red and blue silk, raised upon mules, where the Sultana and her ladies sat; but we did not see their persons, as they turned off in another direction. After them came another train of mules and servants, with the wardrobe, if we might judge by the cases—three of which were covered with crimson silk velvet, with black feathers upon their tops.

We stopped at a khan to lunch, a substitute for an inn—a rough wall of stones, covered over the top with earth, like their terraced-roof houses; but, as primitive as they look, they are needful in the mountainous regions in a storm; and, after a tent life of twenty-one days, things change in their aspect—although our dragoman kept a table equal to a first-class hotel in the East. We had little iron-bedsteads which folded up, and mattrasses, carried upon mules; and our tents, when pitched and well-arranged, looked perhaps as well as those of the patriarchs of old, and are quite as comfortable.

We passed a Turkish military station and some of the officers, mounted upon the finest Arab horses we had yet seen. The officers were well dressed and rode gracefully. Their barracks looked like caves in the mountain side—not any better.

We rode eleven hours this day, to reach Beyroot, grateful, at last to find lodgings in a house, after so many days from Jerusalem.

This city has a fine appearance as entered from the hills—quite European in its aspect. Outside the walls, the white houses are embowered in shade trees and gardens, dense with foliage of the richest kind. The mountains of Lebanon raise their snowy summits above the city, and range along the coast, where their base is washed by the waves of the sea.

The scenery around the coast is romantic, with large shelving rocks hanging over the waters, romantic and picturesque, although they do not improve the harbor—or, like Jaffa, it is difficult to land.

Soon after we arrived we were introduced to the American missionaries. The Rev. Mr. Ford kindly sent a boy with a horse, to take me to his residence. In their schools, which are quite prosperous, they employ native teachers, who appear to be deeply interested in their work: and the business is conducted with admirable order. The female department numbers thirty interesting little girls, who sung the "Happy Land," for me, in Arabic, most sweetly—the best music I have heard for a long time. There were two departments for boys—forty in one, and thirty in the other; the rooms were airy and clean; the boys were orderly and well behaved, with intelligent and lovely countenances beaming with joy.

The Presbyterian mission is very prosperous, and has many schools scattered about the country; and its ministers are faithful and efficient. Their residence is in a delightful spot, with the schools and church contignous. A Protestant cemetary joins the schools—situated in a lovely place, and ornamented with the towering cypress tree, which runs up like the pinnacle of a temple towards heaven. It was a lovely and calm place for the silent dead. There sleep those who fell at their post in mature years; and the lambs of the flock, whom Jesus has taken to his bosom. O, what a contrast between this, and a Turkish cemetery so gloomy and sad—though used as a place of recreation.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI August 6th, 1858.

MR. EDITOR: As a member of the Baptist Mission of Shanghai, passes through your city on his way to Columbus, I thought I would not lose the opportunity of writing a few lines. For the last three months, there has been a great deal to interest us in Shanghai. The English, Russian, French, and American authorities, have succeeded in at last obtaining a Treaty with the Emperor of the "Celestial" Empire, which grants us more than we could possibly have expected. Praise be to God for what has been granted. The Missionaries heart has been made to leap with joy, for the cause of God was not overlooked by our worthy Embassadors from England and America. We are now allowed to go into any part of the great Empire and preach the unsearchable riches of the Gospel to this great valley of dry-bones. Oh! will not the Church of God awake to her duty and put on her beautiful garments? The Lord seems to be shaking all nations, and I trust the time is not far distant, when the whole earth shall be filled with his Glory.—Behold here, what a vast country, containing one-third the population of the earth, has just been opened, and the religion of our Lord tolerated throughout all its borders. In India, Christianity is being placed on a firmer footing; and I suppose will hereafter be made the basis of the government. There is also Japan thrown open to the merchant and missionary, after so many years of entire obscurity. Who can deny but that God had a direction in these affairs, of so much importance to the world and the establishment of the Kingdom of Christ. God promised, that the heathen should be given to Christ for his inheritence; and surely what better evidence have we, than the toleration of Christianity through this land of lunges and darkness? Cannot our Church send more help? There are those who would come; let the Church call for them. Unless you send us help, other churches will precede us in battling with the Power of Darkness—whereas, we wish to be among the formost in gaining the victory. Many of the Missionaries expect, as soon as the treaty is ratified at home and returns to China, to move into the interior, and establish stations as in India. So that I suppose it will fall to my portion, as one, to go into the interior.

Mr. Reed, the American Commissioner, is now on his way to Japan. The Cantonese still continue hostile; and say they are determined not to yield to the terms of the treaty, as it compells them to sustain all the loss of property and the expense of the war. The English are collecting troops at Canton, with the determination to give them another salute of bombs. Quite an unpleasant affair.

The French are collecting forces on the coast of Cochin-China, with the intention of invading the country with a hostile array. While nations are fighting carnal battles with carnal men, may the Lord help us to fight successfully, all our spiritual battles with the avowed enemy of God and seducer of our fellow race.

How much my heart is rejoiced to hear of the great work of God, which is now going on in America. The good work is still going on here, but not with such speed as in Christain lands; yet we have great cause to rejoice that the Spirit of God has moved some to repent, and take upon themselves the name of Christ. I hope to baptize two other Chinese the first Sabbath in September, if the Lord wills me health and strength.

I truly regret to hear, that in a small place just one day's travel from New Orleans by cars, the Church has almost forsaken God. I was troubled much in heart when I heard of such sad news concerning some of my intimate friends and companions of my youth. You have, perhaps, heard of the place, it has four Methodist Churches. I will now quote from a letter concerning that place, and the dreadful state of the Church. I have just received the letter, and it was written in April and May of this year. In speaking of the revival in the North, he says, "O! that the tide would turn this way, for we are living here, as it were, almost in a heathen land. Vice of every description is the order of the day throughout this part of the country, and where more than in ? The Church is not enjoying that 'prosperity' it had when you were with us. The whole membership has grown very cold and remiss in its duties, and I do not suppose there has been one person converted for three years. How many have danced away all they had! You could hardly be made to believe, what a wicked place this is. I want to ask you in especial manner, to remember this town, this little corner of perdition, in your prayers to God. You may think I have used too strong a term in describing it, but I know this place better than you do. We try to have prayer meeting once a week, but we hardly ever have more than twelve present, and sometimes not more than four, and we have generally, three hymns and two prayers, and break up. We have class-meeting every Sunday evening, but with less interest than in the prayer-meeting, generally about five or six present. It has been about six weeks only, since we have commenced having meetings at all. We have been having prayer meetings a good while, but last winter, it fell through entirely for three months; but it has been revived again, and I have some little reason to hope, that it will do better. In fact, I think I can see some little improvement in every way. We had the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper administered to-day, and about thirty-five or forty present—including Presbyterians and Episcopalians, and some of these were from the country. I suppose that out of the number of communicants, there were about fifteen or eighteen members of the Methodist Church. I understand, that it was intended this meeting should continue, but everything looks so unfavorable, they have concluded not to protract it at all. We will have Love-feast to-night.

"I have just returned from Love-feast, and we had a good time, and consequently have concluded to protract the meeting by holding prayer meetings at 4 o'clock P. M. and at candle-lighting."

"May the 3d, our meeting closed, or rather died out last night. It commenced Monday evening with rather a promising interest, and at night there was one mourner who presented himself, but never returned; that was the only mourner during the whole meeting. On Friday night there was a May-party ball, and no meeting in the evening or night. Saturday evening they forgot to ring the bell, until it was too late. At candle-light very few attended, for we had a show in town, and it shows again to-night, and another comes next Saturday, and another on the Monday following, three shows in a week!",

Such was the substance of a letter I received from home, and I have no reason to doubt the contents of it. If such be the case, are we not reminded of the striking contrast between the present time and that of Noah? The people are following after the gods of this vile world, and in their folly, "God gave them over to a reprobate mind,"—"being filled with all unrighteousness,"—etc. My heart was greived to hear of the coldness of the membership in the village of my youth. O that God would abundantly pour out his spirit upon the people, and cause the wanderers to return to him.

Our native Chinese members were grieved to hear it, and prayed earnestly for their recovery and a revival of God's work in the midst of such worldly people. I hope to hear better news before many days.

J. W. LAMBETH.

P. S. Put in by way of post-script: that if I can in in one or two months more, I shall send two Chinese boys to the Louisiana Conference to be educated. Their passage and bill from New York to New Orleans I will pay here, and place them in the hands of some responsible person, who will see them safe to New Orleans. If I succeed in getting them, I will inform you more particular in regard to them, by one or two mails hence. Their passage across the ocean will cost them nothing.

THE POLAR MYSTERY.

Since Livingstone, Barth, etc., have penetrated the centre of Africa, there remains but one great geographical mystery—the polar regions. In the ice-bound recesses of the Arctic and Antarctic oceans, at the extremities of that mighty axis on which our globe revolves, lie hidden in eternal frost and snowy regions never yet visited by civilized man, and of the nature of which he can form only vague and unsatisfactory conjectures. That this two-fold secret should have a powerful charm for bold, adventurous spirits, trained to scientific investigation, is not at all remarkable. Among those who have experienced its influence, there was one young American, of comparatively feeble body but with a gigantic soul, who resolved to hazard his life in its solution. Combined with this, however, was another motive, most powerful in one of his chivalrous disposition. Humanity, as well as science, called loudly to the rescue; and if ever there was an ear attuned to catch the faintest whisper of either, it was that of Elisha Kent Kane.

Until very recently, we were rather inclined to believe that this young man had been overrated. But we have read the history of his Arctic Explorations, and we think so no longer. Nor do we believe that there is a single unprejudiced individual who can think otherwise, after properly informing himself upon the subject. With his little band of eighteen followers, he conducted a campaign of more than two years' duration, against an enemy no less potent than the fiercest that Napoleon ever vanquished, displaying qualities of heart and mind, such as the proudest conqueror that ever lived might envy. We very much doubt, indeed, if there are ten other men in the whole United States navy, who could have brought those men home again, through all the perils which environed them. We say, "brought them home," because every one who reads the book must see that without their commander, they must have perished, to a man.

In the month of December, 1852, Dr. E. K. Kane, a simple medical officer in the United States service, received special orders from the Secretary of the Navy, "to conduct an Expedition to the Arctic Seas in search of Sir John Franklin." It was an office that few of course would covet, and fewer still were fit for. Kane had acted as surgeon to a previous Expedition, and in that, as well as in his subsequent writings, communications to the Geographical Society, etc., he developed qualities which proved him to be fitted, beyond all others, for this arduous and most dangerous post of duty. This expedition was a joint affair, to which Mr. Grinnell, of New York, Mr. Peabody, of London, and the United States Navy, were the principal contributers. Though no one had ever been there to see, it was nevertheless, Dr. Kane's fixed opinion, founded on scientific data, that the land-masses of Greenland extended to the far North, nearer to the Pole probably than any other land, and that they would lead to what he believed to be an open Polar Sea, on whose unexplored shores, if any where, the long-sought traces of Sir John Franklin might be expected to exist. His plan was, therefore, to follow the coast as the basis of his operations, along a due Northern line, if possible, where food to sustain his party, and Esquimaux to co-operate with them, might probably be found. They were to pass up Baffin's Bay to its most Northern attainable point, and thence, in boats or sledges, as they best could, press on towards the mysterious Pole.

"All things being ready they embarked, May 30th, 1853, in the "Advance," a brigantine of Mr. Grinnell's, with ten sailors and non-commissioned officers of the Navy, and seven volunteers. With the exception of Dr. Hayes, the Surgeon, and Mr. Sontag, the Astronomer, they appear to have been rough, hardy men, with little cultivation, but most of them active, persevering, and courageous. At Fiskernaes, on the coast of Greenland, they shipped, as a hunter, a young christinaized Esquimaux, named Hans Cristian, who proved to be a faithful and useful servant to the commander. By the end of July they passed the most Northern of the Danish colonies of Greenland, and entered upon their field of discovery.

One of the first things that attracted our attention in reading the history of this Expedition, was the singularity of the fact, that Dr. Kane, a mere Naval Surgeon, should be such a consummate seaman. Without having thought much about it, we had always supposed that, though he was Commander of the Expedition, he could not of course actually have taken charge of the vessel as Captain. To our great surprise, however, we had perused but a few pages of the book before we discovered that he was every inch a sailor, and that among the "old salts" on board, seamen almost from their cradles, there was not a man who would have dreamed of doubting the propriety of his decision, even in a matter of pure seamanship. There may be naval surgeons who know something of mere navigation, but to find one of the youngest of them a thorough seaman as well as navigator, is certainly a novelty. We have known a number of these, and we doubt if the majority could tell the main-top-bowline from a bob-stay.

In the narrow space which we can devote to such a purpose, we can hardly give even an outline of the history of the Expedition; but, as the most important American achievement of these late years, and one too but little known, we will briefly notice a few of its salient points. By the 23d of August, Kane had reached 78° 41 north latitude, and was now in a region never before penetrated by civilized man. Only one year before, Captain Inglefield, of the British Navy, had conducted a search in this direction, but had not been able to advance so far. With a single exception, the Spitzburgen tramp of Capt. Parry, no white man had ever been so far North before, in any direction.

By this time, the ice had so hemmed them in on every side, as to make their situation extremely hazardous. To add to their difficulties, a tremendous gale of wind arose, and it was only by consummate skill and ceaseless watchfulness that they were able to live through it. Over and over again, death stared them in the face, and their many hair-breadth escapes seemed little short of miracles. Next to the extraordinary skill of their leader, the perfect discipline maintained on board was evidently the sheet-anchor of their safety. Kane's system was a remarkably simple one. He exacted prompt and unquestioning submission to the very letter of his laws; but he had only three: First, absolute subordination to the officer in command or his delegate; second, abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, except when dispensed by special order; third, the habitual disuse of profane language.

At length the ice became so plentiful that further progress by sailing became impossible. There was but one way of getting the brig farther to the North, and that they adopted. Fastening hawsers to the bow, they towed her along the ice-belt which lined the shore, like a canal-boat. Slowly, laboriously, and dangerously, they advanced in this way, until they reached a pretty good harbor. It was now the 28th of August, and the short Arctic summer was over. The weather was getting very cold, and new ice was forming so fast, that it became evident they must soon be frozen in for the winter. Anxious to discover the best place for wintering, Dr. Kane took a boat and sledge, with seven men, and made a journey northward. Every step here was a novelty. They did not even know whether land or water was before them; for no one knew how far to the North Greenland might extend. Carefully observing the coast, and giving names to the newly discovered bays, capes, islands, rivers, etc., they journeyed on for about a week, and made some seventy miles. A large bay was before them, terminating in a lofty promontory. Leaving four of his party to recruit, Kane, with three volunteers, started across the ice for this headland.

After a hard day's walk he reached the promontory. It shut out from his view every thing beyond it. What was there no civilized eye had ever looked upon. Having toiled up an ascent of eleven hundred feet, the vast expanse of country to which he has given the name of Washington, burst upon his sight. Far off to the left, was the Western shore of the sound, running Northward as far as the eye or telescope could reach. To the right was the Eastern shore, on which he stood, tending almost directly Northward, and soon changing to a strange-looking wall-like ridge. Looking farther inland, he discovered that this ridge was the coast line of a mighty glacier, a vast body of fresh-water ice, of unknown extent, occupying thousands of square miles of the interior of the country. It is a mer de glace, similar, in many respects, to the glaciers of Switzerland, but immensely superior to them in point of size. Beyond this vast glittering mass, was the land of Washington, its coast line visible far to the North, and terminating in a far distant promontory, which was named Cape Andrew Jackson, with Cape John C. Calhoun, a little farther Northward, and Capes Clay and Webster, a little to the South of it. On the opposite shore was Maury Bay, terminating in Cape Barrow. The shore-ward face of the glacier, which must have measured sixty or seventy miles, formed a regular concave, terminated by Cape Jackson on the North, and Cape Agassiz on the South, thus constituting a large bay, which was named after Mr. Peabody, the great American Banker, who was the chief patron and supporter of the expedition, next to Mr. Henry Grinnell. Finding the ice before him almost impassible for the men and sledge, Dr. Kane reluctantly resolved to return to the brig, having found no better winter harbor than the one in which she now lay. After his return, all hands went to work to prepare for the many months of excessive cold and uninterrupted darkness which lay before them.

On the 10th of October, they had their last glimpse of the sun; it was the last day of February before he reached their deck again—almost five months of perpetual darkness! Dr. Kane thought that this everbrooding darkness was more depressing, in its influence, both upon the men and the dogs, than any thing else they had to contend with. While the preparations for the winter were going on, exploring parties were sent out. The first, consisting of Dr. Hayse and the Esquimaux hunter, Hans, were sent to learn something of the interior of the country. They penetrated about ninety miles, in a direction at right angles to the coast, until their further progress was arrested by an enormous glacier, extending to the right and left, and in front as far as their eyes could reach. They saw a few reindeer, and many hares and rabits. The other party was sent with a sledge load of provisions to make depots of stores in three several places in the spring. The last deposite was made as far north as 79° 50; the provisions being buried under the rocks, in iron cases. This party had many hardships to endure, but they returned to the brig in safety, after an absence of about one month. The darkness was now upon them, and the temperature had fallen to the freezing point of mercury. How they got through the winter, we will probably tell in a future number.

PREACHING TO HAVELOCK'S REGIMENT.

THE Rev. Dr. Butler, Superintendent of the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, thus writes to the Secretary of the Methodist Missionary Society, on the 30th August:

"On entering Bareilly, I went first of all to my own residence, (that was some fifteen months ago.) Nothing was standing but the bare walls; the floors were all grown over with the deep grass. I called a coolie, and dug up the rubbish in my once own comfortable study, and we soon came on the charred remains of my precious books. All had been destroyed by fire. I enclose you samples of the sad remains. We shall begin again, and that, too, under brighter prospects than India ever saw. I wander ed all over Bareilly. I love the people now better than I ever did.

Yesterday, the Sabbath, was a blessed day here. The English troops (2,700 men) now stationed in Bareilly, are all Scotch regiments. The Chaplain was sick, and immediately on our arrival, the brigadier commanding (our good friend Colonel Troup) sent to request that we would undertake the chaplain's duties for the Sabbath. Of course we did so. Mr. Pierce preached for the 93d and 42d regiments, and I for the 78th. My own opportunity was one I shall never forget. I arrived on the parade ground and found the regiment drawn up. I took my stand; the men were formed into a "hollow square;" the drum of the regiment was placed before me, and a Bible lay upon it. The colonel and his officers stood before me, and the band behind. I gave out the one hundredth psalm, and the music and voices rose upon the evening air to heaven. I then prayed with overflowing heart, and stood up to preach "the glorious liberty of the sons of God."

My emotions almost overwhelmed me when I looked at my audience; for who were the men that stood around me? These were Sir Henry Havelock's heroes! These were the illustrious warriors who first relieved the garrison of Lucknow! Yes, these brave men before me had performed one of the greatest military feats know to history, and did it, too, notwithstanding they lost nearly one half of their number in its execution. When I looked at their sun-browned faces, and thought of the manly tears they shed when, covered with blood and smoke, they rushed through the last street and into the "Residency," among the men and women they suffered so much to rescue, and snatching up the children in their arms, they thanked God "that they were in time to save them!"

Noble men! Their fame belongs to our nation as well as to their own. And I shall ever esteem it one of the highest privileges of my life, that I was permitted to preach to the men that Sir Henry Havelock led to the relief of Lucknow!

SCHILLER'S only surviving daughter, who, some years ago, published the correspondence which passed between her parents in 1778 and 1789, is preparing for to print the correspondence of Schiller's widow, with her friends and the literary notabilities of her time.

Adversity overcome, is the brightest glory, and willingly undergone, the greatest virtue. Sufferings are the trials of gallant spirits.

A man ceases to be a "good fellow" the moment he refuses to do precisely what other people wish him to do.

THE PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

"MR. FITZGERALD, from the committee on Book Depository, reported that the sum of $10,000 would be required to establish the concern on a proper footing. It is proposed to make it a joint stock institution. Two thousand dollars was subscribed in the Conference toward the object. The committee on the Pacific Methodist newspaper, reported the financial department of this journal to be in a very gratifying condition.

"Mr. Fitzgerald, from the committee on education, reported favorably to sustaining the Beacon Institute at San Jose, and asked for renewed efforts of the Conference in its behalf.

"The following named gentlemen were appointed to raise funds and attend to the interests of the Book Depository: Rev. B. H. Johnson, Rev. A. M. Bailey, Rev. W. R. Gober, Messrs. J. Genella, D. O. Shattuck, and Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, as agent. The members of the Conference pledged themselves to raise the $10,000 required. Rev. S. W. Davis was re-admitted a member of the Conference. Rev. J. C. Simmons presented the report of the Sabbath-school committee. There are thirty schools under the supervision of the Conference, with thirty-two superintendents, one hundred and thirty-six teachers, and nine hundred and ten scholars. In the several libraries of these schools are 4372 volumes, and there are four hundred and seven Sabbath-school papers taken. Forty-one scholars have made professions of religion during the past year. Three hundred and sixty-two dollars has been collected and disbursed for the schools during the past year.

"The Conference adjourned yesterday, 18th, to meet at San Francisco on the second Wednesday in October, 1859. The Conference was characterized by a degree of earnestness and zeal that was highly encouraging to the friends of the Church. The statistics of the different Churches were reported yesterday morning. The entire number of communicants, aside from the members of the clergy, is 2660. The increase of members, during the past twelve months, is 1500. The net increase is 1050, many members having left the State or died. The number of converts during the past year was 1340. The Conference concurred, by a vote of twenty-five to one, with the General Conference, in removing the slavery clause from the discipline, five members being absent. A resolution of thanks to the citizens of Stockton, for their hospitality to members of the Conference, was passed. The first Friday in January was appointed for a day of fasting and prayer. A resolution was passed in reference to raising of funds for home missions. After a powerful and eloquent address from Rev. D. Fisher, and the administration of the Sacrament, the following appointments were made:

"SAN FRANCISCO DISTRICT—Rev. O. Fisher, Presiding Elder; San Francisco and Edit'r P. Methodist, O. P. Fitzgerald; Redwood Circuit, Joseph Emory; San Jose and Santa Clara District; J. C. Simmons and H. C. Settle; Santa Clara Circuit, J. Grulle; Gilroy Circuit, H. N. Campton; Oakland Circuit, to be supplied; San Ramon Circuit, W. M. Culp; Napa Circuit, J. T. Cox; Petaluma Station, B. C. Johnson; Bodega Circuit, M. W. Glover; Healdsburg Circuit, L. C. Adams; Russian River Circuit, Thomas Brown; Humboldt Bay, Martin Gier; Independence, Oregon, to be supplied.

SACRAMENTO DISTRICT.—W. H. Goler, Presiding Elder; Sacramento Station, M. Evans; Sacramento River Circuit, D. M. Hice; Cossumnes and Dry Creek Circuit, H. A. Lattimer, J. M. Ward; El Dorado, J. W. Stahl; Georgetown Circuit, J. L. Hopkins; Iowa City Circuit, R. C. Martin; Bear River Circuit, W. M. Winters, sup. Barker and Putah, J. G. Shelton; Suisun, A. M. Baily; Carson Valley, L. Van Slyck, sup.

MARYSVILLE DISTRICT—M. Clampit, Presiding Elder; Marysville Station, to be supplied; Penn Valley, Nevada, Circuit, D. K. Houds; Dutch Flat, Nevada, C. H. E. Newton; Yuba City, B. H. Bussell; Colusa, J. Kalsey; Chico, Tehama, F. G. Gray; Tehama, C. Gridley; Red Bluffs, G. Hatcher, sup. Yolo, B. C. Howard; Clear Lake, L. T. Hawkins, sup.

STOCKTON DISTRICT—J. F. Blythe, Presiding Elder; Stockton Station, H. W. Higbun; Stockton City, J. W. Overton, sup. Calaveras Circuit, J. C. Pemlergrast; Mokelumne Valley Circuit, S. Brown; Dry Town and Valcon Circuit, M. F. Jones and P. Strickland; San Andreas Circuit, Ira Taylor; Sonora Circuit, J. G. Johnson; Merced and LaGrange Circuit, S. W. Davies; Cathey Valley Circuit, J. S. L. Wood; Mariposa Station, T. C. Harton.

LOS ANGELES DISTRICT.—T. O. Ellis, Presiding Elder; Los Angeles and El Monte Circuit, T. O. Ellis and J. Hambloey; San Bernardino, J. Burns, sup. Keyesville, C. C. Snell; Visalia, E. H. Lockley.

J. C. Steward, Agent for the Tract Society and Corresponding Editor of Pacific Methodist.

LETTER FROM ARKANSAS.

MR. EDITOR: I have changed my relation, from the Alabama to the Arkansas Conference, I still feel identified with you; and would like to hear from you weekly. My appointment for the coming year is Fayetteville, Washington county. We have a pleasant and flourishing town, I am well pleased with my location; and hope my stay among the dear people will be both pleasant and profitable, to them as well as myself. I have been requested by a number of my friends, to give them my opinion of Arkansas. Allow me to say, through the Advocate, that during the time I have been in the State, I have seen a considerable portion of it, and, while there is not that degree of advancement which we find in the older States yet, I think, Arkansas is destined to occupy a prominent position among the States of our Union. She has resources which, when properly developed, will render her inferior to none.

I think an enterprising man can do well here. We have as good lands as any State can boast. Any kind of a location can be had, from the low-lands of the Mississippi, Arkansa, and White Rivers, to the more mountainous regions of the Northern counties. Land can be purchased at any price, from two to fifty dollars.

In a moral point of view, I have been informed by the older residents of the State, that within the past few years it has undergone a material change for the better. I think, if some of those persons who are so much prejudiced against Arkansas would pay us a visit, their opinions would greatly change. We need more preachers. Can't you send over some promising young men to help us? Our Conference is small, only numbering about forty-five preachers; consequently, our Circuits are too large to accomplish much good on them. If we had more preachers, we could divide our Circuits, and thereby render our labors more successful. I think you might spare several from some of your Eastern and Southern Conferences. What sayest you?

G. A. SHOEFFER.

THE INDIA STATES.

THE progress is civilization of several of the Indian tribes occupying Territories west of the States will soon bring up a new question for the decision of Congress. What shall be done with the Indian Governments or States that are now fully organized? Are they to be finally admitted into the Union? Is a new removal, at some future time to be made of the tribes civilized and christianized to make room for the Caucasian wave rolling west? Or are foreign governments to grow up in the very heart of the territory of the United States?

The Cherokees organized a regular government as early as 1839, copying the peculiar features of the constitution of the United States. The forms of legislation and the arrangement of the courts of justice so nearly resemble those of the States that, but for the tawny skins around him the traveler into the Cherokee territory would scarcely find any indication of having passed its boundaries.

This tribe is improved in all the arts of civilization to such a degree that many of its principal men would grace the refined society of any nation. In respect for the law, regard for popular education, and public morality, and the adoption of all elegancies advantages of civilization, the Cherokees have taken a position which forbids any forcible interference with their rights to the territory they occupy, to suit the conveniences or obviate the anomaly which the existence of their State now presents.

The Choctaws formed their government, taking the institutions of the United States for their model, in 1834. Imitating their more progressive white neighbors, last year they revised their constitution and adopted even the most minute forms of government and names of officers which prevail in each of the States of our confederacy.

The Chickasaws, lately separated from the Choctaws, have also followed the example of the two tribes mentioned, and thus the third government, with institutions identical with our own, exist on the borders of the South-western States, occupying territory ceeded to them by the General Government.

The Greeks are taking steps to create the lonrth independent organization of a State form of government, and will soon present an example of the influence of civilization, in subverting the customs and traditions of the race indigenous to the continent.

These Indian States are a strange anomaly. They are not a part of the Union, nor are they known in law to exist. The white man cannot pass through their territory without a permit, nor can he take with him when he is allowed to enter the Indian domain, certain articles of merchandise, even though the packages are unbroken and are simply designed for the New Mexican Market. This singular state of things cannot exist for many years without forcing itself upon the attention of Congress.

The tide of population is steadily rolling West. In less than ten years it will beat against the barriers now thrown up against its invasion of the retreat of these civilized Aborigines. Even now the emigration must cross these territories. These Indians States cannot exist when the Caucasian race presses upon them, as independent governments. The people civilized, and attached to the soil they have improved, cannot be removed to remoter wilds; nor without serious discontents, is it likely the United States can subject them to the condition of other territorial organizations, by an abrogation of the constitutions they have established for themseves. What then is to be done with these Indian States? It can not fail to give greater interest to this question that each of these Indian States have adopted the social institutions of the South. The Indians are slaveholders.

THE MISSING STEAMSHIP, INDIAN EMPIRE.

It appears that the steamship Indian Empire, of the Galway and New York line, which left New York on the 23d of October, and Halifax on the 29th, for Galway, had not been heard from up to the time the steamship City of Washington left Liverpool, on the 24th of November, when she was twenty-five days out from Halifax. It is therefore feared that she is lost. The Indian Empire left New York with 81 passengers, 14 of whom were in the first cabin, and a crew of 86 men, besides Capt. Courtenay and nine officers. She had also on board about 200 tons of cargo, consisting of cotton, tobacco and staves.

The names of her cabin passengers are.

Rev. Mr. Hennessy, Timothy Harrison and wife, E. J. Heeney, W. S. Keobill, Richard Wallace and wife, Hugh McDewell, Jane Kennedy, Patrick Dalton, E. Reyloff, P. Reardon, F. McGovern, Michael Clifford, D. Hennessy.

Passengers in the forward cabin: H. A. Manley, W. M. Creoney, Margaret Zallousky, Mary J. Evans, Anne Hughes, Mary Munoy, John Delany, Catherine Canon, Jeremiah Hactaell, wife and two children, Edward Canwee, Edward Peter Carroll, Jane Bradley, Timothy Kelly, Thos. Tiemann and wife, Anne McGlven, Mary Jane McGlven, George Greenfield and wife, James, Connor, Robert Reed, Deals Hannigan, William Kennedy, John Jennings, Jas. Kelly, George Eades, Michael McHansen, James Dinman, James Walsh, Joseph Bingham, Mary May, J. Grogham; John McGlven, Michael McLaughlin, Patrick McHealy, Michael Warde, Hugh Knox, Robert Scullen, Mary Ann Murphy, Mary Ann Lynch, James Anell, Mary Anall, Elizabeth Auell, Margaret Foley, Robert Clarke, Honora Clarke, Thomas Callins, Eugene Daly, Thomas Healey, John Kiemann, Elizebeth Kiemann, Ellen Kiemann, Wm. Kiemann, Mary Jane Kiemann, Tobias Boyce, Michael Doherty.

The names of her officers are: Captain Courtenay; Mr. Berry, 1st officer; Mr. Hastings, 2d officer; Mr. Coslett, 3d officer, Mr. Read, 4th officer; Mr. Gallimore, 5th officer; Dr. Partington, surgeon; Mr. Hewston, purser; Mr. Wagstaff, purser; and Mr. Ashley engineer.

The names of the men composing the crew of the vessel are not given. The total number of souls on board when the vessel left New York was 177, but besides these she may have taken some passengers from Halifax. She left Halifax about 6 o'clock on the evening of the 29th, and this is the last yet known concerning her.

HYMN OF MARSEILLAISE.

THE Marseillaise was inspired by genius, patriotism, youth, beauty, and champaigne. Rouget de Lisle was an officer of the garrison at Strasburg, and a native of Mount Jura. He was an unknown poet and composer. He had a peasant friend, named Dietrick, whose wife and daughters were the only critics and admirers of the soldier, poet's song. One night he was at supper with his friend's family, and they had only coarse bread and slices of ham. Dietrick looking sorrowfully at De Lisle, said "Plenty is not our feast, but we have the courage of a soldier's heart; I have still one bottle left in the cellar—bring it my daughter, and let us drink to liberty and our country!"

The young girl brought the bottle; it was soon exhausted, and De Lisle went staggering to bed; he could not sleep for the cold, but his heart was warm and full of the beating of genius and patriotism. He took a small clavicord and tried to compose a song; sometimes the words were composed first—sometimes the air. Directly he fell asleep over the instrument, and waking at daylight, wrote down what he had conceived in the delirium of the night. Then he waked the family, and sang his production; at first, the woman turned pale, and then wept, then burst forth in a cry of enthusiasm. It was the song of the nation and of terror.

Two months afterwards, Dietrick went to the scaffold, listening to the self same music, composed under his own roof, and under the inspiration of his last bottle of wine. The people sang it every where; it flew from city to city, in every public orchestra. Marseilles adopted the song at the opening and close of its clubs—hence the name "Hymn of the Marseillaise;" then it spread all over France. They sung it in their houses, in public assemblies, and in the stormy street convocation. De Lisle's mother hearing it, said to her son, "What is this revolutionary hymn, sung by bands of brigands, and with which your name is mingled?" De Lisle heard it, and shuddered as it sounded through the streets of Paris, rung from the Alpine passes, while he, a royalist, fled from the infuriated people, frenzied by his own words. France was a great amphitheatre of anarchy and blood, and De Lisle's song was the battle cry.

There is no national air that will compare with the Marseillaise in sublimity and power; it embraces the soft cadences full of the peasant's home, and the stormy clangor of silver and steel when an empire is overthrown; it endears the memory of the vine dresser's cottage, and makes the Frenchman, in his exile, cry "La belle France!" forgetful of the torch, and sword, and guillotine, which have made his country a spectre of blood in the eyes of nations. Nor can the foreigners listen to it, sung by a company of exiles, or executed by a band of musicians, without feeling that it is the phroach of battle and war.

"My dear colonel, I perceived you slept during sermon-time last Sunday; it is a very bad habit," said a worthy divine to one of his parisho

NATURAL EVIDENCES OF THE TRUTH OF REVEALED RELIGION.

Edward Everett, in his eloquent address recently delivered before the Agricultural Society at Buffalo, said: A celebrated sceptical philosopher of the last century—the historian Hume—thought to demolish the credibility of the Christian Revelation by the concise argument, "it is contrary to experience that a miracle should be true, but not contrary to experience that testimony should be false." The last part of the proposition, especially in a free country, on the eve of a popular election, is unhappily, too well founded; but in what book-worm's dusty cell, tapestried with the cobwebs of ages, where the light of real life and nature never forced its way—in what pedant's school, where deaf ears listen to the dumb lips, and blind followers are led by blind guides—did he learn that it is contrary to experience that a miracle should be true? Most certainly he never learned it from sower or reaper—from dumb animal or rational man connected with husbandry. Poor Red Jacket, off here on Buffalo Creek, he could have comprehended the terms of the proposition, would have treated it with scorn. Contrary to experience that phenomena should exist which we cannot trace to causes perceptible to the human sense, or conceivable by human thought! It would be much nearer the truth to say that within the husbandman's experience there are no phenomena which can be rationally traced to anything but the instant energy of creative power.

Did this philosopher ever contemplate the landscape at the close of the year, when seeds, and grains and fruits have ripened, and stalks have withered, and leaves have fallen, and Winter has forced her icy curb even into the roaring jaws of Niagara, and sheeted half a continent in glittering shroud, and all this teeming vegetation and organized life are locked in cold and marble obstruction; and after week upon week and month upon month have swept with sleet and chilly rain, and howling storm, over the earth, and rivetted their crystal bolts upon the door of nature's sepulchre—when the sun at length begins to wheel in higher circles through the sky, and softer winds to breathe over melting snow—did he ever behold the long hidden earth at length appear, and soon the timid grass peep forth, and anon Autumnal wheat begin to paint the field, and velvet leaflets to burst from purple buds, throughout the reviving forest; and then the mellow soil to open its fruitful bosom to every grain and seed dropped from the planter's hand, buried but to spring up again, clothed with a new mysterious being; and then, as more fervid suns inflame the air, and softer showers distil from the clouds, and gentler dews string their pearls on twig and tendril, did he ever watch the ripening grain and fruit, pendant from stalk, and vine, and tree; the meadow, the field, the pasture, the grove, each after his kind arrayed in myriad-tinted garments, instinct with circulating life—seven millions of counted leaves on a single tree, each of which is a system whose exquisite complication puts to shame the shrewdest cunning of the human hand; every planted seed and grain, which had been loaned to the earth, compounding its pious usury thirty, sixty, a hundred fold—all harmoniously adapted to the sustenance of living nature—the bread of a hungry world; here a tilled cornfield, whose yellow blades are nodding with the food of man; there an unplanted wilderness—the great Father's farm,—where he "who hears the raven's cry" has cultivated, with his own hand, his merciful crops of berries, and nuts, and acorns, and seeds, for the humber families of animated nature; the solemn elephant, the browsing deer, the wild pigeon, whose flattering caravan darkens the sky; the merry squirrel, who bounds from branch to branch, in the joy of his little life; has he seen all this, does he see it every year and month and day, does he live, and move and breathe, and think, in this atmosphere of wonder—himself the greatest wonder of all, whose smallest fibre and faintest pulsation is as much a mystery as the blazing glories of Orion's belt—and does he still maintain that a miracle is contrary to experience? If he has, and if he does, then let him go, in the name of Heaven, and say that it is contrary to experience that the August Power which turns the clods of the earth into the daily bread of a thousand millions souls could feed five thousand in the wilderness!

THE PRECIOUS BLOOD OF CHRIST.

Most of our young readers have read of the rock of Gibralter. It is a high, ragged rock, being connected with Spain only by a low, narrow isthmus. This isthmus, and the whole rock, are completely undermined, so as to form underground magazines and batteries.

Two soldiers were one night guarding the passage under this isthmus, when an officer returned from the main land, and demanded the watch-word. One of the sentinels had just become a Christian, and deeply absorbed in his meditations on the love of Christ, exclaimed, 'The precious blood of Christ.' Then immediately recollecting himself, he replied correctly. But his words, the precious blood of Christ, were not lost on his companion. They brought relief to his burdened heart, he found his Savior, and soon after being sent to Ceylon, he obtained a discharge from the army, and completed the translation of the Bible into the language of Ceylonese.

Ah! to how many aching hearts have these words, 'the precious blood of Christ,' brought relief! When the soul has been wrung with anguish on account of its sins, when it has quailed before its offended God, and nothing seemed left but despair—despair, how have those words, the precious blood of Christ, burst in like sunshine through the clouds, and diffused a peace passing all understanding! 'Tell us that again,' cried the Greenlanders, as the faithful Moravians preached to them of this precious blood. 'O, that is the very Savior I have all my life been seeking,' exclaimed the Hindoo, who for years had rolled himself on the ground, and now first heard of Jesus from the lips of Schwartz. The precious blood of Christ! How many sins has it covered, how many sorrows wiped away, how many tear-streams dried? What, but this, 'can do helpless sinners good?'

HUMO UNIUS LIBRI.

I am a creature of a day, passing through life as an arrow through the air. I am a spirit come from God, and returning to God; just hovering over the great gulf; till a few moments hence, I am no more seen. I drop into an unchangeable eternity! I want to know one thing—the way to heaven; how to land safe on that happy shore. God himself has condescended to teach the way; for this very end he came from heaven. He hath written it down in a book. O, give me that book! At any price, give the book of God! I have it. Here is knowledge enough for me. Let me be homo unius libri. Here then I am, far from the busy ways of men, I sit down alone—only God is here. In his presence I open, I read his book for this end; to find the way to heaven. Is there a doubt concerning the meaning of what I read? Does anything appear dark or intricate? I lift up my heart to the Father of lights. Lord, is it not thy word? "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God;" Thou "givest liberally, and upbraidest not." Thou hast said, "if any be willing to do thy will, he shall know." I am willing to do: let me know thy will. I then search after and consider parallel passages of Scripture, "comparing spiritual things with spiritual."—Wesley.

Those who forget God in their prosperity, will find themselves under a necessity of seeking him when they are in distress.

THE ART OF LIVING WITH OTHERS.

In the first place, if people are to live happily together, they must not fancy because they are thrown together now, that all their lives have been exactly similar up to the present time, that they started exactly alike, and that they are to be for the future of the same mind. A thorough conviction of the difference of men is the great thing to be assured of in social knowledge; it is to life what Newton's law is to astronomy. Sometimes men have a knowledge of it with regard to the world in general; they do not expect the outer world to agree with them in all points, but are vexed at not being able to drive their own tastes and opinions into those they live with. Diversities distress them. They will not see that there are many forms of virtue and wisdom. Yet we might as well say, "Why all these stars? why this difference? why not all one star?"

Many of the rules for people living together in peace follow from the above. For instance, not to interfere unreasonably with others, not to ridicule their tastes, not to question and re-question their resolves, not to indulge in perpetual comment on their proceedings, and to delight in their having other pursuits than ours, are all based upon a thorough perception of the simple fact that they are not we.

Another rule for living happily with others is, to avoid having stock objects of disputation. It mostly happens when people live much together that they come to have certain set topics, round which, from frequent dispute, there is such a growth of angry words, mortified vanity, and the like, that the original subject of difference becomes a standing subject of quarrel, and there is a tendency in all minor disputes to drift down to it.

Again, if people wish to live well together, they must not hold too much to logic, and suppose that every thing is to be settled by sufficient reason. Dr. Johnson saw this clearly with regard to married people when he said, "Wretched would be the pair above all names of wretchedness who should be doomed to adjust by reason every morning all the minute details of a domestic day." But the application should be much more general than he made it. There is no time for such reasonings, and nothing that is with them. And when we recollect how two lawyers or two politicians can go on contending, and that there is no end of one-sided reasoning on any subject, we shall not be sure that such contention is the best mode of arriving at truth; but certainly it is not the way to arrive at good temper.

If you would be loved as a companion, avoid unnecessary criticism upon those with whom you live. The number of people who have taken out judges' patents for themselves is very large in any society. Now, it would be hard for a man to live with another who was always criticising his actions, even if it were kindly and just criticism. It would be like living between the glasses of a microscope. But these self-elected judges, like their prototypes, are very apt to have the persons they judge brought before them in the guise of culprits. One of the most provoking forms of the criticism above alluded to is that which may be called criticism over the shoulder. "Had I been consulted"—"Had you listened to me"—"But you always will"—and such short scraps of sentences, may remind many of dissertations which we have suffered and inflicted, and of which we cannot call to mind any soothing effect.

Another rule, is not to let familiarity swallow up all courtesy. Many of us have a habit of saying to those with whom we live such things as we say about strangers behind their backs. There is no place, however, where real politeness is of more value than where we mostly think it would be superfluous. You may say more truth, or rather speak out, more plainly to your associates, but not less courteously, than you do to strangers.

Again, we must not expect more from the society of our friends and companions than it can give, and especially must not expect contrary things. It is somewhat arrogant to talk of traveling over other minds, (mind being, for what we know, infinite,) but still we become familiar with the upper views, tastes, and tempers of our associates; and it is hardly in a man to estimate justly what is familiar to him. In traveling along at night, as Hazlitt says, we catch a glimpse into cheerful-looking rooms, with light blazing in them, and we conclude involuntarily how happy the inmates must be. Yet there is heaven and hell in those rooms, the same heaven and hell that we have known in others. [Friends in Council.

RUSSIAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

We see it stated in various papers, that this Society, which was suppressed in 1825, has recently been revived by order of the present emperor. We are sorry that such a statement has been made, as we can find no authority for it, and it may do harm. Our correspondents in Russia give no such intelligence, and the Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society inquires, with some solicitude, what the tory means, believing it to have an American origin. There is a Bible agency at St. Petersburgh, which has long been allowed to distribute the Scriptures freely among the Protestant population. The American Bible Society has there published a second large edition of the Reval New Testament and Psalms for the Lutheran Church, without objection from any quarter. The present Emperor has shown such a friendliness towards the supply of the Protestants, as to remit the duties on them, both in German and English, to the amount of more than £400.

Through the Hon. Mr. Seymour, United States Minister at St. Petersburgh, a splendid copy of our largest Bible was presented to the Emperor, some months since, an acknowledgment of which was read, at the last meeting of the Board, from Prince Gorchakoff, by order of Alexander II, of a highly pleasing character. We have also received a request from the Secretary of the Russian Imperial Library, for some copies of our Indian Scriptures, which will cheerfully be sent.

We cannot but hope from these and other acts of his Majesty, that the Scriptures will, in due time, have free courses again in the Greek Church, and among all classes of that great empire. [Bible Society Record.

FORGIVENESS.

I cannot forgive this or that offence or injury until my forgiveness is asked, is a common remark. He has never asked my forgiveness, is by many regarded as a sufficient reason for withholding forgiveness.

To those who are instructed in the doctrines of the New Church, it is scarcely necessary to say that a sentiment of this sort involves the very essence of infernal hatred. Suppose the man has really injured you as you suppose, and should never ask your forgiveness, nor even be sorry for the wrong he has done, are you to withhold forgiveness forever? Suppose he whom you regard as your enemy really hates you, and is trying to injure you, and should even descend to the infernal world cherishing that malignant spirit, will that excuse you for continuing to withhold forgiveness from him? If you do so, you place yourself on the same plane with him, and descend to the same dark world of infernal loves and lusts.

Our Divine Father in Heaven forgives all and loves all. His forgiveness like his love, is infinate, and admits of no degrees. And all who become his children, must name and cherish some spirit, so far as their finite capacities will permit. We must forgive our enemies, even though they may not ask or desire our forgiveness.

What the World Admires.—Were a man every day to throw a purse of money, or even a single guinea into the sea, he would be looked upon as a madman, and his friends would soon confine him as such. But a man who throws away that which is of more value than gold, than mines—than the whole world—even his health, his peace, his time, and his soul—such a one is admired, esteemed, and applauded by the greatest part of mankind.

THE NEW MAN.

True conversion is the turning of the whole man to God; it is nothing less than the total change of the inward temper and frame of the heart and the external course of the life. It is not the cool confession, but the real forsaking of sin, in which we shall find mercy. Thy heart and will, love and delight, must turn sin out, and take Christ in, or thou art no gospel convert. A true convert loathes every sin, and himself for sin; but general confessions of sin are consistent with the full dominion of sin. Moreover, in all true conversion there is a positive turning unto God, a whole heart-choice for him, for your supreme and ultimate happiness and portion, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, as your Prince and Savior. And answerably, it will devote your whole life to his service and glory. And thus it brings forth the new man, and the whole frame of your life is marvellously changed and altered. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

It may be, you will think such a change as this impossible to be made upon you. And so it is, indeed, until the day of God's grace come. What! to forsake with loathing your old companions and courses, which you have so long lived with and delighted in; and to embrace with highest pleasure, strict godliness, which you have so loathed and ridiculed! This would be a strange alteration, indeed; but as strange as it seems to be, it will be effected in a moment, when God fulfils that gracious promise (as I hope he is now doing) to you, "A new heart, also, will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." Operations follows nature; when the heart of a beast was given to that great King Nebuchadnezzar, his dwelling was with the wild asses; they fed him with grass, like oxen. But let the spirit of a man return to him again, and he will blush to think of his brutish company and way of life; and so will you of yours, also. As marvellous a change as this has passed upon as eminent and notorious sinners as yourselves. The God of the spirits of all flesh can with ease and speed produce all this by that almighty power whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself. [Flavel.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS.

The London Athenæum has a fine review of a new book on "The Cathedrals of England and Wales, their History, Architecture and Traditions." We make the following extract therefrom:

"What a text for thinking Westminster Abby must be to an American! Here is a place where every typical man in English history has stood; where nearly every monarch has been crowned; where so many kings have been burried. What a place to read history———"to sit upon the ground,

And tell strange stories of the death of kings!"

"These Cathedrals give one a sense of the Titanic inert mass of steadfast conservatism (good and bad) of the English character. There they are, with their obsolete miserere, abrogated alters, deserted nuns' walks, unused graves; too large for an irreverent choir, a lazy bishop and absentee canons—yet still firm, sure, fast-set, exhaling from every stone the myrrhy perfume of hygene incense and the angels still smiling from their corbels at the good work; the atlas demons still groaning, like wall-bats and crouching things of night, beneath the purgatory burden of thirteenth century arches; a great echo of prayer and praise perpetually rising heavenward from the pile, as it has without intermission, for say five hundred years. We change, but they remain. They live out all our miserable strifes and foolish raptures; see us go the way of the weeds on their spouts and parapets; but still, with ascetic determination, resist time and praise God."

CHRISTIANS THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

The Lord Jesus Christ calls his disciples "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world," "a dew from the Lord"—phrases that express their blessing to the world. What light, and dew, and salt are to the earth, that is a good man to the community in which he lives. He is a blessing to others in the highest sense. A man may do good to others, and yet not be competent to bless them spiritually. It is not so great a good to mankind to contribute to their mental as to their moral good. An unbeliever may bless them largely as a teacher of literature and science, but the saint instructs them in divine things. He helps to save the soul, which is the greatest of all blessings. He who saves a single soul has accomplished more than he would to gain the riches of the whole world. Many an humble Christian who has lived and died in obscurity, has rendered a better service to mankind than hundreds of heroes and statesmen who have been highly honored. Much as a mere hero may have done for his country, and indispensable as were his services, there is no doubt that the good accomplished by some humble pastors, as well as some pious laymen, is far more valuable in the sight of God, because jewels were added thereby to the crown of Christ.

A SURE RECORD.

There is no surer way for men to discern their names written in the Book of Life, but by reading the work of sanctification in their own hearts. I desire no miraculous voice from heaven, no extraordinary signs, or unscriptural notices and information on this matter. Lord, let me but find my heart obeying thy calls, my will obediently submitting to thy commands; sin my burden, and Christ my desire; I never crave a fairer or surer evidence of thy electing love to my soul. And if I had an oracle from heaven, an extraordinary messenger from the other world, to tell me thou lovest me, I have no reason to credit such a voice, whilst I find my heart wholly sensual, averse from God, and indisposed to all that is spiritual. [Flavel.

Promise.—Promises are like the clothes we wear. If there be heat in the body to warm them, they warm us; but if there be none, they give none. So where there is living faith, the promise will afford warm comfort; but on the dead, unbelieving heart, it lies cold and ineffectual; it has no more effort than pouring a cordial down the throat of a corpse. Again, the promise do not threw out comfort as the fire throws out heat; for then we should only need to go to them in order to be warmed: their heat is like the fire in the flint, which must be struck out by force, and this force can only be applied by faith.—Gurnall's Christian Armor.

Man's Life—Its Source.—The life of all, whether good or evil, is continually given by influx from the Lord. This life is, in its origin and nature, one and the same. It is, in its nature, perfectly good, and its effort and tendency are to lead to all good and away from all evil. But man has the power of acting as of himself; and in the free exercise of this power, he either co-operates with the internal effort which is given him, and yields himself to its influence, and acknowledges his dependence, or he resists this effort and perverts the divine influence, and changes the life in himself into evil.

Winter and Night in Heaven.—The Lord is acknowledged in Heaven as the sun of spritual life; as the source of every thought, every affection and every power; to him are always turned every eye and every heart; and as there must be alternations through the whole course of human existence, so there is something of winter and summer, of day and night, even in Heaven, and it is winter and night there when a thought of self cast its shadow over the soul.

So They Say.—"They" will say anything and every thing mean and despicable. "They" say things that break up families, crush hearts, blight hopes, and smother worthy aspirations. Whenever a man circulates a slander and gives "they" as his authority, turn your back upon him. He means no good.

ENGLISH SOCIETY A CENTURY OR TWO SINCE.

Mr. Massey's History of England during the reign of George the III. contains a chapter embracing many interesting details respecting English society in those days, which we find worked into an article in Houschold Words. The picture which it displays of English manners of that day, fully justifies Thackeray's sketches of the Four Georges, and the revelations of his "Virginians." In the time of George the III., according to Mr. Massey, supple family parsons, like the Rev. Mr. Sampson, with bottle and pack of cards, filled the greater portion of the livings then kept up by the wealthy nobles. Those clergymen, who did not stoop to such grossness of conduct, hunted for preferment at the levees of great men, or wrote political pamphlets and electioneered for their employers, and by their loose morals cast discredit upon the church in which they obtained deaneries and bishoprics. Hence, religion was openly ridiculed in polite society, where it was unfashionable to treat sacred things with respect. The King's government was systematically carried on by Parliamentary corruption, and the King himself did not hesitate to personally bribe his own subjects, who thronged his levies to dispose of their services.

The beau of the time of Anne and the Hanover succession was painted and perfumed like a woman. He took a woman's time over his toilet, wore silks, brocades, lace, embrodery and jewels. He seldom stirred abroad on foot, except for a turn in the Mall, and if he had only to cross the street, from his lodgings to a tavern, he was conveyed in a chair. His time, away from home, was spent in gallantry and gaming. He read plays, novels, lampoons and tracts in ridicule of religion, and condemned educated men as prigs and pedants. 'England's foremost statesmen, as Walpole, Lord Sandwich, and Sir Francis Dashwood, were notorious for their profligacy, and yet, were respected and honored none the less. It was a characteristic of the times.

Gaming was the great vice of England during a large part of the eighteenth century. Cards, dice and betting, engaged people in all ranks and all ages. At one of the proprietary clubs the lowest stake was fifty pounds, and it was a common thing for a gentleman to lose or win ten thousand pound in an evening. Sometimes a whole fortune was lost at a sitting. Every fashionable assembly was a gaming house. When a lady received company card tables were provided for all the company (large parties had not then come into vogue,) and even where there was dancing, cards formed the principal part of the entertainment. Ladies often contracted debts of honor in fine gentlemen, larger than they could pay—larger than they could confess to a father or to a husband. All this leaded to evil.

During the latter part of the last century, new diversions were invented for the pleasure seekers who thronged to London, gaming having become too expensive a luxury for mixed society, and Ranelagh, Vauxhall, Mrs. Cornelys' and the Pantheon, became fashionable places of resort. Of these places we have the following account:

"Ranelagh supplied, at Chelsea, spacious assembly rooms with a fine hand. The large area of the building was thronged as a promenade, made somewhat select by the price of admission. There were boxes opened on the garden for those who desired more strictly select society. To Ranelagh, visitors repaired to see the world of London, dignified clergymen, who did not venture into other public assemblies, saw nothing objectionable in its rotunda. Vauxhall, from the time of Queen Anne to an advanced period of the reign of George the III., was a fashionable sink of infamy. The lessee, in 1764, made an attempt to check the wickedness that made it scandulous, if not unsafe, for any decent woman to enter the garden. He closed the secluded walks and lit up the recesses; but the young gentlemen of fashion, resented this invasion of their privileges, tore down the barriers and put out the new lights. At Almack's, people of quality assembled for high play. In Soho Square, Mrs. Cornelys kept a house of an exclusive character, but of questionable reputation. Masquerades and operas—were the ostensible amusements, assignations the real business of the establishment. Worst of all, was an assembly called the Coterie, a mixed club of the most fashionable ladies and gentleman; the ladies balloting for the gentlemen and the gentlemen for the ladies."

Mr. Macoy declares from the accession of the House of Hanover to the end, at least, of the first ten years of George the Third, the depravity of English manners was not excelled in the decline of the Roman Empire, or in the decay of the old French monarchy: Marriages of convenience were then the rule. Parents concluded them between each other as business contracts. The power of a father in the disposal of his daughter was a general rule, absolute. This led to runaway matches, and in one year three thousand clandestine marriages were solemnized at a single chapel in May Fair. We copy one more sketch in full:

"London Streets, in the early days of George the Third, were infested with bold thieves, who did not scruple to stop carriages after dark in the public thoroughfares. Drunken men were constantly to be met; no well-dressed person could walk far without receiving insult or injury; a walk of a mile out of town could not be taken, even in the daytime, without some risk of being waylaid. In the streets the narrow footway was until 1761, separated from the carriage road only by a line of unconnected stakes or posts set at wide intervals, and it was frequently blocked up with chairs, wheelbarrows, or obstructions placed there for the direct purpose of annoyance. Carmen and hackney coachmen considered it good sport to splash clean people from head to foot. If a terrified woman or bewildered stranger slipped into the kennel, there were shouts of triumph and delight. In the roadway the confusion was yet greater. There being no regulations for the traffic, dead-locks and stoppages arose. Loud altercations were then swollen by the chorus about carriages of cripples and beggars, and if there were ladies in a family coach, some street vocalist was likely to begin a filthy song of which the refrain would be taken up by humorous bystanders. Mobs were common; foreigners were habitually insulted; sometimes a pickpocket was hauled to the pump; sometimes a man came by, shrieking under the lash at the cart tail."

If any one doubts that social life is becoming purer as the world grows older, let him compare the times of George the Third with those of Queen Victoria.

A REMARKABLE COUNTRY.

In point of natural curiosities and material resources, the country of Napa, in the State of California, is probably equaled by no other country of similar extent of territory in the world. In one portion of it is a collection of springs, covering a space of several acres, which have a temperature sufficiently high to boil eggs in eight minutes, and make tea in the space of three minutes. The water is slightly impregnated with alkali, and has a wonderful faculty of cleaning the skin. The baths are much sought for. Twenty-five miles from these springs, high up in the mountains, are the remarkable geysers, surrounded by a wild romantic scenery of a volcanic nature. Not far distant are some recently discovered borax lakes; the largest about two hundred acres in extent. The waters are strongly impregnated with borax, and are supposed to contain quantities sufficient to supply the world. From this lake, a mile North, is a sulphur bank, covering over thirty acres, and thirty feet thick, sufficiently pure for all purposes. The importance of these two latter discoveries may be inferred from the fact that the annual exportation of brimstone from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic States amounts to 20,000,000 pounds, worth $170,000; and of borax 80,000 pounds, worth $154,000. Sixteen miles from Napa city is a collection of sulphur springs, which are much resorted to for medical purposes. Cochineal, similar to that found in Mexico and Brazil, has been recently found in large quantities, and immense beds of volcanic glass have been discovered in the vicinity of Clear lake and other parts of the country. In addition to all these advantages, the soil of the valley of Napa river is almost perfect, rendering the country one of the Eden spots of California.

Bishop Early, we regret to learn, has been lying ill in Memphis. He returned from his Western tour of Conferences much debilitated by exposure, travel, and official labor, and is, at this writing, with his son, Dr. Early, a citizen of Memphis.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORTS OF THE P. M. GENERAL AND THE SEC. OF WAR.

We present the following items from the Report of the Post Master: After alluding to the service as now performed on the new route for conveying the New Orleans and New York mails via Virginia, Tennessee and Mississippi, by railroad, and the fact that, after 1st July next, the service between New York and New Orleans is stipulated to be performed within four days, the Postmaster General again expresses his favorable views of the proposed mail service between the two great cities by steamer, from New York to Fernandina, Fa., theace by railroad to Cedar Key, and thence by steamer to New Orleans, but says no progress has been made in the negotiations opened with the department on the subject.

The department has received information which makes it certain that in a very short time the mails from St. Louis to New Orleans will go through in two days, by railroad.

The Tehuantepec route, and its advantages to the country at large, are dwelt upon at length. The successful opening of the route, on the 27th October last, is mentioned, and the Postmaster General says: "The department but yields to this universal temper of the age (the demand for the most direct passage in the shortest possible time) when it establishes this line from New Orleans by Tehuantepec to California. The passengers from the Southern and Southwestern States, who desire to go to California, will no longer be required to go hundreds of miles in the wrong direction in order to start for California, but, going to their own natural emporium, New Orleans, start out direct, and make the journey in nearly half the time and with half the expense now required. So of all correspondence to and from the same region of country."

The raising of the letter postage to five cents, the abolition of the discount allowed for the quarterly or yearly prepayment of newspaper and pamphlet postage, and a further curtailment of the much abused franking privilege, are strongly urged, if Congress does not wish the estimated surplus expenditure to be met by the general treasury. But the Postmaster General thinks the exact principle of justice to be followed in legislation touching his department is, that "in conducting its ordinary business of transmitting correspondence the department should be thrown entirely on its own revenues; but whenever any service, on the sea or on the land, is required of it, mainly if not exclusively for national objects—such as the extension of our commerce, the spread of our population, and the development of the various resources of our country; the cost thereof, in all fairness, ought to be borne by the national treasury."

The whole number of post offices in the United States, on the 30th of June last, was 27,977. The increase in the last fiscal year, after deduction of 730 discontinued, is 1391. The number of postmasters appointed in that time was 8284, of which 4595 to fill vacancies occasioned by resignations, 998 by removal, 278 by death, 292 by change of names and sites, and 2121 by new offices.

On the 30th June last, there were 8296 mail routes in operation, with 7044 contractors, and 260,603 miles of length of routes, of which 24,431 railroad, 17,043 steamboat, 53,700 coach, and 165,429 inferior grades. The total annual transportation of mails was 78,765,491 miles, costing $7,795,418.

From the Report of the Secretary of War, we select the following items: Some important explorations and surveys of the interior have been completed, and are very interesting. That of Lieut. Ives presents the curious discovery that the waters of the Colorado river, in all their ramifications, or forks, creeks or rivers, make their way to the main stream through canons or clefts in the solid rock from one thousand to six thousand feet deep, with perpendicular faces of solid rock. He urges a further exploration of the country North and West of the Black Hills, towards the sources of the Missouri, and expresses the belief that a practicable connection can be made between the waters of the Missouri and those of the Oregon, with a portage of not over four hundred miles.

The Secretary treats the adaptation of the camel to military operations on the plains as fully demonstrated, and thinks it would be a wise economy in Congress to authorize the purchase of a thousand camels for the transportation uses of the army.

FROM THE EASTERN COAST OF AFRICA.

The Providence Journal has the following intelligence by the schooner E. H. Miller, which left Quillimane, River Zambezi, on the 11th of August last:

Dr. Livingstone had ascended the river with his small steamer. The disturbances among the adjoining tribes were extensive, and a force of three hundred native and forty European soldiers, with nearly all the principal European residents had, on the 8th of July embarked and ascended the river for the purpose of subduing them. The new Governor arrived at Quillimane in May, and, notwithstanding an attack of fever, started with his soldiers, as above stated. News had been received on the 5th of August that a battle was fought at Chupanza, on the Zambezi, in which the rebels were beaten.

This war has continued one year, and it is still quite uncertain when it can be terminated. It originated in consequence of the seizure of three native slave dealers by the Portuguese Government, and their removal to an imprisonment in the fort of Mozambique. The surrounding tribes are incensed by the seizure and imprisonment of these traders, and threaten constant war until they are set at liberty. Thousands of slaves during the past two or three years have been taken from the Portuguese possessions on the east coast of African by French vessels and carried to Bourbon, under pretence of free-laborer and coolie laws. This has been done under forms of law, but is nothing less than the slave trade in disguise. Latterly the English Government has interfered, and an English Consul sent out to watch the slave trade, has stimulated the Government to some efforts in support of the laws. Some six months ago a vessel of six hundred tons was seized north of Mozambique with one hundred and twenty slaves on board and waiting for more. The captain and crew were imprisoned in the fort and the vessel was condemned.

ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTS VS. CELIBACY.

An extraordinary memorial has been addressed by 507 Austrian priests to the author of the Concordant, the Cardinal Priace Archbishop of Vienna. In this document the lower Catholic clergy put forth their grievances in language the like of which has not been heard since the days of the Reformation. The memorial begins with a rough onslaught on the absolutistic prerogatives of the episcopacy. "This Concordat," it says, "has conferred upon the bishops many new privileges and a large increase of power; but the priest has to bear the whole odium of the indignation of the moral resistance which the hated Convention has created among the people." "There is no doubt," the document continues in a subsequent paragraph, "but that our religion has become the object of universal derision. The Concordat has aroused the wrath of the most moderate men with respect to the antiquated, medieval ordinances of the Church; and the indignation against the executors of those ordinances becomes louder and more universal from day to day. This sentiment is the more dangerous as it spreads among the main body of the people." The memorial complains of the wretched pay (sometimes less than that of a cab-driver) of the lower clergy; in consequence of which they are driven to the collection of fees and taxes, which are the source of the most disgraceful and disgusting conflicts with the people. Religion is thus made to appear in the light of an insufferable burden, and agitators increase the ill-feeling by directing attention, not to the penury of the lower clergy, but to the luxury and abundance in which the bishops are revelling. In the next place, the petitioners lay bare the laziness of monkhood, and demand the abolition of these begging-orders, and the appropriation of their revenues to the maintenance of the really working priests.

A more important demand follows. It is for the abolition of celibacy, on the ground that the impossibility of entering into the married state renders the priest the victim of suspicions, of sneering and contempt, and produces luxity amongst the clergy, thus rendering them contributors to the moral dissolution which is invading even the popular classes. In conclusion, the petitioners demand that "such reforms should be introduced as to make the lower clergy no longer appear in the odious light of oppressors of the poorer classes; and that the priests, by the abolition of the law of celibacy, should be restored to the common ties of family and humanity. If this is not done," they assert "all our influences will entirely disappear; the Catholic religion will be despised, hierarchy be totally overthrown, and the state become the foot-ball of ceaseless attacks and complications." They express, too, the significant hope that they may not be driven to expect their safety from the revolutionary party. [Evening Post.

TEA AND COFFEE.

Taking into account the habits of the people, tea and coffee, for supper and breakfast, add to human health and life, if a single cup be taken at either meal, and is never increased in strength, frequency, or quantity. If they were mere stimulants, and were taken thus in moderation and with uniformity, they would, in time, become absolutely inert, or the system would become so habituated to their employment, as to remain in the same relative position as them, as if they had never been used; and consequently, as to themselves, they had better never have been used, as they are so liable to abuse. But science and fact unite in declaring them to be nutritious, as well as stimulant; hence, they will do a new good to the system every day, to the end of life, just as bread and fruits do; hence, we never get tired of either. But the use of bread and fruits is daily abused by multitudes, and dispepsia and cholera morbus result; yet we ought not to forego their employment on that account, nor should we forego the use of tea and coffee because their inordinate use gives neuralgia and other ailments.

But the habitual use of tea and coffee, at the last and first meals of the day, has another high advantage, is productive of incalculable good in the way of averting evils.

We will drink at our meals, and if we do not drink these, we will drink what is worse—cold water, milk, or alcoholic mixtures. The regular use of these last will lead the young to drunkenness; the considerable employment of simple milk, at meals, by sedentary people—by all, except the robust—will either constipate, or render bilious; while cold water largely used, that is, to the extent of a glass or two at a meal, especially in cold weather, attracts to itself so much of the heat of the system, in raising said water to the temperature of the body—about one hundred degrees—that the process of digestion is arrested; in the meanwhile, giving rise to a deathly sickness of stomach, to twisting pains, to vomitings, purgings, and even to cramps, to fearful contortions, and sudden death; which things would have been averted, had even the same amount of liquid, in the shape of simple hot water, been used. But any one knowing these things, and being prejudiced against the use of tea and coffee, would subject himself to be most unpleasantly stared at, and questioned, if not ridiculed, were he to ask for a cup or glass of hot water. But, as tea and coffee are now universal beverages, are on every table, and every body is expected to take one or the other as a matter of course, they are unwittingly the means of safety and of life to multitudes. They save life, where a glass of cold water would have destroyed it. So that the use of these beverages is not merely allowable, it is politic, it is a necessity.

THE EMPIRE OF ANAM.

The Paris Moniteur de l'Armee publishes some interesting details relative to the Empire of Anam, against which a joint French and Spanish expedition is now in operation. The Empire of Anam comprises three great and separate divisions—Cochin China, properly so called, with Tsiampa, Cambodia and Tonkin. Cambodia and Tonkin are each governed by a viceroy. Sai-goag is the capital of Cambodia, which is divided into six provinces. Ketcho is the capital of Tonkin, which is divided into fifteen provinces. Ketcho is the largest, most populous and most civilized town in the Empire. Cambodia is the richest and most fertile of the three divisions, and is regarded, not without reason, as the granary of the Empire. The government of Anam is absolute and tyrannical. The present Emperor, Tu-Duc, ascended the throne in 1847. He is the second son of the Emperor Thien-Tri, and he usurped the throne to the prejudice of his elder brother, through the intrigues of his father's Prime Minister, whose daughter he married. His is a well-educated Prince, but cruel. His councils are directed by the retrograde party, composed of fanatical Mandarins, who stop at no crime in order to obtain their ends. The Emperor Tu Duc is the last descendant of the Nguyen dynasty, which has reigned since the year 1600. The most distinguished sovereign of that dynasty was the Emperor Gia-Long, who died in 1820. He was an enlightened and just Prince, under whose sway the Anam Empire attained a high degree of prosperity. He invited foreigners to his court, and protected the arts, sciences, commerce and agriculture. It was at the commencement of that reign that he signed a treaty with the French Government, transferring to them a valuable territory, in which the Bay of Touralne is situated, where the troops under the command of Admiral Rigault de Genouilly were to land. The Spanish division, from the Philippine Islands, which is to act with the French, is composed of Tagals—that is, pure Indians of the island of Luzon, the largest and most Northern of the Philippine Islands.

The Tagal, whose name is not much known in Europe, is copper-colored, with glossy hair, flat nose and wide mouth. He is well-shaped, of the ordinary size, and slight figure. He is active, courageous, and sober, being satisfied with boiled rice for food, and sugar and water for drink. The Tagal is a good, obedient soldier when well commanded, a fervent Catholic, but vindictive when ill-treated, and always ready to avenge any ill-treatment when practised on his comrades. He can take a turn at any work, build a house, manufacture a fire-arm, and make his own clothes. He plants cotton, dyes and spins it, and is, moreover, an excellent seaman. Fighting besids the French troops, whose gallantry General Nozagary, the Governor of the Philippine Islands, eulogized in an order of the day, the Tagal will, it is expected, double his exertions and distinguish himself.

"With the Indian," says Mr. Mallett, "you must have bread in one hand and a cane in the other; that is, be just, and treat him well; give him what he requires, but chastise him when he deserves to be punished."

WOMEN. NATURAL ORATORS.

This passage occurs in a work recently published abroad on the "Art of Public Speaking:" Women naturally speak better than men. They express themselves more easily, more vividly; with more arch simplicity, because they feel more rapidly, more delicately. Hence the loquacity with which they are reproached, and which is an effect of their constitution and temperament. Hence there are so many women who write in an admirable and remarkable manner, although they have studied neither rhetoric nor logic, and even without knowing grammar or orthography. They write as they speak; they speak pretty much as the birds sing—and their language has the same charm. Add to this the sweetness of their organ, the flexibility of their voice, and the variety of their intonations, according to the feeling which animates them; the mobility of their physiognomy, which greatly increases the effect of words, the picturesqueness of their gestures, and in short the gracefulness of their whole exterior; thus, although not destined for orators by their sex or social position, they have all the power of the orator, and all his success in their sphere, and in the circle of their activity. For none better know how to touch, persuade and fascinate, which, I think, is the end and the perfection of eloquence.

The Abolition of Serfdom.—The Emperor Alexander had addressed the nobility of Moscow in grave and severe terms on the apathy they have displayed in reference to the abolition of Serfdom. A deputation of the nobility of Moscow having been introduced to the Czar, in the Kremlin, he said that it was impossible to thank them for their co-operation. They had neither been the first, nor the second, nor the third, to answer to his appeal. This had grieved him profoundly. The eyes of Russia were, he said, fixed on Moscow. He asked them to give him the opportunity of defending them. "I am," he said, "attached to the nobility; but I desire the general good."

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

Ms. Editor: Conference has just closed its seventy-first annual Session, held in the city of Charleston: Bishop Andrews, Presiding. The Session just closed, was a most harmonious and very important Session. Besides the anniversary of our Historical, Sunday School, and Missionary Societies—at each of which, there was much to interest and profit—at the two last of which, very generous collections were made. We also inaugurated a Book and Tract Society, upon the plan recommended by R. Abbey, Financial Secretary. We purchased from G. R. McFerrin, General Book Agent, the entire stock and real estate of the Charleston Depository, with the Southern Christian Advocate; and rejoice in having retained R. H. Myers, as both editor and agent. But a short time after the adoption of the Constitution of the Book and Tract Society, $7,500 was subscribed to its capital stock, to shares of $100 each. Our Missionary collections amounted the past year, to upwards of $27,000. Below you have a list of the appointments. F. Asbury Mood.

A FEJEEAN EXECUTION.

The Rev. Thomas Williams, who was thirteen years a missionary among the Fejee Islanders, thus describes their mode of executing criminals: Young men are deputed to inflict the appointed punishment, and are often messengers of death. Their movements are sudden and destructive, like a tropical squall. The protracted solemnity of public execution is in civilized countries is here unknown. A man is often judged in his absence, and executed before he is aware that sentence has been passed against him. Sometimes a little form is observed, as in the case of the Vasu to Vuna. This man conspired against the life of Tuikilakila; but the plot was discovered, and the Vasu brought to meet death at Somosomo. His friends prepared him, according to the custom of Fejee, by folding a large new mast about his loins, and oiling and blacking his body as if for war. A necklace and a profusion of ornaments at his elbows and knees completed the attire. He was then placed standing, to be shot by a man suitably equipped. The shot failed, when the musket was exchanged for a club, which the executioner broke on the Vasu's head; but neither this blow, nor a second from a more ponderous weapon, succeeded in bringing the young man to the ground. The victim now ran towards the spot where the king sat, perhaps with the hope of a reprieve; but was felled by a death-blow from the club of a powerful man standing by. The slain body was cooked and eaten. One of the baked thighs the king sent to his brother, who was principal in the plot, that he might "taste how sweet his accomplice was, and eat of the fruits of his doings." This is a fair sample of a Fejecan public execution. Those who are to die are never, so far as I know, bound in any way. A Fejecan is implicitly submissive to the will of his chief. The executioner states his errand, to which he replies, "whatever the king says, must he done."

A Curiosity.—A nail about the size of an eight-penny was handed to us a few days since, which was excavated from a hard limestone rock twenty or thirty feet below the surface of the earth. The rust had eaten it in two, not far from the point, and it was made in the fashion of the nails of the present day. How did it manage to get itself embedded in a rock many feet below the top of the ground? This is a question for scientific men to answer. Perhaps it fell from Noah's ark, when this part of the world was covered with "a waste of waters," instead of fields of cotton and corn, or, perhaps, it is of a later date, and was dropped by DeSoto's band.—Dallas Gazette.

Tehuantepec Railroad.—The San Francisco Herald regards the gratifying success of the Tehuantepec company, as the most important event which has yet occurred in the intercourse between the Atlantic and the Pacific States, and that one of its immediate results will be to create a still greater anxiety for the construction of a transcontinental railroad.

A Historical Event.—The John Street Church, the oldest M. E. Church, dedicated October the 31st, 1768. Its 90th anniversary was well and duly celebrated. Dr. Bangs, the Nestor of the Church, who was ordained at the alter of the first church, and who dedicated the second, was present, and took part in the exercises.

Fruit of Experience.—My trouble on account of selfishness and impurity drove me to seek reconcilition with God before whom I trembled, and thus led me to recognize and lay hold on revelation. Christianity was not forced upon me, but I upon Christianity, I was thrown by an inward necessity into the arms of the Savior.....The God of Rationalism baffles conception far more than does any mystery of Christianity.

The Austrian Army.—It was understood that important reductions were about to be made in the Austrian army.

Interference with Mexico.—Several large commercial houses in Havre had petitioned the European governments to interfere in the affairs of Mexico.

New Government of Cuba.—Advices from Madrid state that Senor Ros Olano has been appointed Governor of Cuba.

England, France and Nicaragua.—Despatches, it is said, have been sent to sir Gore Ouseley announcing that the British and French Governments have agreed to support the independence of Nicaragua.

DOMESTIC.

Savannah, Dec. 13.—The Savannah Republican of this morning reaffirms most positively that the schooner Wanderer has landed a cargo of Africans on the coast near Brunswick, Ga., as reported on Saturday.

The District attorney, Joseph Grannhl, has been on the alert, and arrested three men on Saturday, who are believed to be implicated in the affair. The names of the men arrested are Juan Bele Rajesta, N. A. Browu, and Miguel Aguirvi alias Rajres Harling, from New Orleans. The District Attorney refused bail for them, as under the law it is a case of piracy, and the prisoners were committed to jail to await their trial.

Mr. Granahl and the District Marshal are using every exertion to elicit information in regard to the charges made against them.

The District Marshal sent a steam tug to Brunswick to seize and tow the Wanderer to Savannah, but the shipmaster in command of her refused to give her up.

It is reported that the Collector of the port of Darien stated, that the Wanderer had no appearance of having had slaves aboard.

The Republican says it is rumored that the Africans were landed on Jekyl Island, and that a steamer, which left Savannah on Friday, took all one hundred and fifty negroes from that Island and conveyed them up the river past Suvaunah, to a river plantation, from whence they were scattered through the country.

The Wanderer hails from St. Helena. She is without regular papers, as the United States have no Consul there, but she has informal papers from the native officers of St. Helena, without their seal.

The cargo of the Wanderer is supposed to have consisted of three hundred and fifty negroes.

New York, Dec. 12.—By the arrival of the steamship Moses Taylor, from Asphwall for this port, we have intelligence that Flag Officer Molutosh, of the United States Squadron, remonstrated against the conduct of the British naval officers on the San Juan Station, in boarding the steamship Washington, &c., and informed the British commander that no further visits would be permitted..... Letters brought by the United States steam frigate Niagara, from the West coast of Africa, state that the French Emperor's free emigration system is carried out with perfidiously on the coast, and that French agents and officers did not scruple to take free citizens from Liberia, provided they could induce them to leave. Trouble was apprehended in consequence.

Washington, Dec. 11.—It is well understood that a strong naval force will soon be ordered to the Gulf..... The President, it is said, is much annoyed by the conduct of the British naval officers in boarding the steamship Washington.

A Remonstrance.—The Washington States and the Washington correspondent of New York Journal of Commerce both state that our Government has remonstrated against the policy of Great Britain and France, in sending a powerful naval force to Central America, as a palpable violation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, as well as no interference with American interests in that quarter.

The Tehuantepec Route.—The last return of the Quaker City from Minalitlan, bringing eighty passengers from California who came over the strange route from Ventosa, has tended to open still wider the eyes, not only of our citizens, but those of the country generally to its great advantages over every other one now in existence. The Californians have been taken by surprise by the feats already accomplished, and there is no wonder that they are excited and enthusiastic about it. We predict that the enthusiasm will continue to increase with every passage of the Quaker City. The Company we trust will see the necessity of placing steamships upon the Pacific end of the route with as little delay as practicable, and also of greatly increasing the capacity of the land transit from Suchil to Ventosa, so as to be able to take to and fro the swarming hundreds that will present themselves for passage. Saving a whole week from the ocean voyage will make up a good many passengers, who will not be long in discovering that to go round by Panama, when they can take a short, easy and beautiful "nigh cut," will be to get decidedly upon the "wrong track." After the practical demonstration that has been made and is making as to the advantages of this route, we cannot doubt that the Company will find it easy to obtain all the means necessary to do every thing requisite to transact the business that will offer, however largely or rapidly it may augment. We trust the Company will act with the energy that the occasion demands, and from its past perseverance, good faith and pluck, we cannot doubt it.

LOCAL.

Mortuary.—The returns from the cemetaries show only one hundred and twenty-five interments for the week.

Dealers North and South, in some respects. This was proved by a young clerk in a levee clothing store, in the Second District. He took familiar liberties with a passing lady. The lady went after a policeman, took him to the store, and introduced him to the "counter-jumper." The youngster stood up to the officer pretty stiffly, and said he would like to see him undertake to arrest him on a Sunday! The officer was about to "loose him, when the proprietor of the store appeared and tried to talk the matter down. He said his clerk was just out from New York, and would not have been guilty of this indiscretion had he been familiar with the manners and customs of New Orleans. The officer advised the lady to defer the matter till to day, and then have him arrested under the recorder's warrant. The store keeper became responsible for his clerk's appearance, and the matter was deferred; the lady intimating that it would afford her great satisfaction to introduce to him her husband with a cowhide.

Bright-Upset and Narrow Escape.—The buggy of Dr Chaille, driven by a boy, came in contact with a dray on Common street, the boy was pitched out but was not injured; the horse broke loose and made for Dubois & Mish's stables. We did not ascertain whether the draymen was at fault or not; but we trust if he was that Dr. Chaille will be able to give him a lesson.

Arrested.—Lieut. Gastinel arrested three Sicilians on suspicion of being concerned in some of the late audacious burglaries. They were found at the Hotel de Marine. The first had in his possession three pairs of shoes, a double-barrelled pistol, a dirk, a bayonet, a pair of black merino pants, two keys, a knife, $23 55 in cash, and a silver snuff-box; the second had five silver spoons, six silver forks, two pairs patent-leather boots, five pairs calf skin boots, one pair Congress shoes, two pistols, $67 30 in silver; and $23 in gold; the third had keys, knives, a watch, etc.; the fourth, had two boxes cigars and a piece of silk for vesting. Mr. Sinclair recognized the vesting as a portion of the property stolen from him. The cigars were identified as a portion of those stolen from Valls.

COMMERCIAL.

Tuesday Evening, December 14, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	7 @ 8	Good Middling	11⅞@12⅛
Ordinary	8½@10	Middling Fair	12⅜@12½
Good Ordinary	10½@10¾	Fair	— @—
Low Middling	11 @11¼	Good Fair	— @—
Middling	11⅛@11⅜	Good and Fine	— @—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 11th inst., furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business: As has been the case for some time past the operations of the week have been mainly confined to three or four leading staples—Cotton, Sugar and Molasses. The first of these, aided in some degree by a slight falling off in the rates of freight, has maintained a very firm position; while Sugar and Molasses, under the pressure of liberal receipts, have yielded somewhat, though the latter article has partially recovered within the past few days. Tobacco remains inactive, as also do most articles of Western Produce, though there has been rather more movement in Flour within the last day or two, and prices have somewhat improved. The sales of cotton during the first three days of the week sum up 30,500 bales, at well sustained prices. On Wednesday purchasers complained of a meagre supply of desirable lists. Notwithstanding this obstacle, however, some 10,000 bales were disposed of, and a similar amount on the following day. The poor assortment, and full prices claimed, confined operations to 6000 bales. Prices have tended in favor of sellers for some days past, and we find it necessary to advance our figures ⅛c on all grades, mainly attributable to the fall in rates of freight. The supply of clean Cotton of the medium grades, is rapidly diminishing, and this is likely to be the case until new supplies of the early pickings come in from tributary streams. Sales of the week, 58,500 bales. Total receipts of Cotton for the week, are 59,223 bales.....The supply of money, both in the banks and for out-door operations, is large beyond precedent and is constantly increasing.

Cotton—Saturday, unfavorable weather almost suspended business, only amounted to 2500 bales; and on Monday a reported decline at Liverpool checked operations, which embraced about 5000 bales, with no marked change in quotations.

Sugar—The sales of the week amount to about 8,000 hhds.; we quote for inferior and refining, 3¼@4; common to good common, 4¼@5; fair to fully fair, 5¼@5¾; prime to choice, 6@6¼; centrifugal and clarified, 6¾@8c ₱ lb.

Molasses—The sales of the week are about 14,000 bbls; the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 25@26½; prime to choice, 27@ 27½; in hhds. 30@31c ₱ gallon.

Flour—The sales of the week have reached about 15,000 bbls. at $5@5 25 for superfine Indiana and St Louis; $5 87½ for fancy, etc. $6 50@6 12½ for extra, and $7@7 50 for unbranded.

Grain—There is but a poor supply of Corn, but higher rates have been obtained—prices range from 72½@80c ₱ bushel. Oats, have improved—sales at 70@72 and 73c ₱ bushel, for new to prime old. Wheat still arrives slowly, we quote red $1 05, and white $1 25 ₱ bushel.

Pork—The transactions in Mess have been at $18@18 25 ₱ bbl.

Bear—Prime Mess and favorite brands, are selling at $14@$16.

Bacon—Sales at for shoulders 7¼@7½, ribbed sides, 9¾@9½, clear sides 10c, and hams from 9¾@13c ₱ lb according to quality.

Lard—we quote at 11@12c ₱ lb, tierces and kegs.

Butter—Roll, 22@24c ₱ lb.

Coffee—We quote 10¾@11¼c fur fair to good fair, 11¼@11¾ for prime.

Live Stock—The supply is ample, and the market easy. We quote: Beef—Western, 7¼@8½c, Texas, $6@35, according to quality; calves and yearlings $5@9 50; Hogs 8½c ₱ lb; Sheep $4@5; Cows $3@75 ₱ head.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES, A WEEKLY PERIodical about to be issued by the American Sunday School Union.

The plans of the Times indicate an approaching development of the Sunday School interest, such as its warmest friends had hardly hoped for. No one feature of the great revival of 1858 has been more marked, than the extent to which it has called out in the Church the lay element of its power. Never before has such a practical illustration been given to the great truth, that every one who professes to be a converted man himself, has a direct work to do in converting others.

The Sunday School, through its infant and juvenile departments, its Bible and adult classes, its teachers' meetings, its visitations of families, its benevolent and missionary agencies, its systematic study of the Scriptures, and its diffusion of a cheap Christian literature, presents to the Church of Christ a field of action exactly suited to the new spirit of activity to which she has been awakened. It is a work, in which every man, woman and child, who loves the Lord Jesus Christ, may find something to do; in which there is a place for the oldest no less than the youngest, for the wise and the strong, no less than the weak and the ignorant. It is, in short, an all pervading, all penetrating Agency, through which the Christian pastor can multiply tenfold his power to reach the masses, and to carry on his great work of saving souls.

The object of the Sunday School Times will be to help forward this great Sunday School movement. It will encourage the planting of Sunday Schools where none now exist, and seek to improve those which are already established. It will aim to promote the prosperity, not only of the mission schools established by the American Sunday School Union, but of Evangelical Sunday Schools of every name, wherever godly men and women are found laboring together to bring the young under the influence of Gospel truth.

It will discuss in a Catholic, but earnest spirit, the various means proposed for giving life and efficiency to Sunday School instruction, not neglecting also other kinds and modes of instruction, and not forgetting that education is one, though its means be many. It will keep its readers apprised of every important religious and educational movement, setting apart for this purpose a portion of its columns for the publication of general religious intelligence of the latest date.

It will of course contain reports of the proceedings of the Sunday School conventions, endeavoring to extract from them whatever useful practical thoughts are there brought out, and to scatter these thoughts broad-cast among the superintendents, teachers, and pastors, in every part of the land. Considerable space also will be given to the correspondence of Sunday School Missionaries, whose letters are often found to be of such a absorbing interest. The paper will, in short aim to contain just that kind of reading, with which an intelligent Sunday School teacher would like to be supplied every week before meeting his class.

The Sunday School Visitor also will find it a valuable auxiliary in his errands of mercy to the abodes of the poor. An attractive newspaper left behind in such a family, is always acceptable, and is much more generally read, especially by the male members of the family, than a book or tract would be.

In the tone and cast of its articles, this paper will follow the spirit of the age in seeking to be popular. Its mission will be, in part at least, to supplant much of the so-called "Cheap Literature," whose poisonous influences, distributed through a thousand captivating channels, are perpetually wasting the moral strength of the nation.

Party, personal, and sectarian issues, will be wholly forgotten in the higher service of inculcating those great fundamental truths underlying and supporting every safe and salutary organization, whether social, civil, or religious. It will, in other words, be the exponent and advocate of the true Evangelical union.

Above all, it will aim never to forget that the Sunday School is not in itself an end, but only a means; that the true end of the Sunday School, and of the Sunday School Times, as of the people of God in every department of their religious activity, is to save souls. Articles, therefore, addressed directly to the end of bringing men to repentance and faith, will ever form a prominent feature in this journal.

The Sunday School Times will be issued every Saturday morning, beginning on the first Saturday in January, 1859. It will be of the form and size of an ordinary newspaper, and will be published on the following liberal terms:

To single subscribers, per year	$1 00
6 copies, to one address,	5 00
25 " " "	20 00
50 " " "	37 00
100 " " "	70 00

The highly popular paper for children, heretofore published under the name of the Youth's Penny Gazette, will hereafter be enlarged, and called the SUNDAY SCHOOL GAZETTE. It will contain no matter but that which is suited for Sunday reading. Writers and artists of the highest abilities will be employed in making it both instructive and attractive. It will be published monthly. The price has been reduced to the following exceedingly low rates:

10 copies, for one year,	$1 00
50 " " "	4 50
100 " " "	8 00

N. B—Subscriptions to either of these Periodicals payable in advance. Both of these papers will be under the editorial care and management of John S. Hart, LL. D., so widely known by his labors in the department of popular education. Prof. Hart has been induced to resign his position, as Principal of the Philadelphia High School, for the purpose of devoting his entire time and energies to this important enterprise.

Mr. Packard, to whose skilful and sagacious editorship the Institution is indebted for the eminent success of its library publications, will continue, as heretofore, to edit the Society's books, and will give his entire time and energy to the bringing out of new works, the rapid growth in this department of the business being such as to require his undivided attention.

Letters containing money, names of subscribers, or relating in any way to the general business of the Society, should be addressed to Waldron J. Cheyney, Treasurer, American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia.

Communications intended for publication in either of the periodicals, or relating in any way to their editorial management, should be addressed to John S. Hart, Editor.

Manuscripts intended for publication in book form, and letters relating in any way to the editorship of the books of the Society, should be addressed to FREDERICK A. PACKARD, Editor.

UNION PRAYER MEETING HYMNS.—A NEW edition of this popular little Hymn Book, is now ready for Sale. This book was prepared last Spring, under the advice of several clergymen of different denominations, to meet the wants felt in the prayer meetings in Jayne's Hall. It soon found its way into the daily prayer meetings in the principal cities of the United States, thence into the towns and villages. One hundred and fourteen hymns have been added to those contained in the first edition, thus making a collection, which, while it is so small as to be carried in the vest pocket, contains all the hymns in use, among most worshipping assemblies. These hymns are all purely devotional. Christians may here find the good old hymns which they have loved from their childhood, side by side with those of more recent date. Among them will be found hymns suitable for the daily prayer meeting, the family altar, and the private devotions of the Christian. Published and for sale, in different styles of binding, by THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION, 1122 Chesnut street, Philadelphia.

☞ They are for sale by all Booksellers. ☜ [d8-4t]

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

THE BOY'S DREAM.—By Rev. M. Allison.

Once a child sat—a beauteous child—
Under a shady tree;
'Twas at sunset hour, and nature smil'd
O'er vale and mount and sea.

Tired out, with playing in the wood,
The boy soon dropt asleep,
And dreamed, that three bright angels stood,
Kind watch o'er him to keep.

And, whilst he marvel'd at the sight,
One to the other spoke—
"I've brought this garment of pure white,
This lily, of the brook,

"To deck the brow of him most pure,
Of good and spotless mind:
In bloom forever will endure,
If such a one I find."

And the boy saw on the angel's brow,
Her name, in rays of light—
'Twas Innocence—and, pure as snow,
Flowed her vesture, white.

Then, did the other Angel say:
"Look in this mirror small,
And you, the urchin's deeds, to-day,
Will be reflected all."

And the boy saw he was not good—
Sinful, without control—
He had idly trifled as he would,
Like creature without soul.

"And I, these precious jewels too,
How gladly would have given,
Had he, with courage firm and true,
'Gainst pride and passion striven."

The boy beheld her name emblazed,
In hale round her head—
'Twas Memory—ne'er to be erased,
Could be the words she said.

"And I, too, this bright crown had placed,
Upon his sunny hair,
Had I beheld contrition, graced
A countenance so fair."

Thus spoke sweet Hope; and the boy felt
The angels' parting gaze,
E'en through his sleeping orbs to melt,
Like three bright planets' rays.

"We'll meet him here, in one more year:"
'Twas thus he heard them say—
Then suddenly they disappear
From where the sleeper lay.

Oft did the boy muse on his dream,
And on each angel's smile;
And much their features' heavenly gleam
Haunted him all the while.

And better did his young life grow,
And purer waxed his heart:
More heaven-ward did his high hopes flow,
Ever with guileless art.

And every bright and Summer eve,
He came to this green bank,
And bitterly o'er the faults would grieve,
That in his memory sank.

The Winter came, he could not go
Beneath the leafless tree;
But, when Spring violets 'gan to blow,
There pensively sat he.

A year went round—he slept once more,
E'en in the self-same spot—
And came the vision as before—
Three angels, altered not.

Then Memory spoke: "I bring him now
The rich and precious gems,
Records of virtues, that shall glow
Beyond earth's diadems."

"And I," said Innocence, "this flower,
A lily, that ne'er fades—
That peaceful gladness on him pour,
Which heaven alone pervades."

And Hope, too, said: "This golden crown
Shall now be his to wear."
And the drummer saw, like odors thrown,
Their bright gifts on him there.

And sounds of many harps, he heard,
Above him, in the sky;
The air, with heavenly voices stirr'd,
Swept by melodiously.

The stars rose o'er him, in his sleep,
And the moon shed her light:
But still his slumber, long and deep,
Broke not with morning's light.

For his soul, it was no longer there,
Within the beauteous clay;
But, by those three bright angels fair,
To heaven was borne away.

THE YOUNG TEACHER AND JO. STANTON.

A young school-teacher had one large boy, Jo. Stanton, who was ring-leader in all mischief. The first day he managed to make the school a scene of roguery and confusion. The poor teacher went home with a heavy heart.

The next day, she thought if she could gain the confidence of this boy, and have him on her side, she should have but little trouble with her school.

In the afternoon she spoke kindly to him, and asked his help in closing the school-room door. He complied readily.

As she turned homeward, Jo. followed. At length she inquired,

"Have you any sister, Joseph?"

The right cord was touched.

"I had one [sister," he said, "Little Mary, but she died;" and thus encouraged by the ready sympathy of his listener, he went on to tell that Mary was his only sister, and that he used to take care of her, play with her, carry her out of doors, and draw her in the wagon he had made for her; that she loved him more than any body else did, and always used to run to the door to meet him when he came home. "But she is dead now," he added, "and I have not anybody that takes care of me. She had a fever, and she did not know me when I spoke to her, and in just a week she died. Her grave is right over here; perhaps you would like to see it some time."

The teacher willingly went with him, asking him still further about little Mary, as they passed along, till at length they approached the grave, and sat down upon a stone near it, poor Jo. could no longer wipe away the tears, as he had done, when one by one they trickled down, for the fountains within were broken up. He covered his face with his hands and wept aloud.

"She's dead!" he exclaimed again, "and nobody cares for me now."

"I will care for you, Joseph," said the kind teacher, as she laid her hands on his now uncovered head; and then she spoke to him of heaven, and the happy meeting of those whom death has severed, and of One, who cares for us more than all earthly friends, and who will help us if we wish to do right.

Then as he grew calm, and they had risen to go, she told him of her own sorrow, of the father whom she had lost, of her loneliness, of her wish to be useful while she supported herself by teaching, of how hard the Westbrook school seemed to her, and how she meant to do the best she could for him, and for all her scholars.

"I'll help you, Miss Mason," responded Jo. "I'll help you all I can," said then the old mischievous twinkle coming again, he added, "I guess the rest of the boys won't trouble you much. They'll do pretty much as I want 'em to."

Jo. was subdued and won by the power of kindness. And hard indeed must be the heart that kindness will not win.

CONVERSIONS AMONG CHILDREN.

A letter from a missionary of the American Board in Western India, mentions an instance of eight children recently [illegible] Church of Christ on profession of their faith; two of them is the youngest daughter of the missionary who officiated in receiving them into the Church. She stood there, with her darkfaced sisters in Christ, and pronounced the vows of God in a strange language. But God understands Marathi as well as English, and heaven rejoices when children come 'from the East and from the West,' and sit down together in the kingdom of God. Her oldest sister, now the wife of a missionary, was there, wishing that the other sisters also could come from far-off America, and share in the holy joys of this good day. Do you wonder that her father's hand and voice trembled from his emotions, as he spoke of the blessedness of Christian parents and their believing children?"

EARLY DOMESTIC SCENES.

To those scenes of domestic peace, which pure religion created and adorned, the thoughts of the youngest member of the family will cling in after years; they will become a kind of hallowed ground in his memory; they will exert a restraining and sanctifying power; and thus may we expect to see the promise fulfilled: "Train up a child in the way in which he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Baron Ward, the Hostler, Premier of Parma.

Baron Ward, the famed Yorkshire groom, who played so prominent part at the Court of Parma, died the night of October 5, at Vienna. The history of this extraordinary man is full of remarkable events. He left Yorkshire a boy, in the pay of Prince Lichtenstein, of Hungary, and after a four years' successful career on the turf at Vienna, as jockey, he became employed by the then reigning Duke of Lucca. He was at Lucca promoted from the stable to be valet to his Royal Highness. This service he performed up to 1846. About that period, he was made Master of the Horse to the Decal Court. Eventually he became minister of the House hold and Minister of Finance, which offices he held when the Duke abdicated in 1848. At this period he became an active agent of Austria during the revolution. As Austria triumphed, he returned to Parma as Prime Minister, and negotiated the abdication of Charles II. and placed the youthful Charles III. on the throne, who, it will be remembered, was assassinated before his own palace in 1854. As soon as Charles III. came to the throne, the then Baron Ward was sent to Germany by his patron as Minister Plenipotentiary, to represent Parma at the court of Vienna. This post he had held up to the time of his royal patron's tragical end. When the present Duchess-Regent assumed State antharity, Ward retired from public life, and took to agricultural pursuits in the Austrian dominions. Without any educational foundation, he contrived to write and speak German, French and Italian, and conducted the affairs of State with considerable cleverness, if not with remarkable straightforwardness. Baron Ward was married to an humble person of Vienna, and has left four children. Perhaps no man of modern times passed a more varied and romantic life than Ward, the groom, statesman and friend of sovereigns. From the stable he rose to the highest offices of a little kingdom, at a period of great European political interest, and died in retirement, pursuing the rustic occupation of a farmer, carrying with him to the grave many curious arcana imperii.

Sydney Smith

Was never charged with being "ueco-righteous." But there are veins of deep and noble thought in his papers, which it were well if some who are quite ready to commend his wit and laxity of opinion on a few subjects would resort to.

"I must suspect the virtue and suspect the religion of that man who imagines he can attain the quality or the excellence, without submitting to the rules and practices by which the excellence and the quality are found to be attained—who believes he can be a good Christian without Sabbaths and without prayer, and reach the end without submitting to the means; and means, remember, not only sanctioned by the experience of men, but emanating from the will of God, reduced to a positive commandment—one of the laws of the pillar on which all Christian nations have founded their religious usages; and if we did not understand the reason of the law, what matter, if it is the law? But who does not feel the reason of the law? Who would hesitate one moment for an answer, if I were to ask him why the Sabbath was instituted? To stop that thoughtless, oblivious creature, man, in his headlong pursuits of pleasure and of wealth, to tell him that his soul is immortal, that Christ came down upon earth for his redemption, that the heavens above are spread out to receive him; to stop him when he is acquiring, and to tell him to look into his own soul; to stop him when he is enjoying, and to warn him of his salvation; to suspend his contracts, to arrest his schemes, to calm his emotions, to quell his hatreds, to burst into his soul with the splendor of God's truth; and while he is making paltry acquisitions and panting after foolish pleasures, to open to him the heavens and to show him the throne of God, and to open to him the earth and to show him the depths of hell, and to broach to him temperance, and righteousness, and judgment to come."

Walter Savage.

In one of the English courts Walter Savage Landor, the oldest literary man of note in England, has been adjudged to pay five thousand dollars damages for three several libels on a respectable lady living in a family with which he had been on the most intimate terms. These libels, utterly without foundation, were so atrocious, and so horribly vile and filthy, that the London Times regards them as unfit to be re-published. Mr. Landor was a vigorous writer, and occupied a high place in merely literary circles. He was a free-thinker, a reviler of evangelical religion, a mere man of the world; ambitious, and a lover of pleasure; and having no regard for God, he has been left in his old age—and he is more than four-score—to unveil to the eyes of the world his unspeaknble depravity, and to be looked upon as a disgrace to humanity, and shunned by all who have any self-respect. Such is to be the close of his Godless and infidel career, an unhappy and a God-forsaken man.

JESUIT DOINGS IN IRELAND.

The King's County (Ireland) Chronicle says: "A few mornings ago a man named Keenahan, residing in the vicinity of Tullamore, came into the dispensary of that town while Dr. Ridley, the medical officer, happened at the time to be there engaged in his duties. Keenahan, who appeared to be in an extremely agitated and excited state of mind, in a hurried and vehement manner addressed the doctor, and entreated him to advise him, as he was a lost man, without a chance of salvation, that the moment he might die he was doomed to be sent to hell. Dr. Ridley asked him how he came by those absurd notions, to which he replied, that he had been in the Roman Catholic chapel during the recent service of the Jesuit missionaries, who had solemnly assured him that there was no salvation for him, because that he, a Roman Catholic, had married a woman of the Protestant faith, that they could do nothing towards procuring for him forgiveness for his henious sin, and that there was no salvation for him unless he could procure the Pope's personal absolution: and the alarmed man added that, for the want of money, he was unable to go to Rome to seek the Pope's forgiveness. Such an impression did this sinful and unfeeling communication make upon the unfortunate man that he could not be dissuaded of its truth, and he still continues in a condition of mind bordering on insanity, and he still perseveres in repenting that eternal perdition is his inevitable doom. It is lamentable to have to state that for three weeks past, crowds of people from Tullamore, and a wide circle of the surrounding districts, have been attracted day after day from their occupations, pursuits, and families, to hear doctrines inspired by the bigotry and hatred which elicited those cruel and wicked assertions which were made to Keenahan. It was a daring falsehood in those to profess the power of forgiving the sins of murderers, robbers, and adulterers, and yet to assure this poor dupe, that his being the husband of a virtuous Protestant wife, was a sin beyond expectation of remission.

A DANCE.

The following daguerreotype, which we find in the St. Louis Advocate, is executed in true colors: "Look! said half a dozen lady voices, one pretty night, as we sat leaning against the outside of the ball-room. We did look—alas! for our poor modesty, we ought not to have done so. 'If my children were among them, I'd wip them well for it. Yes, if they were full growe, I'd give them the hickory.' So said the wife of one of our princes, as she turned away with utter disgust. Let me describe a little—if the public may look, certainly it may read, though it run. A group of splendid ones is on the floor and lovingly mated. The gents encircle their partner's waists with one arm. The ladies and gentlemen stand closely face to face. The gents are very erect, and lean a little back. The ladies lean a little forward. (Music.) Now, all wheel and whirl, circle and curl. Feet and heels of gents goes rip-rap, rip-rap, rip. Ladies' feet go tippity-tip, tippity-tip, tip. Then all go rippity, clippity, slippity, tippity, hippity, skippity, hoppity, jumpity, humpity, thump. Ladies fly off by centrifugal momentum. Gents pull ladies hard and close. They reel, swing, slide, sling, look tender, look silly, look dizzy. Fest fly, tresses fly, hoops fly, dresses fly, all fly. It looks tuggity, huggity, pullity squeezity, pressity, rubbity, rip. The men look like a cross between stealyards and 'limber jacks,' beetles and jointed Xes. The maidens tuck down their chins very low, or raise them exceedingly high. Some smile, some grin, some giggle, some frown, some pout, some sneer, and all sweat freely. The ladies' faces are brought against those of the men, or into their bosoms; breast against breast, nose against nose, and toes against toes. Now, they go again, making a sound like Georgey-porgey, derey-peery, ridy-pidy, coachey-poachey. 'This dance is not much, but the extras are glorious.' If men were women, there would be no such danelug. But they are only men, and so the thing goes on by woman's love of it. A secular writer says: "There is no established standard of propriety about the matter. If I were a lady, I might object to these dances; but being a man I do not. We certainly ought to be satisfied, if they are.

EFFECTS OF PHOSPORUS ON MATCH-MAKERS.

From an address delivered by Dr. J. R. Wood, we learn some interesting facts regarding the effects of the process of phosphorus on those who are employed in match-making. The New York Evening Post has the following statement in regard to this subject:

It is not an uncommon thing for match-makers to lose the lower and sometimes also the upper jaw. It appears, however, that only those suffer who have decayed teeth. So important is this letter fact that the government of Erfurt has passed a decree, saying that no person having decayed teeth shall be allowed to work in lucifer match factories, and in match factories in this city no workman is allowed to return to his work for a week after the extraction of a tooth. It had been thought that the fumes were unhealthy also to the general system, but it appears that the operators are as healthy as those of Lowell or Lawrence, the disease attacking only decuded bones. It more often affects the maxillary than other bones, and the inferior rather than the superior. The pain in the jaw, which ushers in the disease, is generally mistaken for toothache. The disease in the first stage is chronic, and may be indefinitely prolonged with little inconvenience to the patient.

JAPANESE POLITENESS.

While the U. S. steamer frigate Powhatan was at Nagasaki she was visited by a Japanese Governor and suite, whose appearance is thus described by a correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger: Kichizuro now descended to the boat, and reappeared a moment later with several high officers in his tow. These all bowed low, and ranged themselves in a line along-side the gangway, and bent to the very deck as an aged and mild-looking personage followed them, and looked around him with an air of calm dignity and the most courtly of bearings. I never saw a more self-possessed and gentlemanly looking old man than he who now saluted us. His every look and action said as plainly as words: "I am your friend and equal, though our dress and customs differ." It seems that every one acknowledged this, for it was the theme of general discussion after he had gone—this "unexpected air of courtly breeding in Japan."

"Confound them!" said the commodore, good-humoredly, "these people are the most polite and smiling that I ever saw. That old gentleman, with his soft voice and unexceptionable manner, made me feel as if I was receiving a favor at his hands, instead of acting the part of his host!"

Joy in Sorrow.—A British officer in India mentions, at a missionary meeting, the following case, as one among many illustrations of the results of missionary labor. "A converted Brahmin, named Doedaba, had, on his baptism, lost his houses, his fields, his wells, his wife, and his children. Although a Mahratta, he spoke sufficient Hindostani to understand me when I asked him how he bore his sorrows, and if he were supported under them. 'Aye,' he said, 'I am often asked that; but I am never asked how I bear my joys, for I have joys within with which a stranger intermeddles not. The Lord Jesus,' he added, 'sought me out, and found me, a poor stray sheep, in the jungles; and he brought me to his fold, and he will never leave me. To whom else should I go, if I were to leave him?'"

The Oldest Library in France.—The Bibliotheque Imperial in Paris is the oldest library in that country, and one of the oldest in the world. Its origin dates back to the commencement of the French Monarchy; yet as late as 1544 it contained only about two thousand volumes, of which only half were printed. The number of volumes which it now contains is numbered by many hundreds of thousands, filling room after room, and hall after hall.

Velocity of the Wind.—When the wind moves at the rate of one mile an hour it is hardly perceptible, at two miles an hour it fans us as the gentle zephyr, and at six it becomes a gentle zaphyr. From ten to twenty it becomes high, and thirty to fifty characteriza storms from light to hard; at eighty miles an hour it becomes a hurricane, and at one hundred a tornado.

Two centuries ago not one in one hundred wore stockings. Fifty years ago not one boy in a thousand was allowed to run at large at night. Fifty years ago not one girl in a thousand made a waiting-maid of her mother. Wonderful improvements in this most wonderful age.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. SARAH A. STEWART, died on the 13th ult., on Little River, Parish Catahoula, after a protracted illness, in her fifty-sixth year. Has been a consistant member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for more than thirty years. She died as she had lived, in the full triumph of the Christian faith, exhorting her children to meet her in Heavee. T.

MISS. ANN M. NORWOOD, departed this life in Marion, Alabama, on the 12th last. She had just reached the bloom of womanhood; comely in person, possessing an intelligent mind, and the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." For several years she had been deeply pious, her religious deportment was simple, and unaffected, and carried into her every day intercourse with the community. A source of great consolation to her widowed mother, her death causes a breach in the family which cannot be healed; taken altogether, she was one of the most lovely of her sex; and long will her early departure be felt and regretted. But doubtless our loss is her infinite gain. L.

MRS. ELIZABETH H. DICKSON, died at her residence in Bossier Parish, Louisiana, on the 7th November, 1858, in the fifty-second year of her age. She was the daughter of Robert and Mary Schofield, and consort of William Dickson, who died in 1843. Sister Dickson has been a professor of religion and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church about twenty years, her life was consistnot with her profession, those who knew her best loved her most. She was a kind mistress, a devoted mother and friend, and has left many friends and relatives to mourn her loss—but none feel it so sensible as her children. May the Lord sanctify this severe affliction of theirs to the salvation of their souls, and may the same hand that led the mother through many years of the toils and trials of a widowed life, lead the children; may the pillow of peace, upon which she reclined her sinking head, be theirs when they shall pass through the same ordeal. S.S. Scott.

JUDGE W. REMBERT, was born in South Carolina, June 20th, 1824, professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1845, and died at his residence, in Marengo county, Alabama, November 8th, 1858, in the thirty-fifth year of his age. He was reared in affluence, and moved in the best of society, and lacked nothing to make him happy so far as this world can supply our wants. But he was not unmindful of the true riches—he strove to lay up treasure in Heaven; so that when he fallen on earth, he might be received into everlasting habitations above. In the death of brother Rembert, society has lost a valuable member, the Church a strong friend, his servants a good master, and his family a devoted husband and father. Death's relentless stroke may dissolve the ties that bind us together here, but cannot dissolve our love. And in a brighter, better world, we shall gain even more "than was in Eden lost." He has left a wife and two children, whom we commend to the orphan's Father, and to the widow's God. I was with him frequently during his last illness, which he bore with the patience and fortitude of a Christian. He said to me as his pastor, "If I get well, I intend to strive to be a better man." To his devoted wife, he said a short time before he died, "I am not afriad to die: God is with me." Precious thought, the world must be given up. But oh! in that last hour to know that God is with us, will be enough. G. F. Ellis.

MR. WEST COCKERHAM, died of consumption, in the town of Trinity, Catahoula Parish, La. Bro. C. was born in Amite County, Mississippi, on the 30th of July, 1816, and died on the 7th of November, 1858, leaving behind a bereaved wife and four children to mourn their loss. Bro. C, like many others, though raised by religious parents, put off his return to God, until a short time before his death. He was convinced of the reality of the religion of the Bible, from his youth; but being thrown into irreligious company, he was led off into the ways of the ungodly, making religion and its requirements a secondary consideration all through his active life. But God, who used all means to save the soul alive, laid upon him the rod of affliction; very soon he found he must die, and that too, in an unprepared state, unless, through the Mercy of God, he would grant him forgiveness of his sins in the sequel of his life. He therefore began to cry to God for Mercy, that he would spare his life until his preparation for death was made. He became more and more concerned about his condition, the nearer he drew to his dissolution. The Rev. Mr. Richerson paid him a visit during his illness, sung and prayed with him, and took him and wife, into the Methodist Episcopal Church, and about ten days before his death, God spoke peace to his soul. From that time, till his death, he had not a doubt or cloud over his mind. He was made happy in the love of God, and exhorted all his friends and relatives, to meet him in heaven. He entreated his old comrades not to put off their return to God until they saw the grave open for their reception, as he had done; but to seek "God" in the "forgiveness of their sins" immediately. Then turning to his family, he bid them a final farewell, exhorting his dear wife and children to meet him at the right hand of God. Thus, with no unclouded sun, and in full hope of immortal life, he passed away; and the blood-bought and glorified spirit winged its way to the Paradice of God.

YELLOW FEVER! YELLOW FEVER!

TO THE AFFLICTED CITIZENS OF NEW ORLEANS!

Read Carefully and Thoughtfully.

DARSY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.—The greatest known agent for Purifying the Air. It is a new and important discovery. It is a triumph of scientific skill. It is the result of learned lequiry. It is the fruit of patient research.

This invaluable Agent is now presented to the people of New Orleans, for the first time. It is a Chemical union of materials, provided by Nature herself, for rendering the air we breathe pure and healthful. It is not a mixture, but a true Chemical compound. Its action is in obedience to fixed laws, quick, sure, powerful. It purifies dwellings, sewers, sinks, privies, kitchens. It removes all offensive odors immediately. It cures burns, bites, and stings of insects. It relieves boils, cleanses ulcers, heals sores. It cleanses teeth, sweetens breath.

It has been used with most remarkable success in Typhoid Fever, Scarlet Fever, Measles; indeed, in all contagious diseases it is invaluable.

In the City of Charleston, S. C., it is now in constant use by Leading Physicians, in Yellow Fever.

Orders from that City represent it, as in the most active demand. It has not been advertised there but one month, yet orders for hundreds of bottles, have been filled for that City.

In the City the Howard Association, is now using it in the treatment of Yellow Fever.

Try it—It can be had at, J. WRIGHT, & CO'S, Drug Store, 21 and 151, Chartres Street. Price 50 cents. s.22

DR. T. McGOWN'S

SARSAPARILLA

AND

IODINE OF POTASI,

THE GREAT

BLOOD PURIFIER AND HEALTH RESTORER,

Prepared from fresh root, the only kind worthy the confidence of physicians or the public. Old, imported root is inert and worthless, facts too much overlooked by the profession. According to many, this compound is nearly a Panacea or Catholicon than any and its components have been highly extolled by some of the most distinguished physicians of Europe and America, viz: Sir Wm. Fordyce, Brodie, Lugol, Colndet, Baron, Bardsley, Manson, Ricord, Gendrin, Bell, Harrison, Channing, Hildreth, etc.—for the cure of Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swelling, Gout, Rheumatism, Nouralgia, Dropsy; diseases of the Kidneys, Liver, Lungs, Skin; Eruptions; Biles, Ulcers, old and obstinate Sores. McGown's Ointment should also be used, applied locally;) Blotches, Pimples on the face, Ringworm, Tetter, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scald Head, Leprosy, Goiter; Pains of the Bones, Joints; Spinal Complaints Lumbago, Chronic Bronchitis, Tonsilitis, Hoopieg Cough, Bleeding from the Lungs, Typhoid Pneumonia, Scarlet Fever, Erysipelas; Dyspepsia, Jaundice; Glandular Tubercles, especially of the neck; Cachexy, Palsy, Tumors, Gonorrhea, Gleet; Enlargements of the Liver, Spleen, Testes; Syphilis, in all its forms. Sir Wm. Forcyce says of Sarsaparilla, when exhibited in constitutions enfeebled and emaciated by long attacks of the venereal, or by the abuse of mercury, it is the "great restorer of the appetite, flesh, color, strength and vigor." Professor Bell, lecturing on the Venereal, says of Iodine of Potash, it is a "powerful, safe and benign remedy, and its salutary operation is aided by preparations of Sarsaparilla."

Female Complaints.—Amenorrhea, Dymenorrhea, Irregularities, Suppression, Diseases of the Womb, Leucorrhea, Tumors, Enlargement of the Utorus, Breasts; Chorea, etc.; Impurities of the Blood or System, and all diseases dependent thereon. Makes the skin clear and smooth—an object of interest with the ladies. It should be used in the spring to purify the blood and prevent sickness.

McGOWN'S ESSENCE TAR—A certain cure for Bowel Complaints, as Diarrhea, Dysentery; Flux, etc.

McGOWN'S DOGWOOD AND IRON—A permanent cure for Chills, Ague Cake, Night Sweats, Debility, Dyspepsia, etc.

McGOWN'S GOLDEN PECTORAL—For the relief of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, etc.

McGOWN'S STOMACH BITTERS—A pleasant invigorating Tonic, to be used before meals in Dyspepsia, Debility, etc.

McGOWN'S OINTMENT—Never known to fail curing old Sores, Cancers, Chronic Sore Eyes, etc.

LETTER FROM JERUSALEM.

Letter from Alexandria—Visit to Excavated Church—Apparent Prosperity of Alexandria—Jaffa, its Productiveness—Mountains of Judea—Mud Villages—Arrival at Jerusalem—Divine Service—The Holy Sepulchre—Geoffery Bouillon.

We left this morning to go on board a ship bound to Jaffa, amid a ludicrous scene, of Arabs fighting and struggling for our luggage; the Europeans were obliged to beat the fellows to make them behave—their language and gesticulation appeared terrific—but they are arrant cowards, and easily subdued.

Yesterday we visited the city and its environs; we had a fine view, better than when here before. We sat upon a wall, before Cleopatra's Needle, which commanded a fine prospect of the bay. The sea was calm and beautifully blue, with a little tinge of violet in the most horison. The rippling of the waves was music to the ear, and their colors charming to the eye. The Needle—its hieroglyphics were clear and distinct on the side which faces the ocean, on two sides they were nearly obliterated, the third was tolerably plain. The view was deeply interesting, connecting the scenery around with associations of the past. The column was nearly buried, only a small portion being visible; the hieroglyphics, which before were covered with mud, were now distinctly visible.

We again rode to Pompey's pillar, and with increased interest examined its beautiful shaft, the capital of which is thought by critics to be in bad taste. But if it were covered with his statue its flat surface would appear to advantage; it needs that ornament to perfect its form. The prospect is truly fine, the sea shore, with its varied hues of exquisite loveliness.

We visited the ruins of an old church upon the hill-side lately excavated, discovered about a month since—they were still removing the sand. The body of the church was small. It had been carved out of the solid rock. There were two recesses with arched ceilings—highly ornamented at the top with a large shell and its wall painted with an illustration of the miracle of the loaves and fishes—Christ feeding the multitude. The picture though rude was fresh. The Latin cross was plainly exhibited. The one, opposite, had a group of figures upon the ceiling, rather indefinable; we were not allowed to approach very near. The diggers had mats, upon which they sit or sleep. On each side of another archway stand two large figures—one, an angel; some of our party thought the other represented the Savior. There is somewhat injured Greek inscription, a scholar present said, related to the subject and not the date. In the recept were tombs cut, one above another, but tenantless. This excavation is of considerable depth. We went down, and then ascended steps to enter the church. It is thought there are underground rooms or tombs. The wall, above the church, arose in irregular cliffs, with no trace of former elevation. The whole hill around was excavated with tombs; cavities were open in which we looked, but nothing was in them.

We traversed the environs of the city, to find the site of the Alexandrian Library, but there is nothing definite to show the spot. Large mounds, which must have been the ruins of the ancient city, extend to a great distance, overgrown with grass and lichens, and the fields below covered with the tents of Arabs, like themselves most shabby in appearance. They appear to live a grade with the animal creation.

Alexandria is perfectly modern in its aspect and European in its style of building, except the flat roofs, and the mosques and minarets.

We visited the garden of Mahommed Bey; they are public, well laid out and extensive, but badly kept. No great variety of flowers. The walks are surrounded with the palm; the Arabs ascended to trim the branches which are used for several purposes. It is surprising with what facility they use their feet and toes, almost as hands, a rope around their waist and the tree, they ascend with marvelous rapidity to a great height, and sway by the rope, their feet clinging to the bark of the tree; thus supported, they take off the branches and a rough bark surrounding them, which fall to the ground, and are collected together for use, this bark looks like cloth, so nicely are the fibres joined together.

We rode through the fortifications, which are well-built and very strong; then down an extensive avenue, shaded by trees, where we meet the elite in their evening drives; Europeans and Egyptians, displaying themselves and their equipages—in which were seated richly dressed ladies, in gay colored silke.

The harbor this morning was beautiful, and we set sail under a lovely sky. The Pasha's palace and the fortifications appeared to advantage as we left the shore; and the light-house, the ancient Pharos, which shed its light upon the sails of Alexandrian ships thousands of years ago, rose upon our sight, throwing its lengthened shadows into oblivion of the past.

The city of Alexandria is rising to importance, if we may judge by the numerous buildings going up. Many of them fine, stone edifices. We had a view of Lake Mareis as we returned from Cairo, beautiful in expanse of water, once of considerable marine importance, but now scarcely moved by an oar or a fisherman's sail or net. Calm and still was its bosom; aquatic birds, in large flocks were playing upon its gentle waves.

O, when will this rich country be revived again? and the cross instead of the crescent have the pre-eminence?

Our passage from Alexandria to Jaffa was most delightful. We came in sight of the city this morning; it resembled a row of walls terraced to the summit of the hills; beyond which Mount Carmel rises, though not distinctly seen, yet its position was pointed out near the rocky promontory which dips into the sea. The Mount Carmel, where the prophet Elijah went up to pray for rain, and sent his servant to look; and he saw a little cloud rising out of the sea—the very sea on which we were sailing. How many Scriptural incidents arise, rendering every spot hallowed by its associations. Here the prophet Jonah sailed for Tarsish, fleeing from the presence of the Lord. And the timbers sent by King Hiram, for building the temple of Jerusalem, floated upon these waters.

We arrived in time to visit the house of Simon the tanner; to view the walls upon the sea-side, which rise to a considerable height. We drank of the same well, no doubt, from which he drank—for it has all the appearance of antiquity; and, as the English Consul who was with us, said, would last two thousand years to come—so solid are its walls. We went to the terrace, or the house-top, where Peter went up to pray. A most suitable place—with the heavens for a covering, and in sight of the sea—a most lovely spot for devotion, away from the haunts of men, the noise and bustle of the busy world below. The yard at the back, with its foundation stones and walls, appears admirably adapted to the trade mentioned in the Bible.

The landing at Jaffa was difficult and dangerous, the rocks—upon which fabulous history says, that Andromeda was chained, and Perseus stooped to bind up his wounds after fighting with the Centaurs—arose still formidable, against which the waves were dashing. We passed along in a sea, not agitated by a storm—for a storm would render it impassable.

We left Jaffa for Jerusalem with an out-fit of horses, dragoman and guard, in company with eight persons. The morning was fine as we passed the environs of the city, among orange groves, miles in extent—never did we see the like before. The trees were loaded with fruit of the largest size and most delicious flavor. It is said, there are enough raised here to supply all Palestine; they are exported to St. Petersburgh, in Russia. One kind weighs nearly a pound—some of our party said they would quite weigh a pound. The sweet lemon and other kinds grow in abundance. Orchards of pomegranates and figs, apples, pears, peaches, apricots, and many other fruits unknown to us, of most delicious taste, grow here in abundance: the vegetable world is ripe with its best productions.

We thought the plains of Sharon, with the mountains of Judea in the distance tinged with the bright hues of Heaven, with all its Bible associations clustering around them, like the bow of mercy. The emblematic rose was not found, but the fields were covered with the scarlet, purple and white anemone and other flowers. Large herds of cattle were feeding upon the plains, and the wild gazelle was seen in the distance darting along.

Shepherds were tending their flocks, as in primative times. We passed some singular looking villages, composed of mud-wall huts, the roofs of earth, embeded in sticks, which formed the cornice; their flat roofs were all covered with grain of some kind, perfectly green. We reached the ancient town Lydda, where Peter performed the miracle of restoring Eneas, who had kept his bed eight years—and where once lived many of the saints.

We were invited to stop and rest at the house of a rich native, a Capt. Christon, we took our seats upon the floor on mats, which extended around the room, we were kindly received, and in a short time, coffee, sweet-water, and oranges were handed. The gentleman of the house could speak a little English. The lady was dressed in Turkish costume, her tarhoosh or turban, was embroided with gold, at the ends, a fringe of small gold coins fastened to it, floating upon the neck and shoulders half a yard deep—thus they carry their wealth about them every day.

The gentlemen accompanied us to see the ruins of a Greek church; it was very beautiful in design. Some of its arches, columns and capitals, where of white marble: the wall which was standing was circular. Not far from this ruin we entered an old coptic church, very ancient, low and dark; it was adorned with a picture of our Saviour, and of various saints. We reached Ramla at night, it is the ancient Arimathea, where Joseph lived, (he who begged the body of Jesus, and laid it in his own new tomb.) This convent was appropriated to the Franciscan monks, and the ladies were not allowed to pass the threshold which led to the inner walls; we were lodged in rooms attached to the outer court, were treated kindly. A priest presided at table. It was Lent, so we had only coffee and vegetables with bread, to eat.

We started early in the morning for Jerusalem, and overtook a large caravan of pilgrims on their way to the city, about three hundred of different parties; some upon camels, others upon mules and donkeys, with their tents, women and children, going to see the Holy Sepulcher, and wash in the River Jordan; reminding us of the children of Israel going up to Jerusalem to worship.

More mud villages, with vegatable roofs; all the houses were crowded together, with narrow passages between. A low state of society exists, where the light of intelligence seems only dimly to shine—a most deplorable state of existence, where the incubus of ignornnce, bigotry and superstition reigns. The whole valley (or plains) of Sharon looks like rich prairie land, with very little cultivation.

As we advanced among the hills of Judea, our road became very rough, but vegetation was seen among the hills, and the rocks were covered with the scarlet anemona.

One village among the rocks, as if cut out of its ledges, burst upon our sight, where the beggars came out for backshees. We soon lost sight of human habitations, and entered the wild passage of the mountains of Judea—some so narrow and steep, that it would have been difficult to ascend them, were not our horses well trained; otherwise it would be impossible to surmount the difficulties of the ascent; we found it excessively fatiguing. The pilgrims have a slow march, but wind their way along, with camels and mules accustomed to the rocks.

The hills towards Jerusalem are desolate indeed, nothing but rocky heights, without trees, in some places a few olives in the little terraced hills and narrow valleys. We passed a stone bridge over the brook where David took up the stone for his sling to meet the giant Goliah in single combat in the valley below the hills, where the army of the Philistines were spread out on one side, and the Israelites on the other, with not a tree or shrub to intervene between their sight. We came in sight of the Mount of Olives towards evening, with a distant view of Bethlehem. It was a welcome and touching scene, calculated sensibly to affect the heart—to behold the mound hallowed by the recollection of our Savior's favorite haunts while upon the earth—associated with his tragical death and passion.

The walls of Jerusalem burst upon our view. A thousand pointing fingers tell the tale of Jerusalem; a thousand voices cry—All hail, Jerusalem! Hill and vale catch the glad sound—and Jesusalem, all hail.

We passed through the gate of Jaffa, amidst a crowd of pilgrims—to our lodgings. The appearance of the walls and gates of the city are more imposing than we expected to find them. The city, detached from its holy associations, was more pleasing in its aspect; but this may be owing, in some measure, to the extreme barrenness of the mountains which surround it—so desolate and dreary.

Our hotel is in a most interesting part of the city; my window faces the Mount of Olives, which the sun just illuminates and sheds its beams over the surrounding hills, tinging the huge mass of rocks with its radient light of the rays of the sun of righteousness, which first brightened the eastern horizon, and passed over to the west to enlighten the gentile world. On one side is seen the Pool of Hezekiah, on the other the Church of the Holy Sepulcher.

On the first Sabbath we attended divine service in the Episcopal Church, and partook of the Holy Communion of bread and wine, in memory of Him who died for us, here, upon Mount Calvary—the place of his agony and suffering. Truly our souls were humbled under a sense of his goodness and mercy towards a sinful world, we felt the power of the word of the King of Israel. I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord. Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O, Jerusalem; peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

Bishop Gobert preached from these words, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world," an appropriate and excellent sermon.

In the evening, we went into the church of the Holy Sepulcher; and such a crowd of pilgrims as were assembled there was astonishing. Representatives of almost all nations. The crossing, bowing, and kissing, the different relics, gave motion to their heads, like the waves of the sea. Mount Calvary is represented, and the Savior hanging upon the cross.

How different things appear when we see them, than when described. The elevation of the mount, sinks comparatively low from the impressions formerly received. The church is built over it.

The Greek Church is much the most splendid and richly adorned. The Roman Catholic and Armenian are comparitively plain. The Holy Sepulcher was so crowded, we could not get in to see it. We saw numerous places, one called the prison of our Lord, where his figure is seen through the grates.

A Catholic priest showed us the sword of Geoffrey Bouillon, the celebrated conqueror, one of the Crusaders, and his stirrup, and other relics of the great general. We have seen but a small portion of the interesting objects about Jerusalem, but they are all before us.

GOOD MANNERS—THEIR WANT AND INFLUENCE.

From the report of the Rev. A. Smith, commissioner of the Ohio public schools, we extract the following: There are not a few who are accustomed to associate the idea of politeness with pretension of hypocrisy; and this erroneous opinion exerts an unfortunate influence upon the manners and social bearing of millions. I say unfortunate influence, for the reason that every cause of coarseness and vulgarity deserves to be deeply deplored.

Few characteristics are worthy of higher estimation than true politeness, dignified and genteel deportment. And that none should mistake my intention, let me remark that, by the term politeness, I mean something far higher and nobler than may seem to attach to the idea. There is much that passes with the ignorant and dishonest as politeness which deserves not the name, and should find no advocate among sober and intelligent people. To bow with grace and smile with complaisance; to assume a manner of suavity and kindness which has no benevolence, no heart in it; to put on the manner of courteous bearing merely to serve a purpose, and to lay it aside when the occasion that called it forth was passed by, is the mere counterfeit of the manners of well-bred and genteel society. Dancing masters, fops, and flirts, may be excused for the practice of this spurious style of politeness, but that which respectable and intelligent people should possess, and which should be taught in all our schools, is as unlike this as gold is unlike its cheapest counterfeit. It has its origin in its heart. It is the developement and exercise of outward manifestation, the practical application of the royal law, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them." As we wish others to treat us with kind respect, showing a regard for our feelings and a desire for our happiness, so should be our manner toward them. This spirit will ever induce genuine courtesy and politeness, as a characteristic of human intercourse. And the possession and exercise of this spirit among all people would go far to induce the highest well-being of society. Dissention, strife, bitterness and numberless other sources of misery would seldom rise. But the tendency of things at the present day is not in the direction of this temper and tone of bearing, but decidedly the reverse. And in this respect, as in regard to health, manifestly there has been rapid progress in the wrong direction during the last twenty years.

Phrenologists affirm that the organ of reverence is much less prominently developed upon the crania of our youth than upon those of their parents. However this may be, it requires but little investigation to make the discovery that Young America acknowledges no superior within the circle of his acquaintance. He has heard so much nonsense in regard to the unparalleled greatness and glory of the American people, their wisdom and power, their vast and overwhelming superiority to all other nations, that he has come to the absured conclusion that "We are the people, and wisdom will die with us." And, unfortunately for him, he has in some way deduced the conclusion, that among all the thirty millions of wise men and heroes who make up this great nation, no one is quite so wise and heroic as his individual self. This elevated self-estimation leads him to take on airs not at all expressive of respect for the opinions of others. To treat them deferentially would be to treat himself with indignity. This temper or necessity leads to coarseness and rudeness of bearing, to gross violations of all the principles of true courtesy, of genuine politeness.

In regard to this matter the schools of our land have not been faultless. The new race of teachers doubtless have done much to foster this evil. People who are now forty years of age very well remembered that in their school days the practice of politeness, in form at least, was a requirement which none could disregard with impunity. No boy entertained such just and appreciative ideas of the virtue which there is in rod and ferule as he who had been guilty of what the teacher held to be an infraction of the rules of good manners. When going to or returning from school, the children met any persons that were their elders, they ranged themselves in a line upon one side of the road and made obeisance. And when out in the streets during their recess, however vociferously interested in their pastimes, no traveler made his appearance whose approach did not cause an immediate hush of voices and suspension of exciting sports. The tribute of a bow was cheerfully paid, and not till he had passed beyond their immediate neighborhood did they resume their plays. When they entered or left the school-room, when they took and retired from the place of recitation, they bow and the courtesy were the preliminary and finale of the performance.

Although this practice, considered, in itself was of little worth, yet, as a token of respectfulness, as a sign of good-will, it was of high value. It was an outward manifestation or symbol of an inward state or spirit which it would be well for all to possess, and which should be assiduously cultured in the minds of the young.

But where, in all our land, does this good old practice now prevail? Where are the evidence in our children of the possession of that spirit of kind respect and appropriate regard for their superiors in years and wisdom? Who does not know that bows and courtesies, on the part of our boys and girls, are obsolete both in idea and practice, and re-numbered with the lost arts of the ancients? It has been remarked that "there are thousands of boys in this great country not one of whom has ever made a bow, unless when he had occasion to dodge a snowball, a brickbat, or a boulder."

Some eight or ten winters since, ex-Gov. Everett, of Massachusetts, with the late Amos Lawrence, was in a sleigh riding into Boston. As they approached a school-house a score of young boys rushed into the street to enjoy their afternoon recess. Said the Governor to his friend, "Let us observe whether these boys make obedience to us, as we were taught fifty years ago." At the same time he expressed the fear that habits of civility were less practiced than formerly. As they passed the school-house all question and doubt upon the subject received a speedy if not a satisfactory settlement; for each one of those twenty juvinile New Englanders did his best at snowballing the wayfaring dignitaries.

This is perhaps an extreme instance of the unfortunate change which fifty years have wrought in the habits of the young. In the language of Mr. Northend, the distinguished Principal of the Connecticut State Normal School, "That more regard should be manifested by the young to rules of etiquette and courtesy must be admitted by every observing mind. There is too little reverence for age and authority; too slight a respect to law of both God and man. The transition from boyhood to imagined manhood is altogether too rapid, as by it the son is often placed above the parent, and taught to become wiser, in their own estimation, than their teachers. Boys, in their undue anxiety to become men, are neither men nor boys, but from a new peculiar race."

THE FIRST GREAT LESSON.

The first great lesson a young man should learn is that he knows nothing. The earlier and the more thoroughly this lesson is learnt the better. A home-bred youth, growing up in the light of parental admiration, with everything to foster his vanity and self-esteem, is surprised to find, and often unwilling to acknowledge, the superiority of other people. But he is compelled to learn his own insignificance; his airs are ridiculed, his blunders exposed, his wishes disregarded, and he is made to out a very sorry figure, until his self-conceit is abased, and he feels that he knows nothing.

When a young man has thoroughly comprehended the fact that he knows nothing, and that, intrinsically, he is but of little value, the next lesson is that the world cares nothing about him. He is the subject of no man's overwhelming admiration; neither petted by the one sex, nor envied by the other, he has to take care of himself. He will not be noticed till he becomes noticeable; he will not become noticeable until he does something to prove that he is of some use to society. No recommendations or introduction will give him this, or ought to give him this; he must do something to be recognized as somebody.

The next lesson is that of patience. A man must learn to wait as well as to work, and to be content with these means of advancement in life which he may use with integrity and honor. Patience is one of the most difficult lessons to learn. It is natural for the mind to look for immediate results.

Let this, then, be understood at starting: that the patient conquest of difficulties which arise in the regular and legitimate channels of business and enterprise, is not only essential in securing the success which a young man seeks in life, but essential also to that preparation of the mind requisite for the enjoyment of success, and for retaining it when gained. It is the general rule, in all the world and in all time, that unearned success is a curse.

It is a rule also, that the process of earning success shall be the preparation for its conservation and enjoyment. So, day by day, and week by week; so, month after month and year after year, work on; and in that process gain strength and symmetry, nerve and knowledge, that when success, bravely and patiently acquired, shall be yours, it shall find you prepared to receive and to keep it. The developement of all your mental and moral qualities in the brave battle of life, will amply reward you for the struggle. It will help to make a man of you, and give you not only self-respect, but the respect of your fellows and the public.

DEATH OF A VETERAN OFFICER.

Gen. John M. Days died in Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, last week, aged 87 years. The Pittsburg Post says: He received commissions from Presidents Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. As private and officer, he served his country for fourteen years. In the year 1807 he passed through Pittsburg, with a company for the Southwest, which descended the Ohio in keelboats. He served for seven years under the command of Gen. Jackson. In the Indian wars in Florida he distinguished himself, and especially so at the battle of the "Horse Shoe." He was afterwards at the battle of New Orleans, as a captain in the army, and was one of Gen. Jackson's aids. Here he undertook a most dangerous duty—that of obtaining a supply of ammunition for the American army—which he successfully accomplished, with the loss of a number of men and the mules attached to the wagons. For his success in this hazardous undertaking, he received the honorable appointment of Brevet Major. In 1815, he retired from the army, after the close of the war had rendered his active services no longer necessary to his country. During the administration of President Jackson, he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

WHAT TEXAS IS CAPABLE OF PRODUCING.

A correspondent of the Bulletin, in Texas, writes, that that State presents such a wide and prolific field, that there is no telling what an empire there is here, when her resources become fully developed. He says, when we shall export 3,000,000 bales cotton, 25,000,000 bushels wheat, 400,000 hhds. sugar, and other produce in proportion, there will still be a vast scope of rich country to be occupied. But it will hardly do to put these things in print—people cannot believe them. Yet they are all within the compass of figures, at very moderate calculations.

These figures, the Bulletin remarks, are indeed bewildering, but we are not prepared to deny their accuracy. It is easy to write Texas, but it is not so easy to obtain an adequate conception of its extent and capacity. When we realise that FIVE States as large as Louisiana could be formed out of it, and leave a remnant large enough for another respectable State, we get a better idea of it. And when we reflect that it is as extraordinary for the variety of its soil, climate and natural productions as for its size, we are not at all surprised that our correspondent should think that people are not prepared to credit the whole truth in regard to Texas. It will all come out however in time, and then people will wonder why they did not realize it before. With Texas, the future of New Orleans is intimately connected; and if we are wise, we shall leave no step untaken whereby she shall be bound to us with strong bars of the best railroad iron.

THE ROCK OF STROOM.

In a sermon lately delivered by the Rev. Joseph K. White, the following passage occurs: In the Straits of Sunda, between Java and Sumatra, is a small rock called the Stroom rock, the top of which is just washed and half covered by the waves, while all around the water is so deep that no anchor can touch the bottom. A ship was once passing through these straits, carried on by the tide, with scarce wind enough to fill her sails. The current bore her rapidly along towards the rock. The danger was seen, and every effort made to guard against it. The yards were braced, but the wind no longer filled the sails, and on the ship sped, to what seemed her sure destruction. The loud commands of her officers, and the willing responses of the sailors were hushed, and silently each watched the rapidly approaching danger. But when hope had almost turned to despair, a breath of wind fills the sails, the ship obeys the helm; the dark rock, with the foaming sea around it, is seen just over the ship's side, and then at the stern, and all hearts breathe free again, for God has saved the vessel and her crew. In the voyage of life, in some straits through which we have passed, has no Stroom rock laid in our way? No temptation to sin seemed ready to whelm us to destruction? Have we not tried to avoid it, and felt that our strength was weakness; and, almost in the depths of despair, have we not cried for a breath from heaven; and out from the unseen world has there not come, like the wind, an influence that has saved us?

Piety enjoins and enjoys prayer-meetings, good reading, and religious exercises; but it must also correct the faults, and amend the disorders of our daily lives. No fault is below its scrutiny, or beyond its renewing power. Its aim is perfectness, even as our Father in heaven is perfect.

The World's Opinion.—Every woman is in the wrong until she cries, and then she is in the right instantly.

The Conference passed the following

Resolutions:

Resolved, That we will cheerfully subscribe for and dispose of the volume of Sermons, just published by W. T. Smithson, Esq., of Washington City for the purpose of raising funds to relieve the claims on the Church edifice, of said city.

Resolved, That we will each endeavor to collect at least five dollars for the further relief of the said Church, before the first of next February, and will forward the same to the Book and Tract Depository, at Vicksburg.

C. K. MARSHALL,
J. C. MILLER.

In reference to the first of the above resolutions, I would say that, while in Washington City I saw eight or nine of the fifteen engraved likenesses, to be published in the above volume of Sermons, and I regarded them as beautiful and exceedingly faithful likenesses of the parties.

The book is to be sold to Preachers, and wholesale buyers at $1 50 per copy, for cash, muslin—and in proportion for calf-binding. The plain copies will sell readily at $2; and the engraved likenesses alone will be worth more than the price of the book.

As to the second resolution I would also say, that the debt still due on the Church is about $3000; and while the members there have done and are doing all they can to extinguish it, yet their means are quite limited, the principal male members being clerks in the departments, they are not able to accomplish it. Having spent three or four weeks in Washington City, during the past summer and fall, I am able to speak understandingly.

JAMES MACLENNAN.

THE CHRISTIANS IN MOROCCO.

The position of the few Christians in Morocco appears to be exceedingly critical. The following is an extract from a letter received from Mr. Barrow, the British Consul at Babat, bearing date September the 1st, 1858: "Fanaticism is daily and visibly gaining ground. Our houses are now secured as well as bars, bolts, and firearms can make them. Communications between the French vice consuls and merchants, and my vice consulate, are opened so that in a moment of danger all would come to my house, which is the most secure and easily defended. And in that little gloomy room over the entrance, where your baggage was placed, I have collected about twenty pounds of powder—choosing rather, if it be God's will, that all who are dear to me should thus perish than risk the horror of seeing their lives cut away piecemeal, their persons desecrated, and their remains thrown to the dogs."

POPULATION OF THE GLOBE.

A Professor of the Berlin University has been making curious researches respecting the population of the globe. The following is the result: Population of Europe, 272,000,000; Asia, 72,000,000; of America, 200,000,000; of Africa, 89,000,000; of Australia, 2,000,000. Total population, 1,283,000,000. The average number of deaths per annum, in certain places where records are kept, is about one to every forty inhabitants. At the present time, the number of deaths in a year would be about 32,000,000, which is more than the entire population of the United States. At this rate, the average number of deaths per day is about 87,761, the average per hour, about 3643, the average per minute, 61. Thus, at least every second a human life is ended. As the births considerably exceed the deaths, there are probably 70 or 80 human beings born per minute.

Simplicity of Dress.—Female loveliness never appears to so good advantage as when set off with simplicity of dress. No artist ever decks his angels with towering feathers and gaudy jewelry; and our dear human angels, if they would make good their title to that name, should carefully avoid ornaments which properly belong to Indian squaws and African princesses. These tinselries may serve to give effect on the stage or upon a ball-room floor, but in daily life there is no substitute for the charm of simplicity. A vulgar taste is not to be disguised by gold and diamonds. The absence of a true taste and refinement of delicacy, cannot be compensated for by the possession of the most princely fortune. Mind measures gold, but gold cannot measure mind. Through dress the mind may be read, as through the delicate tissue the lettered page. A modest woman will dress modestly; a really refined and intellectual woman will bear the marks of careful selection and faultless taste.

THE COMPARATIVE DISTANCE OF THE NEAREST FIXED STAR.

A correspondent of one of the London papers says: As the comet is parting company with us I think the following statement will afford the public whose minds are not familiar with astronomical distances a pretty good idea thereof. If the earth's distance from the sun, ninety-five millions of miles, is represented by a space of one inch; Jupiter's four hundred and ninety millions of miles by five inches; Saturn's, nine hundred and six millions of miles, by nine inches; Uranus's, one thousand eight hundred millions of miles, by eighteen inches; and Neptune's, two thousand nine hundred millions of miles, by twenty-nine inches; the diameter of the longer eclipse of the orbit of Donati's comet, whose period is said to be two thousand four hundred ninety-five years, and distant thirty-five thousand one hundred million of miles, will be represented by a space of three hundred and sixty-eight inches. Then the distance of the nearest fixed star, which is at least thirty-five billions of miles distant, will be represented by a space of three hundred and forty-eight thousand inches, or 5 7-9th miles; which is one thousand times that of the comet when farthest off, or twelve thousand six hundred and eighty-nine times the distance of the planet Neptune from the sun, the most distant yet discovered belonging to the solar system, and which occupies one hundred and sixty-four and a half years in its orbit.

A SENSIBLE WOMAN'S IDEA.

Mrs. M. P. Leoagon, editress of the New Orleans Southern Lirror, says: "Woman is, by appointment supreme in the social and domestic circle. It is much more important that she have the finest faculties of her nature in a high state of cultivation; than the stronger and more masculine qualities of mind. She had better be a philanthropist than a philosopher. One Florence Nightengale is worth more to a man than all the Lucretia Motts and Fanny L. Townsends that ever cursed the world; while, in the domestic circle, one good, intelligent, amiable wife or sister, who with such mental training as serves to develop its beauties, and thus serves to invite the sterner sex to woo its refined pleasures and humanising influence, shines brighter than a 'whole woman's rights convention' in solemn concave, resolving to don the habiliments and usurp the realm of the other sex. Woman's element is love; her weakness is her strength. I battle gainst innovation, female suffrage, lady physicians, and Bloomer dresses.

THE NEGRO AND THE NEEDLE.

It is not generally known, that in the early progress of the needle manufacture we were indebted to the negro. The earliest record of needle making in England, is in the year 1545, in the reign of Henry VII., and it is supposed that this useful branch of industry was introduced by a Moor from Spain. The historian Stowe tells us, that needles were sold in Cheapside and other busy streets in London in the reign of Queen Mary, and were at that time made by a Spanish negro, who refused to discover the secret of his art. Another authority states that the art of making steel needles was lost at the negro's death, but was afterwards revived by a German, in 1566. Probably these facts may account for the crest of the needlemakers' coat of arms being the head of a negro.

THE BEST SERMON.

We are too often ready to judge that to be the best sermon, which has new, strange thoughts in it, many fine hints, and some grand and polite sentiments. But a Christian in his best temper of mind will say, "That is a good sermon, which brings my heart nearer to God, which makes the grace of Christ sweet to my soul, and the commands of Christ easy and delighted; that is an excellent discourse indeed which enables me to mortify some unruly sin, to vanquish a strong temptation, and weans me from all the entanglements of this lower world; that which bears me up above all the disquietudes of life, which fits me for the hour of death, and makes me ready and desirous to appear before Christ Jesus my Lord."

THE TRUE CHURCH.

By his Church our Savior did not mean a party, bearing the name of a human leader, distinguished by a form of opinion, and, on the ground of this distinction, denying the name and character of Christians to all but themselves. He meant by it the body of his friends and followers, who truly imbibe his spirit, no matter by what name they are called, in what house they worship, by what peculiarities of mode and opinion they are distinguished, under what sky they live, or what language they speak. These are the true Church—men made better, made holy, virtuous, by his religion—men who, hoping in his promises, keep his commandments.

PROTESTANTISM IN TUSCANY.

It is stated that Protestantism is making great progress in Tuscany, notwithstanding numerous acts of persecution, occasionally witnessed. Even at Florence it has at length obtained a kind of religious liberty, or rather toleration. The converts can meet in large numbers without fear of being tormented by the police. Protestantism is also making progress in the villages which surround the capital, and in the other towns of the Grand Duchy. This extension is so evident that the Pope has ordered that for some time two sermons shall be preached every day to warn the people against the dangers of Protestantism.

A Singular Phenomenon.—In the recent address of Hon. W. L. Clingman before the North Carolina State Fair, he mentions in connection with the manufacture of wine, and the difficulty on the Atlantic slope of the United States in preventing its acetous fermentation, a remarkable fact concerning a locality of the Western part of that State. In a district of a few miles in extent on the Tyron mountain, neither dew nor frost is ever known. The same district is remarkable for the variety and excellence of its native grapes, and they are often found in fine condition in the open air as late as December. The dryness of the atmosphere in the locality mentioned, and its equability of temperature are most remarkable, and we should like to know more concerning it.

Where Fine Shawls Come From.—In Bockhara, the camel is watched while the fine hair on the under part of his body is growing. This fine hair is cut off so carefully that not a fiber is lost; it is put by until there is enough to spin into a yarn, unequalled for softness; and then it is dyed all manner of colors, and woven into stripe eight inches wide, of shawl patterns, such as (with all our pains and cost, with all our schools of design and study of art) we are not yet able to rival. Those stripe are then sewed together so cunningly, that no European can discover the joints. They are then taken fifteen hundred miles to the borders to be sold.

Whom to Marry.—When a young woman behaves to her parents in a manner particularly tender and respectful, from principle as well as nature, there is nothing good and gentle that may not be expected from her in whatever condition she may be placed. Were I to advise a friend as to his choice of a wife, my first counsel would be, "look out for one distinguished for her attention and sweetness to her parents." The fund of worth and affection indicated by such behavior, joined by the habits of duty and consideration thereby

PUBLIC WORSHIP.

The example of Christ, says the Religious Herald, enforces the necessity of public worship. How reverently he submitted himself to the observances of the Temple; though these were soon to pass away before a dispensation of greater spirituality! How perseveringly he went forward in the path of external forms, even when peril confronted him; though, free from every taint of sin, he needed not the supports indispensable to our lapsed nature! Surely, if the Son of God gave such earnest heed to the institutions ordained of the Father, negligence must be without excuse in the sons of men. No one can follow in his steps who does not frequent the house of prayer!

Not always, however, do those who abound in the mere ritual of public worship, most truly appreciate its advantages, or most faithfully meet its responsibilities. The Sixth of the Councils, falsely styling themselves "General," decreed that "whoever was absent from the congregation, three Lord's days together, without urgent necessity, should be excluded from the communion of the church." This law may accord with the dictates of a sincere and sober piety; but look to the church system into which it was woven, and you find it standing side by side with a marked laxity of morals in every-day life. The vices had already gone abroad, of which the full development appears among those nominal Christians of the East, who, when reproved by American missionaries for dishonesty, or drunkenness, or lying, are wont to reply: 'This is a worldly concern; it hath nothing to do with religion.'

Now, do not men substantially say the same thing in their hearts, when they regard public worship, rather as a method of spending the first day of the week for God, than as a means of fitting them for the exercise of righteousness and love towards their fellow mortals during the remaining six? The germ of this gross error has taken root in the breast of every one, who does not nourish religion in the house of prayer, that it may be strong enough to control and hallow his worldly concerns in the hour of business. God 'abhors,' not only 'robbing for burnt-offering,' but the burnt-offering which fails to preserve us from robbery. And if public worship does not animate us to a life of integrity and benevolence it will prove a snare and a curse to the soul. God will say concerning our baptism and Lord's supper, our words of prayer and songs of praise, as he said to his people of old concerning their new moons, and Sabbaths, and appointed feasts: "My soul hateth them; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them."

In this connection, we may well lay to heart the language of our Savior—language which draws its imagery from the past dispensation, but diffuses its spirit through all the enactments of the present: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembered that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

MISSISSIPPI BOOK AND TRACT SOCIETY.

To the Rev. Rev. B. M. Drake, D.D., of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brother: The office which I hold in the Church requires me to make a public reply to your extraordinary publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of the 17th ult., respecting Conference Book and Tract Depositories. I should show myself unworthy the trust reposed in me by refusing to do so. I regret this necessity, but will not shrink from the duty.

I should not consider this reply at all necessary, so far as our Book and Tract operations in Mississippi are concerned, but I cannot be blind to the fear that your letter may do much to frustrate our business in other Conferences; you being as well and favorably known all over the country as in Mississippi.

But my reluctance to perform this task is very much diminished by the two following considerations: First, you are an intimate, much loved and highly valued personal friend. For the last thirty years no man has occupied a larger share in my personal esteem; nor is that esteem diminished to the present moment; Secondly, Your standing in the Church and community is such, as to render any impeachment of your motives or veracity entirely out of the question. No man claim, to act from purer motives than are always attributed to you. Therefore, when I am seen denying your facts, I would be well understood as directing attention to other quarters than your motives or your veracity. Untrue statements and inconclusive reasonings proceed oftentimes from other causes than bad faith. A blind overweening prejudice—a dogged determination to have it so, right or wrong—a pious zeal to "rule or ruin," together with a religious love for old things because they are old—are found more frequently to lead men into error than an intention to do wrong. Let me specify some of your errors. You say: "The impression is made from some quarter that we already have a Conference Depository, and other Conferences are urged to act in reference to our triumphant success. This impression is wholly false. We have no such depository, and no book concern connected in any way with our Church in this Conference has had any distinguished success. There is a joint stock company, located in Vicksburg, bearing the name of the "Mississippi Conference Book and Tract Society."

Why brother Drake, what is the matter? I am astounded! The whole of that statement is utterly wild, and stands in direct opposition to all the material facts in the case. I appeal to every member of the Mississippi Conference, that the following are the facts:

"The Book and Tract Society of the Mississippi Conference" was organized and located in Vicksburg, and was in progress nearly two years before the slightest objection was suggested against it by yourself or any one.

After two years of trial, its Board of Managers determined to improve the mode of raising funds, to give it greater efficiency; and, they inaugurated the plan of inviting hundred-dollar subscriptions—as is now the case; the Board also procured a charter for the Society.

These changes were made in the spring of 1857, and of course, without the official knowledge of the Conference. The change proved advantageous.

But this course, on the part of the Board, was complained of by yourself and others, as illegal and impolitic; and the complaints were urged on the floor of Conference in November of that year. It was affirmed then, by yourself and others, that these changes were equivolent to the organization of a new Society. While the legality and expediency of the measures were defended on the other hand.

Brother Pearce—in order to secure entire unanimity in the Conference, in a matter where entire unanimity was to necessary—offered a resolution, which was adopted, proposing a compromise. This action raised a Committee of six, to confer with the Board and obtain, if they could, such modification of the law of the Society as you seemed to desire, and as would be satisfactory to all. You were chairman of this Committee. It met the Board next day after Conference. You yourself proposed such modification as you and those who acted with you, demanded; and the Committee and the Board promptly and readily accepted the changes proposed. This instrument of reconciliation is in the words and figures following viz.

"On the presentation to the Mississippi Conference of the reports of the Agent and Board of Managers of the "Book and Tract Society of the Mississippi Conference," after a full and free discussion of the same, it was suggested that the certain modifications in the charter of said Society would be desirable in order to its better practical working. Whereupon, the undersigned were appointed a committee to confer with the Board of Managers in relation to such modifications, and to procure such changes as might be deemed desirable. We have discharged that duty, and the Board has readily and unanimously concurred in such changes as were recommended. All conflicting opinions in relation to the said Book and Tract Society being thus harmonized, it is understood the same has the plenary sanction of the Mississippi Conference, and we heartily bespeak for the said Society the good countenance and encouragement of the Church."

"B. M. Drake, L. Pearce, W. P. Barton, J. G. Jones, W. H. Watkins, John Lusk."

"Vicksburg, November 26, 1857."

There sir. The original paper with your name to it, which I saw you write, is in my desk in Nashville! It was immediately published all over the Conference and in the papers, and was notoriously understood, by yourself and every body else, as placing the Book and Tract Depository in precisely the relation to the Church and Conference, which you desired. And there it has remained to this day—precisely where you and those who, in this matter, acted with you, placed it.

It is true, the changes you demanded were trivial. Whether you became convinced, at Vicksburg, of the inutility or nonimportance of the high positions you took at Conference, is not for me to say. But it is for me to say, that you were Chairman of a Committee of Conference, which—you yourself leading the way—placed the Depository in the relation to the Conference and the Church, it now occupies, in every particular!

And yet after all this, you come before the public, in one short year, and say, that this same Depository is not connected in any way with our Church in this Conference!!! I marvel at the flatness with which you contradict both yourself and that which is notoriously known to be true.

There never was a Conference Society of any kind, under the auspices of the Mississippi Conference, which sustained a more intimate relation to the Conference than does its present Book and Tract Society. I challenge a contradiction. But wherever it is, it is where you placed it, you acting as Chairman of the Committee of Conference.

The Conference sent you, at the head of your Committee, to procure, as you state, and truly state, "certain modifications in the Charter of the Society," to make it meet all the views of all the Conference. And in two days afterwards you published to the world, over your own signature, that these changes are made entirely to the satisfaction of all, and now the Society "has the plenary sanction of the Mississippi Conference"

And now, "the impression that we have a Conference Depository, is wholly false!!" There is a Joint Stock Company located at Vicksburg, but it is not in any way connected with our Church."

These are to me unaccountable facts. And again, you complain as follows:

"But the Conference has no share in the joint stock—is not liable for its debts, nor has any part in its dividends."

The italics are yours.

Brother Drake, here you compel me to explain, in a manner I very much dislike, but necessity is upon me.

Before the compromise, above alluded to took place, all the profits of the business of the Depository were placed in the hands, and were at the disposal of the Conference. And one of the changes demanded by you and your committee, in the compromise, was, that this should be stricken out, and that the Conference, thereafter, should have no share or any part in its dividends!

And now, after you yourself, at the head of the Committee of Conference, specially insisted on this feature in the Constitution of the Depository, you have the—what shall I say?—I will say modesty. You have the modesty to complain of, and seek the ruin of the Depository, because it has a feature so unjust to the Conference!! The very feature you yourself insisted should be there!

I leave that right there, without a word of comment. I would not leave you in a predicament so awkward, if I could help it.

But further.—When had the Mississippi Conference any share in the debts or profits of any of its societies? Is not its Missionary Society, its Sunday Schools, its everything else, obnoxious to these very same objections of yours? When was any Conference Society exempt from them?

Again, you complain that I have recommended to the Annual Conferences to incorporate in the organization of the Depositories, the feature of a small contingent interest in the business by subscribers. This you say was no part of the recommendation of the General Conference.

The General Conference made its plan in outline. It stated the end, but did not mark the particular steps the officer in charge of the enterprise should take in getting there. So it did with the General Book agent, the Editors, etc. The feature you complain of, was examined carefully by a number of the first men in the Church I could meet, in and out of the ministry, then by the Book Agent, and then by the Book Committee, and was fully concurred in by every one, before it was adopted. And since, it has been unanimously assented to by at least eight Annual Conferences, and your objection is the first of the kind I have meet with from man, woman or child. You may be right, but you are alone in the opinion, so far as I know.

Alluding to what you call "the requisite amount" of money for a Depository, you say: "I object to this in the first place, because I think the money would be very hard to raise."

But, my dear sir, let me remind you, that is not an objection. How can any enterprise be, any more or any less valuable, because of its being hard or easy of accomplishment? Is an enterprise, valuable in itself, to be abandoned because of the effort that may be required in its prosecution? I have learned otherwise.

You next proceed, lengthily, to state that the plan of obtaining money for these purposes, by mere donation, proved a failure in the past history of the Church, and also in our Conference. Here you are entirely correct. And hence, we prefer a more efficient plan—one that will do better.

"My third objection, is the expensiveness of the plan."

I do not know that I understand you. Expensiveness to whom? If you mean to intimate that any expensiveness attaches to the Church, in all these fifty or sixty thousand dollars you speak of, you are wholly mistaken. There is not a dollar of expense in all these matters that fall upon the Church, the Ministry, or the Conference. Your commercial skill is totally at fault.

Again: "First, the price of the books must needs be increased to meet the expense."

No sir, not a bit of it—not a bit of it. Your mercantile philosophy is in total derangement. You do not understand the matter at all.

And further:—"To think of the eternal system of begging to keep down the price of the books, is to my mind absurd and ridiculous."

To my mind, it is inexpedient and ridiculous. And hence, we propose to keep out of this ridiculous position, by placing a substantial capital at the bottom to rest upon. Is not that the best way?

Another objection urged by you is, that the preachers in sending to a Depository for books, will only get half or two-thirds of what they want.

No sir, you are at fault again. A Depository, with a capital of $50,000, or even the half of it, can very easily keep all the books kept at the Publishing House.

And then you proceed to say that the present plan of operation passed the General Conference "by a lean majority and a hasty decision."

No sir—no sir. It was exactly the contrary.

The measure was two or three weeks under laborious discussion, by as able a Committee as was ever raised by a General Conference. It was then fully and elaborately examined on the floor of the Conference, where the only objection against it was suggested by yourself. When the vote was taken I had all eyes open, and if I am not mistaken, yours was nearly the only vote in the negative. I may be mistaken, but if there were other negative votes, they were very few indeed. It is rare that a vote in a General Conference, on any important measure, passes with such great unanimity. Lean, indeed!

But still, for your action and mine, it is enough for us to know that this is the law of the Discipline. Many other changes in the Discipline passed with a ten-fold leaner majority. Do you ignore them?

And lastly you intimate that the Publishing House almost failed a year ago, and is still in danger of failing. Enough men in the Church to think and act as you do would soon cause its failure. Some of us are trying to sustain it.

But, my dear brother, you need not be alarmed. It is not going to fall. The Southern Methodist Church will have a Publishing House after a while, the Lord willing, that will be an ornament and an honor to the Church, the times, the age and the latitude.

These Conference Depositories, which annoy you so much, have already in the last few weeks, secured in cash and good bills receivable, largely over $100,000 in aid of our book interests, and these sums are coming in at the rate of perhaps two or three thousand dollars a day. How seriously such letters as yours may frustrate these cheering prospects, I am not able to say. I am informed your letter has already been used to the detriment of this great and valuable enterprise in some portions of the Church. But I hope its influence may be circumscribed.

And why retain it until the eve of the sitting of the Conferences in your neighborhood? Why seek thus to cut off an opportunity of reply by the friends of our publishing interests? There is an appearance unfairness in this that your friends did not look for.

I now close by asking you—in the name of common sense—what good to the Church could you look for as the result of that strange letter? It may do much harm, but it can possibly do no good. It may serve to feed a not very laudable ambition in you, to have your way, but you ought to aim higher and think of things more noble. The publication has injured you materially in the estimation of your best friends.

I wish you would publish a note recalling that letter as far as practicable. It has done harm. Why not stop it as far as you can? That would be religious. We need your aid in support of our publishing interests. Some of us are laboring hard—very hard, to sustain and extend them. Why not help us? Come, Brother Drake, get in a good humor about this Depository question, and come and help us. But whether you do or not I will be continuously your most sincere and fast friend and fellow-laborer in the vineyard of God,

R. Abbey.

HELP THE DYING.

I have often noted a difference in the sympathy with the dying in rich and in the poor. With the former, there is generally great caution used, that the sick should not think themselves going; if it is to be discovered, it is rather in a more delicate attention, a mere affectionate look, which the sick cannot at all times distinguish from the ordinary manner. The poor, on the contrary, tell the sick at once, and without circumlocution, that they never will get over it. Is it that the shock is less to the poor—that they have fewer objects in this world for which life may be desirable? But this is sometimes dangerous. I was once going to visit a poor woman, and met the parish surgeon, and inquired of his patient. He told me the room was full of friends and neighbors, all telling her she could not last long; and, said he, "I make no doubt she will not, for she is sinking because she thinks she is dying; yet I see no other reason why she should, and I could not get one to leave the room." I entered: my authority had a better effect. I turned all but one out of the room, and then addressed the woman, who was apparently exhausted and speechless. I told her exactly what the surgeon had said, and that she would not die, but be restored to her children and husband. The woman positively started, raised herself in bed, and said, with an energy of which I did not think her capable, "What, am I not dying? shan't I die?" "No." "Then, thank the Lord, I don't die!" I gave strict orders that none should be admitted; and the woman did recover, and has often thanked me for having saved her life. Clergymen should be aware of this propensity in the poor, that when mischievous, they may counteract it. Rev. John Engles, A. M.

ASPIRATION.

I have seen, says Jeremy Taylor, a lark rising from his bed of grass and soaring upwards, singing as he rises, and in hopes to get to heaven and climb above the clouds; but the poor bird was beaten back with the loud sighing of an eastern wind, and his motion made irregular and inconstant, descending more at every breath of the tempest than all the vibrations of his wings served to exalt him, till the little creature was forced to sit down and pant, and stay till the storm was overpast; and then it made a prosperous flight, for then it did rise and sing, as if it had learned music and motion from some angel as he passed sometime through the air. So is the prayer of the good man, when agitated by any passion. He fain would speak to God, and his words are of this earth, earthly; he would look to his Maker; but he could not help seeing, also, that which distracted him, and a tempest was raised and the man overruled; his prayer was broken and his thoughts were troubled, and his words ascended to the clouds, and the wanderings of his imagination recalled them, and in all the fluctuating varieties of passion, they are never like to reach God at all. But he sits him down and sighs over his infirmity, and fixes his thoughts upon things above, and forgets all the little vain passages of this life, and his spirit is becalmed, and his soul is even, and still, and then it softly and sweetly ascends to heaven on the wings of the Holy Dove, and dwells with God till it returns, like the useful bee, loaded with a blessing and the dew of heaven.

THE POWER OF RELIGION.

We shall never have done hearing, I suppose, of Regulus and Curtius, and such like specimens of the Roman virtue, great in death; but the whole army of the martyrs, comprising thousands of women and even many small children, dying firmly in the refusal to deny the Lord Jesus, are a full match and more, by the legion, for the bravest of the Romans. What but the mastership of religion has ever led a people up through civil wars and revolutions, into a regenerated order and liberty? What has planted colonies for a great history but religion? The most august and most beautiful structures of the world have been temples of religion; crystalizations, we may say, of worship. The noblest charities, the best fruits of learning, the richest discoveries, the best institutions of law and justice, every greatest thing the world has seen, represents, more or less directly, the fruitfulness and creativeness of the religious talents. The real summit, therefore, of our humanity is here. Dr. Bushnell.

PRAYER IN EVERY LAND.

The present is a season for prayer, and there are indications in almost every land where the gospel is diffused, that God is reviving the spirit of prayer in the hearts of his people. In this city, in New York, in Boston, in Washington, in other places at the South, in England and Scotland, union prayer meetings have been established. And now from India we have the "glad tidings" that in Bombay a society called the "United Weekly Prayer Meeting," has been instituted by Protestant clergymen.

Blessings whose influence will greatly enlarge and extend the Church of Christ, and gladden the hearts of millions for ages to come, are justly anticipated as fruits of this awakening. And if it shall extend to ministers generally, and it shall please God to revive the spirit of primitive piety in their hearts, it will no doubt heal divisions in the Church, and settle differences among brethren, which can never be settled by controversy.

Men's Hearts.—We may stand and knock at men's hearts till our own ache, but no opening till Christ come. He can fit a key to all the cross wards of the will, and with sweet efficacy open it, and that without any force or violence to it.

THE MONTALEMBERT TRIAL.

The French press publishes nothing on the subject, except a note that the trial has been had, and a brief statement of the result. The English papers, which were furnished with detailed accounts, by the correspondents in Paris, were rigidly excluded from France. The pleas of the counsel were, in fact, reproductions and defences of the sentiments, which were under scrutiny as seditious, and the system of repression was put strictly into force, to prevent them from getting abroad among the French people. At one time, when the counsel for M. de Montalembert, the celebrated royalist advocate Berryer, was vindicating the right of his client to assert that liberty does not exist in France, because it is true that it does not, the presiding Judge interrupted him, to say that he was repeating the offence for which M. de Montalembert was charged, and this could not be permitted. No reporter was present, to give the words of the indignant orator, when he replied to this threat of the courtier Judge, to stop his defence if it should not be expressed in the language which suits the Imperial ear. But it was a bold averment of the truth of the fact, that France does not possess liberty, coupled with the bitter confession that she had repudiated it herself—she had, by a vote of universal suffrage, killed liberty. This was a stinging retort, and produced a great sensation in court; and when the defence was concluded, loud applaus and cries of bravo, came from the spectators, which were instantly rebuked by the Judge, with the threat of clearing the court-room if any signs of applause should be repeated during the trial. The court seemed to share the alarm of the Government, lest the details of the trial should come to the public knowledge. Every thing connected with it is systematically suppressed.

The judgement of the court was rendered with very little delay, after the argument was concluded. They retired to deliberate, and returned in about an hour and read an opinion, carefully prepared, possibly before the trial was begun, in which they found M. de Montalembert guilty of libelous and seditious matter, in the article which he wrote for the Correspondant, on the 25th of October, entitled "Un Debat Sur L'Inde au Parlement Anglais."

The judgment describes the whole article as written in a spirit of "systematic (denigrement) aspersion," in which "the author, by the continual contrast which he draws between the institutions which France has given herself and those of a power allied with France, sets himself the task of covering with irony and insult the political laws, the men, and the acts of the Government."

It finds him guilty of three specifications, viz: a design to excite hatred and contempt of the Government; a design to attack the principle of universal suffrage and the rights and authority which are derived from it, meaning we suppose, the authority of Government, which is based upon an original vote by universal suffrage; and designs against the respect due to the laws, and the inviolability of rights sanctioned by them. Three forms of stating propositions, nearly identical, that the existing order of things in France is not to be assailed or even discussed, or invidiously compared with any other, as less free, or less to be desired.

The court accordingly sentenced M. de Montalembert to six months' imprisonment, a fine of three thousand francs, in addition to all the costs of the court; and further imprisonment for one year, in default of payment,

Thus one of the most distinguished, the ablest and purest men in France—a man of extraordinary talents and unquestioned honor—is sent to prison by a police court, for having avowed in France an admiration for the English constitution, and by inference, argued that it is a better form of government than that absolutism which the French people established over themselves by universal suffrage.

It is not surprising that such an event should be considered a provocative to bitter resentments in the minds of all classes of Frenchmen, except the few immediate minions of power; and that it should be thought to mark an epoch from which the future of the whole people will be tinged with bitterness towards the Emperor whose Government exacts such tyrannical suppression of all freedom of thought and utterance.

In England, as might have been expected, this conviction and sentence have been met with no outcry of unmingled reprobation. Nothing is more uncongenial to British ideas or more abhorrent to British feelings, than the prostration of popular liberty under the foot of a monarch; and the feeling is not lessened by the reflection that the French outrage on the first principles of public liberty is associated with a national or judical insult to England. One of the first men of France suffers an ignominious condemnation for merely expressing his respect for English institutions.

While these things are going on in Europe, and the national and necessary antagonism of France, under her present regime, towards England and the English, is exhibiting itself most flagrantly, there are political speculators in this country who would talk us into a panic about the coalition of England with France in a joint policy to repress American interests on this continent; who would have us believe that there is a substantial entente cordiale between them against American.

Whatever governments or cabinets may do, or undertake to do, of this sort, if there be such designs with either, it would be difficult to make us believe that the people of England would ever consent to ally themselves with the French Emperor for any such purpose, or that the French Emperor is quite so sure of his own people or of his own control over British politicians as to venture upon the dangerous attempt.

PEACE LIKE A RIVER.

Away among the Alleghanies, there is a spring so small that a single ox in a summer day could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills, till it spreads out in the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks cities, villages and cultivated farms, and bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats. Then I have called somewhere; I know not where, or when. Yet with the bubbling fountain in my eye, and roaring water-fall in my ear, I say: "Beautiful representation of a Christian's peace. Peace as a river!" Like a river in the commencement, trickling from some fissure in the heart, singing its own song as it dropped from leaf to leaf, from ledge to ledge—now gathering itself up in a little pool, saying to its joyous waters, "here we rest," anon rushing on again to fulfill its purpose, and gain its parent sea.

Like a river in its progress, ever widening and deepening from the "ankles" to the "knees," from the knees to the "loins," from the loins to the "waters to swim in, a river that can not be passed over," receiving new tributaries on the right and left, sweeping away as it rolls on its healthful stream, the dead and dying remains of past affections and former lusts, and bearing on its bosom a thousand newly launched hopes.

Like a river in its influence—holy, healthy, generating, causing a wide expanse of "living green" to spread out on either side, making even the desert of the soul "rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Like a river in its changes—when the warm sun of righteousness pours its effulgent rays on the heart that has experienced the rigors of a spiritual winter, and melts the cold snows and breaks the ice-bound streams; or when the showers of grace fall on the heart's hill-top, then a blessed fulness pervaded all its course, many a "crevasse" through which it pours its sanctifying streams.

Like a river in its termination—rolling into, and mingling with the shoreless, blessed sea of perfect peace, where undulating waves never roll in strife or break in death. Long ere the great sea is reached, the river of peace meets the great "trial wave," as it rolls itself silent, as if to hasten the hour of union, and give the redeemed soul a blessed sense, a foretaste of eternal felicity and future joy. "There the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley, with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass through." Christian Even.

Tape Eloquence.—A young Irish girl who was reederlog testimony against an individual in a court of law said, "I'm sure he never made his mother smile." There is a comprehensiveness and intensity of expression, in this simple sentence, to which we have scarcely, if ever, seen a parallel. Such a history of hard-heartedness and depravity, was surely never compressed into eight words before!

A BRAVE AND NOBLE DEED.

The recent courageous and even desperate act of Capt. Brooks, keeper of the Faulkner's Island Light, says the New Haven Register, in rescuing the captain, his wife and crew, from a wreck, in Long Island Sound, deserves more than a passing notice. It will be remembered that Faulkner's Island itself is more than two miles from land, and that its only inhabitants are the keeper of the light-house and his family, Capt. O. N. Brooks. The wreck lay upon Goose Island, some two miles from this; but Capt. Brooks could see, with his glass, the persons in the rigging, and the sea lashed into unusual fury, making a breach high over its decks, and threatening instant destruction. It was too sad a sight for the brave man to endure; and provided as he was by Government with nothing but a small sailboat, to go between the island and the mainland, he would have been fully justified in the leaving them to a fate horrible to think of. His wife was on shore, and he was alone with his family of little children, but telling them of the peril he was about to assume—a fearful peril, from which he might never return—he kissed them, and calling upon God to protect and bless his endeavor, he jumped into his frail skiff, and steered boldly into the storm and the billows.

Those on board saw the attempt, and even in their agony wondered at his boldness, predicted its failure and grieved at what they considered an unnecessary sacrifice. But still the brave man, relying upon Providence, kept up his heart and hopes, and although every wave threatened him with destruction, he reached at last the wreck, and hailed the despending crew with words of cheer. By the most skillful management of his boat, now shooting past, and once over the very wreck itself, he at last managed to pick them off one at a time, and then turned for the shore. But it was only by constant bailing and tremendous efforts that the boat was kept out of water, and at last reached the Island, with its inmates exhausted, and nearly dead with hunger and exposure. On the shore waiting for their father, were the little children of Capt. Brooks, who with tears and screams of joy, saw the boat tossed violently upon the land by the angry waves, with its overtasked load of rescued mariners, who were immediately transferred to the light-house residence, and made welcome and comfortable.

A gentleman familiar with the circumstances, and also with the dangers of the sea, assures us that it was the most daring feat he ever read of, that the boat was entirely unfit for such a service, and that nothing but unrivalled coolness, great skill as a boatman, and the hand of Providence over all, made the effort successful. Capt. Brooks thought it at least an equal chance that he should be lost; though, with a proper life or surf boat, he wouldn't have hesitated an instant about going to the wreck when he first discovered the danger, and might have saved the life of the little girl—the captain's child of three years—who fell from his exhausted arms into the sea, half an hour before Capt. B. reached the wreck. We have known Capt. Brooks for several years as one of the most faithful men in the light-house service, and means will be taken to call the attention of the Government to his merits, and hope that he may be provided with a boat suitable for the kind of service he is so frequently called upon to enter. There should be also, at such an exposed point, an assistant keeper; for had Mr. Brooks been lost in his efforts to save the crew of this vessel, there would have been missing to the mariner in Long Island Sound, on that night, the ever-steady beacon light of Faulkner's Island. If ever here deserved the public reward of bravery, that man is Oliver N. Brooks, the solitary watcher on a sea-girt island.

THE STRENGTH AND INFLUENCE OF MORAL PRINCIPLE.

The history of the world proves that man's greatest strength resides in the purity of his moral principle. It is the possession and operation of this principle, in all its purity and integrity, which gives energy and effect to all he thinks and does—to all he says and writes. With this a man feels that he is always true and in earnest, and earnestness and truth are the great secrets of all worthy success and usefulness in life. Washington was, perhaps, more indebted for his success and greatness to this purity and strength of moral principle, than to any overtowering and extraordinary endowment of intellect; and the same may be said of many other men whose lives have been marked by distinguished usefulness to the world.

Alas! how many men of great native genius have been lost to themselves and to the world, and have become miserable wrecks of humanity, for the want of this energizing and soul-inspiring principle. Integrity and purity of character has been properly said to constitute the foundation of all that is high in character among mankind. Other qualities may add to its splendor, but if this essential requisite is wanting all their lustre fades. Were I drawing the character of one who claimed the admiration of the world, and after I had ascribed to him eloquence, valor, and every endowment that is most captivating and shining, did I add, that such an one was deceitful, faithless and of too much art to be trusted, I appeal to every one, whether by this single stroke, the whole character would not be sunk and degraded? An interested and crafty man may, perhaps, rise to influence and high station, he may be a rich and powerful, but can never be a truly great man. He may be feared and externally honored and courted, but in the secret thoughts of men he finds no respect. We all feel that magnanimous sentiments cannot dwell in the same breast with selfishness and deceit.

The consciousness of rectitude of motives impress man with an energy of character which nothing else can produce. He feels and believes that he is in the right, and all the powers of earth and hell cannot swerve him from the path of conscious duty. Thus consciousness of integrity produces that decision of character without which nothing great or good has ever been effected in the world. His character and conduct correspond with the principles and opinions he cherishes. He feels and knows that he is no hypocrite, practising one thing and preaching another, he feels that he was designed by his Creator to live for some serious and useful purpose in the world; and not to float loosly on the tide of life, the sport of every idle changing wind. There is a certain strength and and consistency in such a charter that no fickle and vacillatory creature can ever attain. He pursues no crooked paths and by-laws, no quirks and turns to reach the objects of his aim. While approving the right, he pursues it too, independent of all consideration of fear or favor, and while at the same time that he loves, he would be loved by all; he will not sacrifice principle to obtain the love or favor of any one, and ever prefers the approbation of God and his conscience to all earthly considerations.

Such is the man whose moral and religious principles is perfect. Alas! how seldom, if ever, is such a character, in its perfection, found on this Earth! yet none, we believe, have nearly, if not entirely attained it, and it is the duty of all to approximate it as nearly as possible. Religion is the only true basis of such a character. No man, who does not reverence and love his Creator and keep His commandments can ever be great or good or happy. His principles, however strong he may believe them to be, can never, in any other way, triumph over the world, the flesh and the Devil. Man must use his best and most strenuous exertions, for this is required of him, but God and Religion alone can ever enable him to overcome the evil and corrupt principles of his fallen nature.

ADORNING CHURCHES WITH FLOWERS

There was one way more of adorning churches, which I should not have considered worthy mentioning, but for its innocency and natural simplicity, that is, the custom of garnishing and decking them with flowers and branches; which was not done at any time for any pretended mystery, but only to make them more decent, and fit for a body of men to meet in. St. Austin takes notice of the custom, speaking of one who carried away with him some flowers from off the alter. And Paulinus, in his poetical way, refers to it likewise. But St. Jerome does it the greatest honor to give it a place in the panegyric upon his friend Nepotian, making it a part of his commendable character, that he took care to have every thing clean and neat about the church, the altar bright, the walls whited, the pavement swept, the gates veiled, the vestry clean, and the vessels shining; so far did his pious solicitude about these matters extend, that he make flowers and leaves, and branches of trees, contribute to the beauty and ornament of the churches.—Bingham.

ALBERT SMITH AT HONG KONG.

The following racy bit of touch-and-go journalizing we take from one of Albert Smith's letters in the London Times: Here we are, all safe and sound, among them at last, surrounded by junks and pigtails, and nice ladies and gentlemen. I have bought the enclosed pictures from a splendid merchant who has come off to the side of the ship on three planks, by the aid of a broomstick. We left Singapore on the 23d of July. I was immensely delighted with it; it is quite a Chinese place. The shops are rich places, they sell the most wonderful things in them—toys and gods and lanterns, and joss properties and queer crockery. The filth they eat in the eating-houses far surpasses that cooked at that old trattoria at Genoa. It consists for the most part of rats, bats snails, bad eggs, and hideous fish, dried in the most frightful attitudes. Some of the restaurateurs carry their cook-shops about with them on long poles, with the kitchen at one end and the salle a manger at the other. These are celebrated for a soup made, I should think, from large caterpillars, boiled in a thin gravy with onions. The barbers carry their shops about, and they shave, cut beards, and syringe ears, right in the middle of the street. A Chinese merchant asked me to dinner. I went, of course, and after dinner we started for the theatre. They played a Chinese opera, with about fifty performers; there were lots of devils in the piece, with tumbling and fighting in every sense." They only had one clarionet and two gongs in the orchestra, but when there was an attention in the piece one fellow knocked two hollow canes together to show the audience they were to applaud. The merchant lives in first-rate style, and has a wonderful garden. All the fruit trees are very small; there were pines like cabbages, and a quantity of a large creeper called "monkey cups," because down the stalk there are regular pitchers and tops filled with water, from, which Jacke refreshes himself in the wood.

There were also among his live stock, Cashmere goats, porcupines, kangaroos, Pekin pigs, and Brahmin bulls and in the jungle across the valley tigers, and all sorts of novelties. I slept on shore that night, or rather I went to bed, but I could not sleep, as I missed the noise of the screw, and the creaking of the timbers, and the bed was too steady. The last night before we got to Hongkong we had an "entertainment" on board, and I was stage manager. We made a first-rate room of sails and flags, and the whole affair went off capitally. There are no hotels at Hongkong, but a very nice club, with bedrooms. I was proposed and elected as soon as I arrived; so that it is very jolly. To-day they hold a Chinese fete in honor of their dead relations.

They keep firing crackers all day in the streets, and burn these long pastilles. I don't think, they care much about their religion; they go into the temples to get cool, or sit down, or go to sleep. The children are frightened at the gods, they are so hideous; they roar with terror when they are placed in front of them. The people walk about with their hats on, and whistle and smoke, and do what they like; the merchants selling gilt paper and pastilles, sit round the sides, and sometimes they beat a gong to attract customers. Nothing that I can write now can give you the least idea of this wonderful place; I see every hour how very faithful Cook's descriptions were.

THE GREAT STREET PREACHER.

Archdeacon Leighton, returning home one morning, was asked by his sister, "have you been hearing a sermon?" "I have met a sermon," was the answer. The sermon he had met was a corpse on its way to the grave; the preacher was Death. Greatest of street preaches! No laws nor penalties can silence him. No tramp of horses nor rattling of carriages, nor rush and din of crowded streets can drown his voice. In Heathen, Papal, and Protestant countries, in Monarchies and free States, in town and country the solemn pomp of his discourse is ever going on.

In some countries a man is imprisoned for even dropping a tract. But what prison will hold this awful preacher? What chains will bind him? He lifts up his voice in the very presence of tyrants, and laughs at their threats. He walks unobstructed through the midst of their guards, and delivers those messages which trouble their security and embitter their pleasures. If we do not meet his sermons, still we cannot escape them. He comes to our abodes, and, taking the dearest objects of our love for his text, what a terrible sermon does he deliver to us! O what weeping audience sometimes has the silent preacher! Yet there is a secret doctrine, an occult meaning, running through his discourses, which is often not apprehended. Few "lay it to heart." His oft-repeated sermons still enforce the same doctrine, press upon us the same exhortation. "Surely every man walketh in a vain show. Surely they are disquieted in vain. Here there is no continuing city. Why are you laboring for that which I will presently take from you and give to another! Take no thought for the morrow. Prepare to meet thy God!"

A VISIBLE LIVING HUMAN HEART.

An intelligent native of Hamburg, named Gronz, born with peculiar defects in the bones and muscles of the chest, excites much attention in New York from the fact that all the movements of the heart are visible through the thin cuticular membrane which alone covers it.

The collar bones, says the New York Post, are not connected, neither are the ribs to their opposites, but there is a groove where the sternum should be; the skin is natural. In its natural state this groove is about an inch and a half wide, but it can be distended to three inches. On looking at the groove a pulsatile swelling is discernable opposite the third and fourth ribs; if respiration be suspended it rapidly rises to an enormous extent, and remains full and tense until the breething is restored, when it soon subsides. This is the heart. Between the clavicles there is another pulsatile swelling, easily felt, which is the aorta, the great artery from the heart. The dilation and contraction of the lungs is also seen. In coughing, the right lung suddenly protrudes from the chest through the groove, and ascends a considerable distance above the right clavicle in the neck.

Some years since a wound received by one Alexis St. Martin exposed the living stomach to inspection. Much valuable knowledge was thereby obtained; similar benefit may result to physiological science from the misfortune of Mr. Groux.

PRETTY WOMEN.

If we have a weakness of folhe incident to human nature, it is our admiration of pretty women. The following correct description of one of 'em, must have been written by one similarly affected:

"A pretty woman is one of the institutions of the country—an angel in dry goods and glory. She makes the sunshine, blue sky, fourth of July, and happiness, wherever she goes. Her path is one of delicious roses, perfume and beauty. She is a sweet poem, written in rare curls, choice calico and principles. Men stand up before her as so many admiration points, to melt into cream and then butter. Her words float round the ear like music, birds of Paradise, or the chimes of Sabbath-bells. Without her, society would lose its truest attraction, the church its fittest reliance, and any young man the very best of companions and company. Her influence and generosity rebuke the vicious, and strengthen the weak, raise the lowly, flannel-shirt the heathen, and encourage the faint-hearted. Whenever you find the virtuous woman, you also find pleasant firesides, boquets, clean clothes, order, good living, gentle hearts, piety, music, light and model institutions generally. She is the flower of humanity, a very Venus in dignity, and her inspiration is the breath of heaven.

I Know from Experience, says the noted writer, John Foster, that a habit can, in direct opposition to every conviction of the mind, and but little added by the elements of temptation, induce a repetition of the most unworthy action. The mind is weak where it has once given way. It is long before a principle restored can become as firm as one that has never been moved. It is as in the case of the mound of a reservoir; if this mound has in one place been broken, whatever care has been taken to make the repaired part as strong as possible, the probability is that if it give way again, it will be in that very place.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

GOODNESS ETERNAL.

The pains we spend upon our mortal selves will wish with ourselves: but the care we give out of a good will to others, the efforts of disinterested duty, the deeds and thoughts of pure affection, are never lost; they are not of waste; and are like a force that propagates itself forever, changing itself, but not losing its intensity. In fact, there is a sense in which nothing human dies; there, at least, whirls proceeds from the higher and characteristic part of man's nature; nothing which he does as a subject of God's moral law. Material structures are dissolved, their identity and functions are gone, but mind partakes of the eternity of the great parent Spirit; and thoughts, truths, emotions, once given to the world are never lost; they exist as truly, and perform their duty as actively, a thousand years after their origin as on their day of birth."

HENRY CLAY'S BROTHER.

A late number of the Ouachita (Ark.) Journal, says: Among the unmarked and unhonored graves in the rural cemetery at Camden, Ark., is that of a brother of the illustrious Henry Clay—his only monument is an oak tree, on which the initals of his name rudely carved in its rough bark. He is said to have been an humble and devoted follower of the gospel; to have spent the latter part of his life in this new and remote region, publishing the glorious tidings of God's wondrous offer of eternal life to a dying world, and at last, wearied and wayworn, death's hand beckoned to him from the shores of the silent land. In laying down the weapons of his warfare, he closed his eyes peacefully, with unwavering trust in God, and a little congregation carried him to his quiet resting place near the grassy banks of the winding Ouachita, to await that last awakening of a slumbering universe.

Eternity.—Solemn and important was the advice given by Robert Hall—"Walk, as it were upon the borders of the ocean of eternity, and listen to the sounds of waters till you are deaf to every other sound beside," for if we always did this, what different persons we should be to what we are now, in all manner of holy conversation and godliness. Archbishop Tilotson, when his brethren were preaching on "the times," asked permission to preach on eternity.

Faith.—God has marked implicitness and simplicity of faith with peculiar approbation. He has done this through the Scriptures, and is doing it daily in the Christian life.

USEFUL HINTS TO YOUNG MEN.

How many young men ignorantly deny themselves a home. There is scarcely a young man of good sense in any city who cannot save $100 easily from his annual wages, and, if he will forego cigars, billiards, and juleps, will save double that amount. Figures sometimes produce almost incredible results. Thus, for instance, if a young man on his twentieth birthday will invest $100 in good stock, paying ten per cent., and annually thereafter invest the same amount, and the accumulation of interest, he will be worth when he is thirty years old, $1,753; when forty years old, $6,300; when fifty years old, $18,; when sixty years old, $48,700.

How simple then is the plan by which a youth of the present day can pass his old age in comfort and luxury. It has only to regulate his expenses so as to save $100 a year from his income. If the amount saved be larger, or the sum total will be increased in the same proportion only think of it, that $500 saved annually and invested in ten per cent. stock, will amount in forty years to $43,500. One million invested in the same way for ten years will amount to $2,593,600; in twenty years to $6,400,000; in thirty years to $17,384,628; in forty years to $46,250,838. No wonder, then, that the Rothschilds have amassed such boundless wealth.

THE ASHES OF COLUMBUS.

The cathedral in Havana claims the honor of sheltering the remains of the great navigator. A recent traveler thus describes the place: A mural tablet in the choir, on which is a bust of the illustrious Genoese in alto-relief, informs the public that all that is mortal of him reposes there; that while he has left the country he discovered to be the home of prosperous millions, he has made a voyage to still more distant land, from which no traveler returns. One of the officials, who had an eye to business during the service, presented me with a printed card telling the story of the begira of these illustrious bones. Although Columbus died at Valladolid, in Spain, his remains were not permitted to rest there. They were first transported to a Carthusian Monastery at Seville; next they were removed across the seas to St. Domiago, and finally they were disintered and brought to Havana, there in the Antilles, with which the discovery which has rendered his name immortal has so intimate a connection. Resting that his dust should repose. The land which heroism revealed to an astonished and admiring world, may well afford him room wherein to sleep his long sleep.

THE LAND OF CONTRARIES.

In Australia the North is the hot wind, and the South is cool; the westerly the most unhealthy, and the east the most salubrious; It is summer with the colonists when it is winter at home, and the barometer is considered to rise before the bad weather, and to fall before good; the swans are black, and the eagles are white; the mole lays eggs and has a duck's bill; the kangaroo (an animal between the deer and squirrel) has five claws on his fore feet, three talons on his hind legs, like a bird, and yet rests on its tail. There is a bird (melliphaga) which has a brush in its mouth instead of a tongue; a fish, one half belonging to the genus rara, and the other to that of squalus. The cod is found in the rivers and the perch in the sea; the valleys are cold and the mountain tops warm; the palm is a lofty tree, and the poplar a dwarfish shrub; the trees are of wood, with the stalks at the broad end; the cherry grows with the stone outside; the fields are fenced with mahogany; the humblest house is attired up with cedar, and the myrtle plants are burnt for fuel; the trees are without fruit; the flowers without scent, and the birds without song.

RESIST THE BEGINNINGS.

The Arabs have a fable of a miller, who was one day awakened by a camel's nose thrust in the window of the room where he was sleeping. "It is very cold outside," said the camel. "I only want to get my nose in." The nose was let in, then the neck, and finally the whole body. Presently the miller began to be extremely inconvenienced at the ungainly companion he had obtained, in room certainly not large enough for both. "If you are inconveniened, you may leave," said the camel, "as for myself, I shall stay where I am."

The moral of the fable conceras all. When temptation comes, we must not yield to it. We must not allow so much as its "nose" to come in. Everything like sin is to be turned away from. He who yields even in the smallest degree will soon be entirely overcome; and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

CONTENTMENT.

Compare what thou hast not with what thou hast, and with which is best. This will keep thee from trouble for what thou wantest, and thy desires shall not disquiet thee. Thou art poor, but thou art wise, and hast many goods; or, perhaps thou hast none; but thou hast all the gold of Heaven—the sun, moon, and stars, and all the elements, and the Providence of God, and the charity of all well disposed people, as much as another man; thou canst walk in thy neighbor's fields, yea, even in thy enemy's ground, and enjoy all the pleasures of the morning. If thou recreate thyself with all the sweet odors, and behold the beauty of all God's creatures, and delight in that which God delights in—why shouldst thou be distracted?

Patriot

Renunciation of Sin.—If thou would'st be justified, acknowledge thy injustice; he that confesses his sin, begins his journey in salvation; he that is sorry for it, ends his pace; he that forsakes it, is at his journey's end.

THE TROPICS WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.

No wonder that Billy Bowlegs was loth to leave his native Kingdom, for he possessed a tropic domain within the temperate zone—the only spot on the globe where such a contradiction of climate and latitude exists. For this peculiarity the east side of the southern portion of the peninsula of Florida between the 25th and 26th parallels of latitude is much indebted to the genial proximity of the Gulf Stream, the tepid waters of which lave its shores, and ensure a height and equality of temperature almost similar to that which maintains on the Island of Cuba, a hundred miles further south. Consequently, there are few tropical productions of the Island which do not flourish with equal luxuriance in this portion of the United States. A man who owns a small "patch" of ten acres on Key Biscayne, nearly up to the 29th degree ten, advertises it for sale in Key West "Key of the Gulf," describes the property as having upon it 700 fruit trees, among which are the sweet orange, sour orange, citron, lime, lemon, avocate, mamee, mange, sapadillo, sugar-apple, coffee, and a variety of other trees and plants, the larger portion now in bloom." Truly an uppetible array. So we may have a small Cuba in these United States, now that we have ousted its late unprofitable possessors from their birth right. Pine-apples, bananas, and all that sort of vegetation, is fond of growing in the Florida tropics.

Expontation of California Wine.—The San Francisco Bulletin, of the 18th ult., says: It may not probably be known by the general public that the exportation of California wine to the Eastern States and Europe, is gradually on the increase. This, nevertheless, is the case, and almost every clipper that leaves our harbor for the East, carries more or less of this production, which, at no distant day, is to be the source of great wealth, and, perhaps, of more importance than the gold product itself. Yesterday, the clipper Corsair took out fourteen packages and twelve cases, containing four hundred gallons of wine, to New York, Boston and Philadelphia. The California wine, on account of its, peculiar flavor and purity, is getting to be a great favorite with the German population of the East.

SHALL I BE ONE OF THEM?

How divinely full of glory and pleasure shall that hour be, when all the millions of mankind that have been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb of God, shall meet together and stand around him, with every tongue and every heart full of joy and praise! How astonishing will be the glory and joy of that day, when all the saints shall join together in one common song of gratitude and love, and of everlasting thankfulness to their Redeemer! With what unknown delight and inexpressible satisfaction shall all that are saved from the ruins of sin and hell address the Lamb, that was slain, and rejoice in his presence?

An Increase of the Pay of the Navy.—An increase in the pay of the Navy is advocated in several intelligent quarters. We cordially favor the movement. The officers of the Navy have been poorly paid for years, their expenses considered, and it is quite time that an augmentation should take place. The First Lieutenant of a frigate, who has been thirty years in the service, receives only $1500 per annum. With this sum he is expected to maintain a large family, to pay heavy expenses when in foreign countries, and to keep up manner and style in harmony with his position. This, of course, can be done with economy, but in the event of death, his wife and children are left little better than beggars. So with all other officers of any position or responsibility. A change for the better is needed, and we sincerely trust it will be enrried into effect as speedily as possible.

At a meeting of the New York Historical Society, on the 7th inst., announcement was made of the presentation to the society of the Nineveh sculptures, which were sent to this country some time since, and have been exhibited at the rooms of the Athenæum, in that city. The marbles are fifteen in number, and they were purchased by James Lenox, Esq., of New York, for $3,000, who presented them to the Historical Society.

Gentleman and no Gentleman.—The late Vicar of Sheffield, the Rev. Dr. Sutton, once said to the late Dr. Peech, a veterinary surgeon:

"Mr. Peach, how is it you have not called upon me for your account?"

"Oh," said Mr. Peech, "I never ask a gentleman for money."

"Indeed," said the vicar, "then how do you get on if he don't pay?"

"Why," replied Mr. Peech, "after a certain time I conclude that he is not a gentleman, and then I ask him."

Cure for Cough or Hoarseness.—A writer in the Charleston Courier gives the following as a remedy for the above complaint: Chip up fat lightwood and put a handful of the chips into a pint of common spirits. A teaspoonful in a wine-glass of water on going to bed will cure a horseness, and, if taken three times a day, or whenever a cough is troublesome, it will effect a speedy cure. A few chips thrown into a hot shovel, and the odor breathed, will be found servicable in lung complaints and is calculated to relieve asthma.

PERSONAL.

Washington Irvin, though aged seventy-five, and suffering constantly from asthma, is stendily engaged on the fourth volume of the Life of Washington. This will comprise the Presidential terms of the illustrious subject of the work.

Lucien Bonaparte, lately visited Perth, Scotland, whilst touring to the Highlands, to study the Celtic language.

Walter Savage Landor, has taken up his residence at Genoa, where his family, which is numerous, possesses a fine estate; and one of the curious effects of the trial is, that it has led to a reconciliation between the aged poet and his wife, after a separation of forty years.

Meyerbeer is at present residing in Hadea, where he possesses a house, in which he some years back composed, exclusively for the city, a sixth act to "Robert le Diable," which has been played only at the theatres there.

George Griffian is hard at work on a series of discourses or themes from the Old Testament, such as the Creation, the Fall, the Flood.

Teutz's great painting for the Carolina Art Association has been received at Charleston.

Father Lacordaire, the great French pulpit orator, has just been re-elected Provincial of the Dominicans in France, a post which he had formerly occupied from the reestablishment of the order in France to 1854. He is to continue to direct the school of Soreze.

Miss Landen, sculptor, is to return to Italy shortly, to put into marble several commissions and designs.

The Princess Matilde has just received from the Sultan, a most superb prayer-carpet, the value of which is reported to be between three and four thousand pounds. The phrases from the poets which form the border, such as "Rose of the Garden," "Bud of Delights," etc., etc., are woven in pearls and emerals into the cloth of gold, of which the carpet is composed, while the sentence from the Koran, which occupies the centre, is composed of diamonds of the most costly kind.

The misapplication of English words by foreigners is often very ludicrous. It is said that Dr. Chalmers once entertained a distinguished guest from Switzerland, whom he asked if he would be helped to kippered salmon. The foreign divine asked the meaning of the uncouth word kippered, and was told that it meant preserved. The poor man in a public prayer soon after, offered a petition that the distinguished divine might long be "kippered to the Free Church of Scotland."

Antiquarian Dinner.—Lord B., well known for his love of everything out of the way, lately gave a dinner at the Baths of Lucca, of the following singular character: the meat, the fish, the vegetables, were all at least two years standing, preserved according to the plan of Mr. Appert. The table was supplied with sea water, and it to drink by the process recently discovered; the claret had been rescued, by the assistance of a diving-bell, from a merchant vessel sunk in the Thames more than a century ago, (!) and the bread was made from wheat some centuries old, which the noble Lord had himself brought from one of the pyramids of Egypt, and had sown in England! The dinner gave the greatest satisfaction.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 18.—The Odeon theater, on the Bowery was destroyed by fire on this afternoon. The flames spread to the Volks Garden building and others in the immediate vicinity, which were either consumed or seriously injured by fire and water.

Washington, Dec. 18.—Another disgraceful sparring scene came off in day on the Avenue, between two Members of Congress.

The Secretary has issued a notice asking for proposals for a loan of ten million dollars. Proposals will be received until the 24th of January, 1859. The balance in the Treasury is $4,641,06u. The receipts into Treasury for the past week were $1,3l0,000. Amount of drafts paid, $236,000. The increase of balance as compared with last week is $547,000.

Several prominent Mexican citizens held a consultation in this city last night in reference to that portion of the President's message which recommends the military occupation of Chihuahua and Sonora. They resolved to resist such a policy, and General Treas and Admiral Zerman, who were of the number left Washington to-day for Mexico for the purpose of organizing a vigorous opposition to any such attempt on the part of the United States.

Philadelphia, Dec. 18.—The jury, in the case of Allibone and Newhall, charged with a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of the Bank of Pennsylvania, have rendered a verdict that the defendants are not guilty. The attorney for the commonwealth acknowledged that the evidence did not sustain the prosecution.

St. Louis, Dec. 18.—The steam boiler of Belcher's sugar refinery, in this city, exploded this morning, shattering the portion of the building in which the boiler was situated, killing four men and severely injuring several others. It is feared some of the wounded will not recover.

LOCAL.

We hope the weather, which has been so very variable since the winter set in, is now settled for a while, at least—through the holidays, particularly. Of these, we have several coming in rapid succession—the 25th of December, Christmas, New Year's and the Eighth of January. The city was hardly ever so full, at this early period of the season, as it now is. The hotels are crowded, every day adding largely to the number of their guests. Of these a goodly proportion are with us for the whole season, which all indications hitherto very plainly is to be a remarkably busy and gay one. Already our streets are filled, every fine day, with fair promenaders, shoppers and callers. The purlieus of Canal, Chartres and Royal streets present an animating appearance, every forenoon. The shop windows being in all their glory, displaying a wealth of rich goods most temptingly arranged to catch the eye of the wayfarer. The opera and the theatres are all numerously attended, every evening, and we have on every hand proofs that our genial time of year has been successfully and pleasantly inaugurated. Fruits and flowers abound, business is flourishing, health prevails, and all things look smiling and propitious around us. Now is the time for our friends in other parts of the country to make us a visit—"the more the merrier." [Pic.

Not so Smart.—A customer named Hermon Larra, whose trade was to seek customers and sell his goods and his—cassimers, was picked up Saturday evening at the Opelousas Steamboat Landing. His business has been to swindle unsophisticated countrymen, by selling them brass articles, such as sleeve buttons, shirt studs, watches, etc., representing them to be gold, and obtaining from the purchasers something like a dollar on the cent profit. He was trading with a Hoosier about sleeve buttons, which he offered to sell him for three dollars, that were only worth probably three picayunes. He had nearly sold the countryman when one of the Second District officers, seeing the game pretended he wanted to buy, and, rather bad Hebrew in a little time. He was cashiered and will have to explain his trade principles to Recorder Waltz.

Stabbing.—John McLean went to the Charity Hospital this morning, with a stab in the small of the back, which had been inflicted on him on the steamboat landing. Fortunately for him, the wound was not of a dangerous character, and after having had it dressed by Dr. Bickham, the Assistant House Surgeon, he left the institution. His statement is that he had gone down to a boat to get a labor ticket, and was told that if he would roll out a barrel, one would be given him; that he accordingly, with another nine, rolled out a barrel; that a quarrel arose between him and this man in some way, in connection with the tickets, and he made use of no opprobious epithet, which the other took up, and drew a knife to resent; that he then endeavored to make off, but fell over a barrel or something else, in his way, when he was wounded. The name of the party who inflicted the stab is Washington Place. He was arrested and committed by Recorder Summers for examination on the 24th inst., in default of $500 bail. McLean, at the hospital, manifested a desire not to prosecute the affair.

Suspicious and Outrageous.—Wm. Rice was arrested at half past 2 o'clock this morning in the house of Mr. Nestor Prez in Foucher street, in which he was found under suspicious circumstances, with an axe in his possession, with which he threatened to take the life of Mr. Prez. He was taken before Recorder Summers this morning, and committed for examination on the 24th inst., in default of $350 bail.

Insane.—A Spaniard, whose name is given as Wakles, was taken charge of yesterday in the Third District, by officer Roth, as being insane; and officer Sussera yesterday, for a similar reason, took charge of William Somerville, in the First District. The respective Recorders of the two districts this morning sent the poor fellows to the Insane Asylum.

New Orleans School of Medicine.—According to previous notice, the students of the New Orleans School of Medicine met in the Amphitheatre yesterday evening, the 20th inst., for the purpose of electing a Valedictorian. On motion, Mr. Alston took the chair, and Mr. C. H. Poindexter and Mr. Mitchell were appointed Secretaries. Mr. Perry of Georgia, Mr. Hopkins of Mississippi, and Mr. Evans of Alabama, were severally nominated. On ballot, Mr. Evans received the largest number of votes, and was thereupon unanimously elected.

Dedication.—The ceremony of dedicating the New Methodist Episcopal Church, at the corner of Felicity Road and Dryades street, was performed with great impressiveness and effect on Sunday. There was a very large attendance, and a very edifying sermon was preached on the occasion, by Bishop Paine, of Nashville. A collection in aid of the funds for defraying the expense of constructing the edifice was made, and we are informed that the very large sum of $2,500 was contributed! If this is so, it speaks handsomely, indeed, for the zeal and liberality of the congregation.

COMMERCIAL.

Tuesday Evening, December 21, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New-Orleans Classification:

Inferior	7 @ 8	Good Middling	11⅞@12⅛
Ordinary	8½@10	Middling Fair	12⅜@12⅝
Good Ordinary	10⅜@10⅝	Fair	— @—
Low Middling	11 @11⅛	Good Fair	— @—
Middling	11⅜@11½	Good and Fine	— @—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 18th inst., furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business:

The operations of the week have been somewhat interfered with by unfavorable weather, a holiday, etc. Sugar and Molasses yielded early in the week, under the pressure of increased supplies, though Coffee has been well maintained, in the face of adverse European advices received by the Persia and Arabia. In Tobacco we are without any movement of consequence, and increased arrivals have unsettled the market for Western Produce.

The Arabia's advices to the 4th instant, reports a decline 1-16@⅛d. in the Liverpool Cotton market, with sales for the week of 38,000 bales, at quotations for fair Orleans 7 5-16, Middling do. 7 1-16. The stock at Liverpool was 853,000 bales. Manchester advices were favorable, the market for goods and yarns being firm, with moderate transactions.

The river has risen two feet eight inches within the week and is now ten feet below high-water mark.

The sales of Cotton during the first three days of the week amount to 18,000 bales. On Wednesday about 8500 bales were disposed of. The day following being a holiday, but little business was done—sales of the week, 32,000 bales. Total receipts of Cotton for the week, are 70,263 bales. The supply of money, both in the banks and for out-door operations, is large beyond precedent and is constantly increasing. The Cotton market closed in an unsettled state, and some sales were reported at easier prices.

Cotton.—On Saturday the market was dull and uncalled, barely 2000 bales were disposed of, showing a decline of ⅛c. or more, and on Monday sales were limited to about 3,500 bales, at prices too irregular to admit of alterations in our quotations at present. It is said that 11¼c have been offered for Liverpool Middling, but has been generally refused.

Sugar.—The sales of the week amount to about 12,000 hhds.; we quote for inferior and refining, 3¾@4, common to good common, 4¼@5, fair to fully fair, 5⅛@5¾, prime to choice, 6@6¾, centrifugal and clarified, 6¾@8; Reduced, 8¼c ₱ lb.

Molasses.—The sales of the week are about 10,000 bbls, the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 25@26½; prime to choice, 27@28; in hhds. 31@32c, ₱ gallon.

Flour.—The sales of the week have reached about 14,000 bbls. at $5@5 25 for superfine Indiana and St Louis; $5 87½ for fancy, etc.; $5 50@6 00 for extra; and $4 25@4 62½ for unbranded.

Grain.—There is a slight decrease in the supply of Corn, and buyers operate more freely—prices range from 75@80c ₱ bushel for yellow and white. Oats are scarce at 73@74 and 76c ₱ bushel, for new to prime old. Wheat still arrives slowly, there have been sales of ordinary red and mixed at 80@82½c ₱ bushel.

Peas.—The translations in Peas have been at $15@18 25 ₱ bbl.

Beef.—Prime Mess and favorite brands, are selling at $14@$10.

Bacon.—Sales at for shoulders 7¾@7¾, ribbed sides, 9½@9¾, clear sides 10@10¼c, and hams from 9¾@10c ₱ lb according to quality.

Lard.—we quote at 11¼@12c ₱ lb. tierces and kegs.

Butter.—Roll, 22@24c ₱ lb.

Coffee.—We quote 10¾@11c for fair to good fair, 11¼@11½ for prime.

Live Stock.—The supply is ample, and the market easy. We quote: Beef—Western, 7½@8¼c, Texas, $5@6 50, according to quality; calves and yearlings $30@ 50, Hogs 8½c ₱ lb; Sheep $4@5. Cows $35@75 ₱ head.

UNION PRAYER MEETING HYMNS.—A NEW edition of this popular little Hymn Book, is now ready for sale. This book was prepared last Spring, under the advice of several conferences of different denominations, to meet the wants felt in the prayer meetings in Jayne's Hall. It soon found its way into the daily prayer meetings in the principal cities of the United States, thence into the towns and villages. One hundred and fourteen hymns have been added to those contained in the first edition, thus making a collection, which, while it is so small as to be carried in the vest-pocket, contains all the hymns in use, among most worshipping assemblies. These hymns are all purely devotional. Christians may here find the good old hymns which they have loved from their childhood, side by side with those of more recent date. Among them will be found hymns suitable for the daily prayer meeting, the family altar, and the private devotions of the Christian. Published and for sale, in different styles of binding, by THE AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION, 1122 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

☞ They are for sale by all Booksellers. [d8 4t]

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

THE END OF THE RAINBOW.

"Come, Nelly," I cried, on a soft April day,
When the sunbeams were chasing the rain-drops away,
The rainbow has lit on yon hill, and you know
"There are kegs full of gold at the end of the bow."

We were young, thoughtless children, sweet Nelly and I,
And we thought that the hill-top was close to the sky
We thought, too, (our brothers had said it was so,)
We should find heaps of gold at the end of the bow.

So onward we trudged over meadows of green,
Where violets modest, and daisies were seen;
Nor paused till we stood in the valley below,
And gazed all around for the end of the bow.

"Not here," I said sadly, but Nelly replied:
"It is hid in the moss by the waterfall's side;
Run fast, if you mover e'er the pebbles so slow,
I'm sure I'll be first at the end of the bow."

We found not the treasure we searched for till night:
But Nelly, sweet fragile blossom, was right;
From this valley of tears she was first called to go,
To the spot where is resting the end of the bow.

Where rainbows of glory unceasingly play,
Dear Nelly is singing with angels to-day;
And her light, snowy pinions are folded, I trow,
In the fullness of joy at the end of the bow.

ANNETTE'S RAGGED CLASS.

A True Story.—As Annetta S——, a happy little girl, about nine or ten years old, was returning from school one summer afternoon, her path was impeded by the gambols of a dirty, ragged boy, who was jumping over the door-steps, turning somersaults on the flags, and otherwise expressing his perfect indifference to the world around him, and everything in fact but his own particular enjoyment. His dirty face, when it stood right side up, showed signs of intelligence, and Annette wondered much how he could prefer to put it where his feet should be.

"Perhaps, if he knew anything in his head, he would not like to stand upon it," gravely meditated Annette; and before she could skip out of his way, another turn brought his feet into contact with her school-bag, and away it flew into the middle of the street. Annette heard the fall of her books with dismay, and hastily ran and caught them up, while the boy stood hesitating whether to run away; but Annette's good humored face, as she returned up to the path, seemed to influence him.

"I didn't mean it, miss," said he sheepishly.

"No, I know you didn't," said Annette, kindly; "but why do you like to go upon your head?"

"It's good fun," returned the boy, repeating the performance with infinite glee, only keeping clear of his little questioner.

"Poor boy," thought Annette, "I wonder if anybody ever teaches him anything," and she stopped and looked compassionately on him; then, going closer, she said, in a tone of childish simplicity, but with a true hearted interest that would have done honor to the most devoted Christian in the land: 'Little boy, will you tell me, do you know anything about Jesus Christ?"

"No, I don't; who is He?" said the ragged boy, staring at her with surprise.

"Poor boy; then you don't know that he is the Savior, God's own Son, and that He came down from heaven to save bad people and make them good."

"No, I don't; I never heard about Him; but I ain't so bad as Dick and Bill; they are bad and no mistake."

"We are all bad in some way," said Annette, "and I should so much like to tell you about Jesus Christ. Will you come with me, and I'll read to you about Him, and then you will know the way to be saved?" And leading the way to her father's door, which was unlatched, she pushed it open, and bade the wondering boy to follow her.

At the end of the passage was a small room which looked into the narrow slip of ground called, in town, "a garden." The room was used as a play-room, and was but scantily furnished. Here Annette eagerly hung her bonnet on a hook, took up the Bible, and sat down on a low form, bidding the boy sit beside her. Then she began to tell him that the Bible is God's book to teach how His dear Son came to die for sinners; how minding what it says, makes people love to be good and wish to go to heaven; how Jesus made His disciples let children come to Him that he might bless them; and how those who come to Jesus are taken care of, so that they need not be ragged and dirty. Then, feeling the impossibility of telling him half she wished, she was ready to cry at the shortness of her opportunity, until a sudden thought darted into her mind, and, brightening up, she exclaimed—

"Will you learn to read? shall I teach you? and then you can see all about it for yourself, and I can save up my money and get you a Bible."

"Yes, I'll like that; shall I come to-morrow, again?" said the boy, opening his eyes wide at the strange interest of this little girl, whose face was beaming with animation and love.

"Yes, to-morrow," replied Annette, delighted at his readiness to learn. "But you must learn a text now, for fear something makes you stay away to-morrow." Then she taught him, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved;" and after making him repeat it many times, she told him he might "go now."

As Annette raised her eyes, which had been earnestly fixed entirely on her pupil, she met the gaze of her mother, who stood in mute surprise for some moments at the door. Annette sprang into her arms, while the lad, rather aghast at the sight of the lady, ran off into the street.

"My dear Annette should have asked me first about this," said her mother anxiously; "you don't know the boy."

"Oh, mamma, he didn't know anything about Jesus Christ, and I was in such a hurry to tell him, mamma, for fear he should run away, that I forgot to ask whether you were in. But you will let me teach him, won't you, dear mamma? He cannot be saved you know if Jesus does not save him; he can't learn to be good till he loves Jesus, mamma."

"You teach him, my darling, if he is willing to come and learn," said the happy, grateful mother.

The ragged boy did come to learn. At the same hour the next day, leaping, racing, tumbling along, he found his way to the door, where Annette was anxiously awaiting him. This time her mamma sat at work in the room, and the boy and his teacher sat side by side on their low seat before the window.

At first he seemed particularly amused at the curious looking things she called "the alphabet," but he soon learned the names of the letters; and when he looked tired or impatient, she closed the book and taught him a verse of Scripture, and some lines of a hymn.

Ragged schools were not yet established then, and Mrs. S. knew of no suitable school to which to transfer her little daughter's protege. She spoke kindly to him, and learned that his father was dead and his mother very poor; that he was often half starved, and earned what he could by begging, selling matches or anything that could be obtained, whether always honestly or not did not exactly appear.

"If you will come and learn steadily and try to be a good boy, I will find some clothes for you, and perhaps your mother will take you to Church, and you could go to the Sunday School. Would you like that?" asked Mrs. S.

"No; I'd rather come to Miss. She can teach me well enough."

"Oh, mamma! on Sunday? May be indeed? And, you know, I can save some of my dinner for him. Oh, isn't that nice?" cried Annette, clapping her hands with joy.

"Do you know why my little girl is so pleased?" said Mrs. S., seeing the boy gaze upon Annette with astonishment.

"No; I'm wondering at her all the while," he replied.

"I will tell you. She loves the Lord Jesus Christ, and she knows, because the Bible says it, that only those who know and love Him, can be saved from wickedness here, and punishment in another world after they die; and she wishes every one she sees to love Him, and be good and happy always; and now she thinks that, when you hear how kind and loving Jesus is, you will wish to be his child too. She has a pretty hymn about Jesus who lives above the sky, and when you can say it nicely, don't you think your mother will be pleased to hear it? And the little boy who learns and thinks about Jesus, will, I hope, try to be kind and dutiful to his poor mother."

"I'm not as bad as Dick Bankes; he's very bad to his mother," said the boy.

"Oh, how dreadful!" cried Annette; "do bring him with you, and I can tell him what the Bible says about it. Bring him on Sunday."

"May be he won't come, but I'll try."

And he did try, and Dick Bankes did come, and others also; and the dear little girl spent the happiest hours of her life in telling the poor ragged boys how Jesus pitied and died to save poor sinners.

"My Annette must not forget, while using all the means in her power," said her mother, "that the life-giving blessing is in the hands of God. He alone 'teacheth to profit,' but he answers prayer, and never fails to bless at some time or other, the prayerful work which has been done for the love of Jesus, and the glory of his name."

Every little girl cannot and need not imitate Annette in the precious manner of doing good; but, in the tender, loving spirit which pitied the ignorant and lost, and set about some means of proving it; in the sincere and glowing love that filled her heart towards Jesus Christ, as her own precious Savior; and her earnest desire to save and honor him, all may happily and acceptably follow her example. And "even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right." None are too young or too weak to do something for Jesus.—Christian Treasury.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Linnæus.

Although Linnæus, the great Swedish naturalist, stands out as a star of the first magnitude amongst the philosophical cultivators of natural science, yet we have no good life of him in the English language. A Miss Brightwell has recently published a life of Linnæus; in London, but according to the Athenæum the work is not by any means complete. Linnæus was born in the month of May, 1707 (two years after the death of John Ray,) at Rashult, in the parish of Stenbrohult, in Smaland, a province in the south of Sweden. His father was assistant minister of the parish, and was as poor as most Swedish ministers. The youth was sent to Lund to study medicine. At an early age he made the tour of Lapland alone on foot, and came back laden with treasures of natural history knowledge. Although successful beyond all precedent as a physician at Stockholm, his heart was always fixed on the Chair of Botany at Upsala. At last he obtained the object of his hopes; and what a change came over the botanic garden and the natural history teaching of the place! Gradually the pupils of this small University increased, till one year 1500 pupils attended his classes. In lecturing, his style was eloquent and winning to the last degree. Miss Brightwell gives the following account of his lectures:

"He gave lectures on natural history, the medicinal properties of plants, dietetics, and other subjects besides botany; and his delivery is said to have been a model for popular speakers—energetic, instructive and entertaining. One of his hearers eulogizes him thus: 'Science streamed with peculiar pleasantness from his lips; he spoke with the conviction and perspicuity which his deep penetration and ardent zeal imparted to him; and it was impossible to hear him without attention, and without participating in his enthusiasm.' It is evident he possessed, in a remarkable degree, the power of personally interesting his students and attaching them to himself. The results were very striking; the ordinary number of pupils had been 500; after his death it was reduced to the same average. It now speedily reached 1000; and in 1750, during which year Linnæus was rector, it amounted to 1500. The fame of the University spread over Europe, and even to America, and the young men of various countries flocked thither. Impressed with the importance of conveying instruction in a popular manner, and by personal observation, Linnæus took his students into the fields and woods, there to gain an intimate acquaintenance with the productions of nature.

"During his summer lectures he made excursions, twice in the week, at their head; and was often attended by them to the number of 200. They went in parties, to explore different districts of the country, and whenever some rare or remarkable plant, or any other natural curiosity, was discovered, a signal was given, by a horn or trumpet, at the sound of which the whole corps gathered around their chief to hear his demonstrations or remarks. After exploring the neighborhood "from morn till dewy eve," the various detachments, congregating together, returned with flowers in their hats, and, clustering around their leader, marched, to the sound of drums and trumpets, through the city to the garden. The eclat given to these floral exploits made them matters of general interests, and not unfrequently foreigners and persons of distinction came from Stockholm to accompany Linnæus and his young companions."

Linnæus died on the 10th of January, 1778, in the seventy-first year of his age. All Europe lamented his loss, and the King of Sweden, in his speech to the States, referred to his death, and ordered a medal to be struck. But one of the strangest things connected with his death was the purchase of his library and museum by a young Englishman, who afterwards became Sir James Edward Smith, for the sum of £1029. This prize was the foundation of the Linnean Society of London, which to this day is the object of attraction to naturalists from all parts of the world, as possessing the identical plants and animals which were named in the successive editions of the "Systema Naturæ" of Linnæus.

M. Guizot.

There is no profounder philosopher, no abler statesman in France, than M. Guizot. At a meeting of the Protestant Bible Society of France, just held at Paris, M. Guizot, who presided, delivered an address on the labors of that body during the past year. After stating that the activity of the society continued unabated, he called the attention of his hearers to the fact that, notwithstanding the attacks made on the objects of the society, and the means which it employed, it made no reply, but quietly and steadily pursued its course. He said:

"Is it solely moderation, prudence, or even fear of entering into a defence of its conduct, that induces it to remain impervious to such attacks? No, gentlemen, a higher and more Christian motive regulates our acts. We have full faith, on the one hand, in the Divine origin and inspiration of the Holy Writings; and we believe, on the other, in their efficacious action and salutary influence on the human mind. These two convictions are intimately connected together. How is it possible not to believe in the moral efficacy of the Old and New Testaments when their Divine inspiration is once admitted? How is it possible not to have confidence in their action on man when once their emanating from God is not denied? If you ever meet anywhere with doubt as to the moral efficacy of the Holy Books, or with hesitation or lukewarmness in disseminating them among mankind, be perfectly certain that what is wanting is faith—firm and enduring faith in their Divine origin. Whoever believes God to be really present, acting and speaking in these Writings, cannot be averse to men hearing his Divine voice, and feeling its influence in their souls. We are not ignorant of the difficulties which may arise in reading and studying the Bible, nor of the abuse which may be made of part of its contents. We know the obscurities and problems which the learned may meet with, and the inconveniences which prudent men may apprehend from them; but these are only the embarrassments arising from human knowledge, and from the condition of human infirmity. Above such embarrassments and inconveniences towers the Divine character of the Holy Books, and the Divine breath which fills and animates them. The monument is sometimes difficult to penetrate into and to explain, but God is everywhere—everywhere makes himself seen, heard, and felt; and athwart all obscurities and all difficulties, the continual spectacle of the presence and action of God, the constant echo of his voice cannot fail to move, enlighten, and dominate mankind. No doubt, even, among the populations where it is most assiduous and general, the reading of the Sacred Writings does not overcome—far from it—all the bad passions of men; it does not prevent all errors and all faults. Man remains full of weakness and vice, even when he knows himself in the presence of God. But the habitual reading of the Holy Books preserves nations from the greatest of perils—it prevents them from forgetting God. It possesses the virtue of causing God to be for them, not an idea, a name, a system of philosophy, the secret of an enigma, but the real and living God, under whose eyes they are constantly, amid the conflicts and trials of the world. A great proof of this has been given in our time and is being continued in our presence. Christian faith has been, and is still, very fiercely and obstinately attacked. How many efforts have been, and are still made, how many books, serious or frivolous, able or silly, have been and are spread incessantly, in order to destroy it in men's minds! Whore has this redoubtable struggle been supported with the greatest energy and success? and where has Christian faith been best defended? There, where the reading of the Sacred Books is a general and assiduous part of public worship; there where it takes place in the interior of families, and in solitary meditation. It is the Bible—the Bible itself—which combats and triumphs most efficaciously in the war between incredulity and belief."

M. Guizot, as a proof of the power of Bible reading, said that the late eminent Protestant pastor, M. Monod, derived the vast influence he exercised over his flock, not from his talents or exemplary character, but from his profound faith in the Bible, and from his constant study of it. M. Guizot concluded by exhorting his hearers to follow so excellent an example.

Faustin I.

The Chronique Parisienne contains the following facetious story: "The Emperor, Faustin—I., who imitates France in all things, and has, like her, princes, marshals, dukes, counts, colleges, and universities, recently resolved to establish an academy of forty members, like the world-renowned French Academy. But it was not easy to select the forty, every inhabitant of the empire who could write his own name thinking himself qualified. So his Majesty decreed that 3000 of his subjects, who possessed the reputation of being the most lettered of all, should, on a given day, assemble at his palace and be subjected to a literary test. When they were collected he announced that the test was the writing of the word citron, and that those who made no error in the spelling should be members of the Academy. Pens, ink, and paper were brought; each of the 3000 people wrote the word, and the judges of the land and the bench of bishops were charged to examine the 3000 papers. They proclaimed that 39 only of the candidates had written the word correctly—that is, with a C, the remaining 2961 having used an S. 'Only thirty-nine!' cried the Emperor, 'and we want forty. Well, I will be the fortieth member myself.' 'Sire,' cried the judges, 'your Majesty will no doubt deign to submit to the test?' 'Of course,' exclaimed Faustin; and with a large, bold hand he wrote Xitron with an X. The Judges looked puzzled for a moment, and then, after glancing at each other, proclaimed that his Majesty had passed triumphantly through the ordeal: 'The Emperor was thereupon proclaimed, amidst the enthusiasm of the assemblage, a member of the Academy. 'And I will be perpetual secretary, too,' added his Imperial Majesty, which pardonable vanity."

Coleridge.

I had one just flogging. When I was about thirteen, I went to a shoemaker and begged him to take me as an apprentice. He, being an honest man, immediately took me to Bowyer, who got into a great rage, knocked me down, and even pushed Crispin rudely out of the room. Bowyer asked me why I had made myself such a fool? to which I answered, that I had a great desire to be a shoemaker, and that I hated the thought of being a clergyman: "Why so?" said he. "Because, to tell you the truth, sir," said I, "I am an infidel!" For this, without more ado, Bowyer flogged me—wisely, as I think—soundly, as I know. Any whining or sermonizing would have gratified my vanity, and confirmed me in my absurdity; as it was, I was laughed at, and got heartily ashamed of my folly.

RATHER A TOUGH STORY.

The following which we find in an English paper, will do to go along with the New York Evening Post's account of the $2000 note dodge at Stewart's, in that city:

"A few days ago a lady of fashionable appearance alighted from a carriage and entered a large drapery establishment not one hundred miles from the Elephant and Castle, when she selected a parcel of goods to the value of nearly £100. When her purchases were completed, she stated that she had forgotten to bring her check book, and desired that one of the young men would accompany her home with the goods, when she would hand him a check for the amount. Not liking to entrust the business to any of his numerous employees, the wary proprietor himself stepped into the carriage with the lady, and was rapidly driven to Packham, where, at a large and respectable looking house, they alighted, and the goods were taken in.

The lady then politely ushered the anxious and wary linendraper into the drawing-room, desiring him to wait for a brief moment until she fetched the check book. The brief moment passed, and many more also, but the lady did not make her appearence. Half an hour, three quarters, ye, and hour had gone by, and still the fashionable debtor did not come. Meanwhile the worthy draper became anxious, alarmed, furious, and rising up, vigorously applied the bell rope. This brought in a man servant, who was instantly attacked with a string of questions as to the lady and the goods.

The man replied in a gruff and commanding tone that unless he (the draper behaved himself in a milder manner he should be placed under restraint, for that he, the speaker, had positive instructions to confine all lunatics who were intractable. "Who are you, and what is this place?" were next asked by the panting creditor almost in one breath. "This is a private asylum for lunatics, and I am the keeper," coolly observed the man, "and unless you can manage to 'draw it mild' I shall put you into the strong room."

The horrible truth was out. The fashionable lady had forged two physicians certificates, and prepared the proprietor of the asylum for the reception of his customer, by stating herself to be his wife, and by ingeniously indicating the form his madness took, and after purchasing the goods, had driven to this place, and after lodging her customer, had departed, cunningly returning the parcel containing the goods to the carringe, and thus hocussing both the draper and the proprietor of the asylum. The driver of the carriage must, of course, have been "In at the game."

A REGIMENT OF CAMELS.

The Liverpool Mercury publishes the following letter, from a correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, dated at Allahabad, describing a naval military corps which has been trained to the service in India:

Last evening, the governor-general, commander-in chief and suite, were out on the maidan reviewing the Camel Corps, about 400 of these ungainly beasts going through military evolutions. It was a novel and curious spectacle to see these animals performing almost all the movements of cavalry. Besides the native driver (who is, of course, armed) there is on every camel a hurdy Britou, who occupies the back seat, and is quite in a position to use his rifle. The camels are well trained to the word of command. On a recognised touch of the guiding strieg, down would they drop on their knees, the riflemen would be off in a second and go into skirmishing order till the word of recall was issued, when they would shoot back to their places, remount, and almost simultaneously, like a brown mass growing out of the ground, would the camels regain their feet (so to speak) in their own awkward mode—that is, first their hinder parts, and then their long stretching necks. You can fancy what a rare scene the whole was.

PLEASANT INCIDENT.

At the funeral of a little baby in New Sharon, a few days since, a circumstance occurred, remarkable cheering and suggestive.

The little one all beautifully robed for the grave, was laid in its coffin on the morning of its burial. The weeping friends placed in its little hand a small boquet of flowers, among which was an unopened rosebud, of the "Rose of Sharon." The lid was then placed upon the coffin, and the funeral service performed. When after the lapse of not more than two or three hours, the coffin was opened again, and the friends gathered round to look upon it for the last time, that bud had become a full blown rose, while grasped in the cold hand of death. It seemed as though a voice came up from those beautiful sealed lips, saying, "weep not for me; though broken from the parent stem, I am blooming in the Paradise of God. Millions of infant souls compose the family above."—Maine Evangelist.

OBITUARIES.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

CHARLES SMITH, Sen., died on the 24th of November, 1858, at his residence on Bayou Poydrass, West Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana, after a short illness of congestive fever, aged fifty-four years. He was a native of Sussex county, Virginia; at an early age, he removed to the vicinity of Bayou Sara, Louisiana, where he married Miss Elizabeth M. Sample; thence to Madison county, Mississippi, thence to West Baton Rouge, where he closed his earthly career. For some years, he had been a regular attendant at Church; and, in 1856, at a revival, carried on by Bros. Keener, Avery and Suratt, he was happily converted, and appointed class-leader and steward, also a sunday school teacher. He was a good man, and his death is a public loss to the neighborhood, and to the Church as well as his family and we feel, individually, that we have lost a friend, but are consoled in the assurance that our loss is his eternal gain. SAMUEL HAWES.

MRS. SARAH E. McCLURE, wife of Dr. Wm. A. McClure, daughter of Major E. and Elizabeth Holtzclaw, died in the twenty-eight year of her age of heart disease in Shuqualak, Noxubbe county Mississippi. To know her intimately was to love her, and they who knew her best loved her most. In all the relations, as daughter, sister, friend and wife—engraven on their hearts are the works of her virtue; and enshrined in their bosoms the memory of her moral, social, intellectual, and religious worth; truly it may be said, that Sarah was an Christian, and death did not find her unprepared. A short time after she married, which was in December, 1848, she fully gave herself to God, and was made to rejoice in the hope of heaven; she joined the Free Baptist Church, as she had been raised up in that faith. About a year afterwards her husband joined as a seeker the Methodist Episcopal Church, and following the precepts of the holy writ, that a house divided against itself shall not stand—and her pure religious heart rising above the prejudices of Church discipline, she joined with him, and ever lived a consistant member till death summoned her away. She had for many years been a sufferer, and was confined to her bed eight weeks before her death; and oh the intense suffering of that eight weeks, time will never erase from my memory; but she loved with Christian fortitude and resignation. She often talked to her friends, and husband about dying; and bade them prepare for death; and many times begged of her husband to raise her two little boys up in the fear and admonition of God. She prayed many times during her sickness to be spared for the sake of her husband and children; but, on the morning of her death, when she saw she must die, and heard the gentle flap of the death-angel's wing, she calmly closed her eyes, and with the words, I am gone; went up to glory. If love could have disarmed death, then my sister had not died, but lived to bless, as only a mother can, her precious little boys, and cheer the declining years of her new desolate husband. W. M. HOLTZCLAW.

MRS IANTHA ADALINE NORVELL, wife of William Norvell, and daughter of David and Maria Ford, died November 19th, 1858, in the twenty-third year of her age, at the residence of her father at Barksville, Newton county, Texas. Her disease was complicated, lingering, and of a typhoid kind, she was confined to her bed for nine weeks, suffered much, but was never heard to murmur or complain, but endured her sufferings, with quietude, patience, and perfect Christian resignation, during her entire sickness, she had the untiring attention of her devoted husband and parents, with many kind neighbors and friends; and had constantly, day and night, the close and watchful care and attention of the best medical aid the country could afford; but all to no avail, except to afford momentary relief from pain. Never was there a greater anxiety and a deeper interest manifested at the sick couch of the afflicted, than was for her by her physicians, relatives and friends. But their anxiety was only increased by suspense, until the grim monster death executed his office, and all suspense and anxiety were turned to sorrow and mourning; but not as those mourn who have no hope. Mrs. Norvell not only bore her affliction with Christian patience and resignation; but she died triumphantly happy. She was forcibly impressed from the commencement of her disease that she would not recover and was soon to die; which presentiment, she frequently spoke of to her husband and parents; but it was thought to be the influence of the disease upon her mind. But, O! it was mournfully true. Her disease, was obstinate, and unyielding in its coerse until its end was accomplished. But, glory to God! That end was peace to the sufferer. One of the physicians who witnessed the death remarked to the writer, that he had witnessed many deaths but never before so triumphant and happy a one as the death of Mrs. Norvell. Never before had he seen so clear an exhibition of the strength and supports of religion. The doctor is a believer in the Christian religion, but has never thought enough of it to embrace it and attach himself to the visible Church. May God sanctify this providence to his conversion. The daughter, the wife, the sister, the friends, the mother, the Christian, sleeps in death, until the resurrection-morn shall bring her forth with the saints of God. A short time before she died, when all nervous strength seemed to have failed, and her power of articulation ceased. While the hymn composed by Mrs. Dana with the appropriate words was being sung. "O sing to me of Heaven." She broke forth in melodious strain, and in an audible voice, assisting in singing the two first stanzas, when her voice failed and she sank again. After the singing ceased, and the spirit was just taking leave of her body, her father took her by the hand, and asked her if her evidence was still clear and her confidence unshaken to press his hand, which she did, and again raised her arm, when he said my child, that religion Christ brought into the world you have been taught from your infancy, embraced in your youth, practiced and enjoyed through life, is sustaining you in death, and will give you a safe passport across cold Jordan into the paradise of God. Her reply was, yes, and my sufferings will all end. Thus died a dutiful child, a loving wife, an affectionate mother, a kind friend, and devoted Christian—beloved by all who knew her. And whose death the Church mourns, with many devoted friends and relations. Her burial was attended by a large number of friends and acquaintances who seemed to be deeply affected at her death. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labor, and their works do follow them. The Lord bless her discousolate, and deeply afflicted husband; and may the prayer of a dying companion be realized, that he live and die a Christian, and meet her in heaven. She left an infant daughter fifteen months old bearing her own name, Iantha Adaline—to the care and training of its grand parents—and may the Lord help them to train it as they did its mother, for the Lord and God grant them sustaining grace under the bereavement. THE LAMENTATION OF JERUSALEM:

FROM PSALM CXXXVII.

By Elizabeth Mary Allison.

By the waters of Babel we sat down and wept,
For our hearts with remembrance of Zion was rent;
And we thought of the vale where our forefathers slept—
Of the mount whence our prayers to Jehovah were sent.

And we hung up our harps on the willows that there,
Were drooping like captives afar from their home;
For how from our souls in the depth of despair,
Should the sweet gush of psalm and of melody come?

O, how should we sing of the Lord and His might,
In the land where His name is unfeared, unador'd
Where the temples of Baal alone meet the sight,
And unholy libations to idols are pour'd.

O, Jerusalem! if ever my spirit should prove
A traitor to thee, in the hour of thy need,
May this hand be enchain'd by the fetters it wove,
Give this heart, on the arrow it pointed, to bleed.

O, if I remember thee not in thy woe—
Thou city of Zion, of David and God—
May this tongue from the palate it cleaves to, ne'er go,
But in agony cleave there, beneath the green sod.

Remember the children of Edom, O Lord!
How they cried, of Jerusalem—down, down with the walls!
Shall the cry of their hatred reach heaven, unabhorr'd?
Shall they 'scape from the wrath that on blasphemy falls?

O, daughter of Babylon! 'compass'd with sin—
How blest shall he be that shall bind thee in chains,
That shall hold thee a captive in bondage within,
And give thee back Israel's sorrow and pains.

So blest shall he be, that in infancy's bloom,
Shall give all thy children untimely to die;
So the crimes of their fathers no'er light on their tomb—
So they join with the cherubim choir on high.

THE CHINESE AT HOME.

The Treaty with China having been ratified by the Senate, it may not be uninteresting to our readers to know something of the inner life of that singular people. We have therefore translated from the French a few paragraphs, illustrative of their habits and manners.

CHINESE DINNER PARTIES:

The Chinese have two kinds of dinner parties. The simpler one consists of only about a dozen dishes; but on grand occasions they serve at least twenty-four dishes on the table, and a great deal of form and ceremony is observed. That punctuality may be observed by the guests, it is common to send three notes of invitation. The first about three days before the party is to be given; the second, on the day on which it is to take place; and the third, when the dinner is ready to be served. The room in which the feast is prepared is ornamented with jars and vases filled with exquisite flowers, with paintings and porcelain of every variety. Generally, as many tables are provided as there are invited guests—unless the number of the latter is very great, when two are placed at a table; but it is extremely rare to see three persons at the same table.

The tables are ranged in a line on each side of the hall, and the guests are placed opposite to each other, seated in arm chairs. The tables have neither table-cloths nor napkins; yet the high varnish of the tables gives an air of great neatness. The tables at each extremity are ornamented with a variety of meats and fruits, vases of flowers and pyramids—but, like our epergnes, are seldom touched.

The host having welcomed his guests, wine is brought in a silver or porcelain cup, which he takes in his hands and, having bowed to his visitors, he raises his head towards heaven; raising the cup also, he pours the wine on the ground. This is to testify that he receives everything from the bounty of God; and resembles the libations paid by the ancient Greeks before each repast.

After some few civilities, prescribed by Chinese etiquette, the giver of the feast conducts his principal guest to the arm-chair destined for him, to be seated. This honor the guest declines with much ceremony, declaring himself unworthy such high consideration. At length he takes the seat, and all the other guests immediately place themselves at the tables indicated to them.

All being seated, four or five commedians richly dressed enter the dining-hall and salute the guests, bowing so low that their foreheads touch the ground. This ceremony takes place between the two rows of tables, and in front of a long table covered with lights, on which stands porcelain perfumery-pans, from which issue the finest and most delicate odors. Having finished their salutations, the principal commedian opens a large book containing, in letters of gold, the titles of forty or fifty comedies which they are able to enact, and presenting it to the principal guest begs him to select the piece which most pleases him; he declines, of course, and the book is handed successively to each guest; all having declined to choose the piece, it is again presented to the most distinguished guest, who then names the piece which he thinks will be most agreeable to the company.

The representation commences by a symphony of musical instruments—tambourines, fifes, flutes, trumpets and other noisy instruments—which would lead a stranger to conclude that it was a piece of etiquette on the part of the host to make his guests deaf if possible.

The comedies performed at feasts are represented without any decorations or scenery; they simply spread a piece of carpet on the floor, and it is from a chamber or balcony near, that the actors emerge to perform their parts; the yards are filled with a number of spectators, who are permitted to enter and witness the representation. Ladies are sometimes invited, but do not enter the hall—but see and hear all that passes from behind a screen, which effectually conceals them.

THE REPAST:

Is always commenced by drinking puro wine. The master of the feast first takes a cup, and with one knee on the ground, cries aloud—"You are invited, gentlemen, to take a cup of wine." At these words, each guest takes his cup with both hands, raises it first to his forehead, then lowers it and drinks. The host presses them to drink by his example, showing the bottom of his cup, urges each to imitate him. This ceremony is repeated several times; and not to urge the guests, even to being intoxicated or to appear to be so, is considered a breach of hospitality.

While the guests are drinking, each table is served with a porcelain dish containing some ragout which does not require the use of a knife. The maitre d'hotel invites them to eat, and they do so, employing, instead of a fork, two small pieces of stick, which are placed for that purpose on the table before each chair. But one dish is placed on the table at a time, but is constantly being removed and succeeded by new ones, each containing some delicacy much prized by the Chinese. The guests are urged to eat and drink. Sometimes, entreaties are changed into reproaches, which is considered as showing the highest possible regard for the guests.

From twenty to twenty-five dishes are served, and wine as often. The guests then rise and promenade the room; and the musicians and comedians take their dinner. The guests after a time return to their chairs, and the second course commences, and similar ceremonies are gone through a second time. The feast generally commences about sundown, and ends about midnight.

CHINESE MARRIAGES:

No obligation is considered more solemn or more important than marriage. The inclinations of the parties are never consulted; the bride is chosen by the father or nearest relative of the gentleman.

On the day appointed for the wedding, the young girl is put into a closed chair, highly ornamented, and followed by those persons appointed to carry the dowry. This, among the common people, generally consist of furniture, which her father gives, with the bridal wardrobe, and which are enclosed in chests. A cortège of men, hired for the purpose, accompany the bride with torches, even at mid-day. Her chair is preceded by fifes, tambourines and hautbois—and followed by her parents and the friends of the family. A trusty servant carries the key of the chair, which is delivered to the bridegroom, who receives his bride at the door of his house. As soon as she arrives he unlocks the door of the chair, and then decides upon his good or bad fortune. It sometimes happens that, dissatisfied with his lot, he closes the chair and sends her back with all her escort, preferring the loss of the sum paid to the bride that had been selected for him; if, on the contrary, the appearance of the lady pleases him, she is welcomed with eagerness, a feast is celebrated on the evening of the wedding, the bride is conducted to her husband's apartment, where, upon a table, are scizzors, needles, cotton, linen and other materials for work; she is thus made to understand that she must love work, and avoid idleness.

JUPITER AND THE CIRCUS!

Enthusiastic admirers of Hippodromic performances—an elegant euphemism, if you please, for the Circus—might claim something of a remote origin for this kind of entertainment. Fortunately for public morals, however, the aiders and abettors of the ring and the amphitheatre, are not generally persons of classic taste, or of antique research, or of historic lore. In their eyes, Homer is no better than a blind old loafer, "peddling rhetorical platitudes" about "Scio's rocky isles," while they neither condescend "to rip with old Euripides," nor "to soc with old Socrates." To resume, however, the germinal idea of a modern circus, that locomotive pandemonium, that voracious maelstrom of small change without a regurgitant wave, might be traced by an astute cutiquary to the periodic festivities of the great Olympic games. The origin of those popular celebrations is so remote, that it would puzzle your Mitfords, and your Thirlwalls, and your Grotes—learned all in crabbed Greek—to tell when they began. Our Grecian friends, mark you, had a famous way of settling all such vexed questions. What cared they about your telegraphic minuteness of day and hour? The knottier the case, the easier the solution. So who should come in for the credit of getting up those quadrennial jollifications, but that lusty, rollicking old Jupiter, whom the sweeter mouthed Hellenics poetized into Zeus. Now, I heard much of him when I was a boy, and with the very mention of his name rise up the dim visions of pedagogue and ferule, of bleared eyes by dying lamp-light and eager fingers thumbing the dog-eared leaves of Tookes' Pantheon, or toying expectantly with the unexplored pages of the venerable Lempriere. After a patient looking into his case, I am constrained to think, that Zeus was the saddest failure of that æsthetic Grecian mind, the sorriest possible idea of a Supreme Divinity; now a tricksy coxcomb, seeking the affections of some fabulous Naiad, by some pellucid pool; anon a persistent Lothario, descending upon the coy Danae in a shower of auriferous blessedness; again, a mythological pugilist, unceremoniously kicking Vulcan, the blacksmith, from Ether to Lemnos, in a sudden fit of uxorious indignation. I am sure he did many bad things, and not the least culpable was his sublime patronage of that original circus. In the first flush of his great victory over those obstreperous giants—here's the picture of them, if you're sceptical, in my illustrated Ovid—gnashing their teeth, clenching their fists, heaving up stones, brandishing clubs at the serene altitudes of the cloud-capped Olympus, and piling Pelion upon Ossa, in their insane fury. To celebrate, I was saying, that glorious conquest of the mythological cosmos, Jupiter got up a grand festival, to which all the gods were invited. There, friendly reader, there the abomination began. Who rode the enlico horse, before that august assemblage. I cannot tell. Who leaped through the suspended hoop from the flying courser's foam-flecked haunches, tradition tells not. Who twirled through the air from the elastic board, in the exalted frenzy of saltatory inspiration, or who stood upon his head on the giddy apex of a well-poised pole, history has not recorded. Certain am I, however, that where the Hot Spur, Mars, the lithe-limbed Apollo, and the roguish Mercury were the stars of the ring, so royal must have been the jollity, that the lofty summit of Olympus, shook again to the redoubled peals of their celestial laughter.

But stop. Nothing of the dead, but what is good. Gone are they all. Jupiter no longer shakes his ambrosial curls, and with them shakes the world. No more the golden-haired Apollo glows in the rising sun, nor dips his rosy-tinted car beneath the western main. No more the chaste Diana steals down the starry steeps to kiss Endymion asleep on yon moonlit sloping hillside. Never more shall eyes of men behold the grace-encircled Venus, springing all lovely, from the yeasty wave. No Oread in our mountains; no Dryad in the woods; no Naiad by our streams. Even goat-eared Pan, piping on his reeds, sees no more his sportive Satyrs leaping on the green sward, by his cloven feet.

Wipe your eyes, my sympathetic reader, and hear me tell you how we got

The Elephant in Limbo.

On the night of the 24th of November, a circus and menagerie combined, exhibited in the village of Notasulga, Macon county, Alabama. After the performances were concluded, at a late hour of the night, quite a serious disturbance arose, through the agency, as was supposed, of the employees of the circus. In the row, a grocery store was assaulted by a drunken party, the door was battered down, the walls of the house were broken in, the windows were smashed, and a forcible entry was effected. Finding several persons within the house, the besieging force, heated, perhaps, by the elevating consciousness of superior brute prowess, and insane with the fury of their intoxicating cups, commenced an indiscriminate attack upon the inmates. One poor inoffensive young man, who was a quiet lodger in the rear room, received a deadly cut in the throat. Another secreted himself in tremulous terror behind the counter, until a favorable moment of escape set him free to use his natural endowments of breath and legs. A third person was attacked, ran, was overtaken, beaten and maltreated in a serious manner. Other individuals about the streets were rudely accosted, assailed with curses, threatened with hurt, and narrowly got off unmolested. The grocery drawer was robbed, and its contents taken. There was great ado in the town of Notasulga. It was thought that the guilty parties belonged to the show. The manager of the circus, seeing the ugly posture of affairs, gave orders to hitch up teams, prick up the elephant, arouse the beasts, and get away to Auburn, the place of appointed exhibition for the ensuing day. This hasty retreat confirmed the suspicions of the good people of the village, and forthwith messengers were despatched to Tuskegee, to secure a well forged bolt or two from the armory of legal authority. Invested with plenary powers, a halliff and posse were detailed to co-operate with the deputy-sheriff, whose office it was to see, that these anthropoplingous showmen went not "unwhipt of justice." Accordingly, next day, whilst the star-spangled banner floated, in a quiver of unutterable glory from the lofty top of the snowy canvas, inspiring the palpitating breast of every generous freeman with sentiments of the purest patriotism—just as the brazen clangor of the orchestra announced the grand entree of variegated horses and bespangled equestrians, just as the first sea-roll of enthusiastic applause had dashed itself into shrieking wavelets against the throbbing curtains—in hot haste, an affrighted showman dashed into the arena, shouting—as Halleck, the poet, would have it—"They come! They come!—The Greek! The Greek!" Thus far scenes my scribbling pen, but who shall tell you of

The Stampede!

Doubtless your well-stored memory recalls Scott's poetic account of the during feat of the young Lochinvar, who, bravely striding into the wedding hall, where the fair Ellen was to be married to "a dastard in war," snatched his lady-love from the ultar's verge, and bore her away through the groomsmen and kinsfolk and clan-people all. What a hubbub was there! What a clanking of steel and rattling of spurs

"'Mongst the Graemes of the Nethesby clan!
Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran;
There was racing and chasing, o'er Cannobie lea!"

Such here, only worse. Women and children screamed; men shouted and "swore, like the army in Flanders;" a gun exploded—everybody thought himself shot in particular, and murdered in general; the musicians absconded amidst an agonizing blast of unexpired semiquavers; away went merry-andrew in motly attire; away went posturant and acrobat, gymnast and legerdemancr; painted Mohawk tumbled ignominiously over pantalooned Turk, while the whole performances concluded with a grand farcical finale, properly dubbed "the mutual exercise of heels!" One of the valiant heroes, "necountered as he was," fearlessly dashed under an adjoining house. Two of the unfortunate players—"arcades ambo,"—fled amain to the sacred covert of a lady's bedchamber. Many, I dare say, were the song-worthy exploits of that memorable day, but they will perish for the lack of a singer. Let them be comforted. "Many brave men lived before Agamemnon" you know the rest.

In Court.

About thirty of the circus company were brought to Tuskegee for trial, and lodged in prison. The preliminary investigations began on Saturday, November 27th. Owing to the number of witnesses, and the array of prisoners, the proceedings occupied nearly ten days. Learned counsel spoke to the case. Your friend Judge Chilton stood up for the accused, and right well did he set forth their grievances, in being thrust into prison, and deprived of their liberty in a strange land. You know I do not hold with circusses. I am as much against them as pious brother "Jonh" in the S. C. Advocate. I may say, I abominate, contemn, despise and hate the concerns as many accounts, and not least of all by reason of my irrevocable and irredeemable silver quarters, foolishly spent in vain boyish curiosity to see spotted men ride spotted horses. I consider them, seriously speaking, amongst the most demoralizing agencies of the present day, and I rejoice to believe that the time of their dissolution and disappearance is at hand. Even now refined people greatly prefer to see "your robustious, periwig-pated fellows tear a passion to tatters" on the boards, and to witness the graceful flexures of a female dancer's cultivated leg, and "comet the twirls of Almaviva's toe." But, I was going on to tell you, that as I looked around at the youthful faces of the suspected men, amongst them a lad of about thirteen years, as I thought of the hopes that had centred in them, and the tears that had fallen for them, and the prayers that had followed after them, as I heard the Judge plead their youth, their inexperience, their strange position in a strange community, their unfriended condition, and their presumptive innocency, I must say I felt a little juicy about the eyes, albeit they were, as I steadfastly believed, a corporate body of sponging loafers. Justice could find nothing against them. The larger part proved their entire innocence, while not one could be identified with the murder of young Keys. One person alone was remanded to jail, as a probable accessary to the killing, but he was a resident of Notasulga, or was there living, at least, when the affair occurred. The Elephant, therefore, had honorable acquittal, to the ruin however, of the owners, who are said to have lost several thousand dollars by this detention. It may have a wholesome effect in deterring similar exhibitions from imposing upon our people in the future.

EDUCATION—A BULWARK OF A NATION.

Mr. Editor: The age of Alcibiades and Pericles in Greece, is renowned above every other era of her history. Upon it the eye of the scholar rests with pleasure. His ear, catching the historical inspiration that lingers on the breath of the past, listens, enraptured with the music of "the land of battle and song." His enthusiasm, as a pilgrim in the path of a lofty ambition, fires, as his heart thrills with the eloquence of her orators. And philosophy binds on its sandals afresh, as it learns lessons of wisdom in the Porch and Grove. The "land of lost gods and godlike men," is yet "lovely in her woe," because of the historic grandeur of this era of cultured minds.

What reign, in the history of kingly succession among the Romans, appears to us at this day as the most illustrious? Certainly not that of the ambitious Julius Cæsar, when the streets of Rome were spanned with triumphal arches, and the trophies of victory hung crowded on the walls of the imperial palace. No, it is to the reign of Augustus, the patron of arts and letters, that we look for the proudest era of her national greatness. Could Julius Cæsar come from the depths of his mausoleum to-day, and look upon the world, such is its appreciation of classic literature, that, rather than blot from existence and the memories of mankind, his commentaries on the Gallic war, he would be willing to surrender the laurels of his achievements on every victorious battle-field; and thus be more ambitious to be known to coming ages as the author rather than the warrior. Rome's national grandeur, is a vital power of the world, has been shattered by the stroke of contanding forces—the incubus of ruin broods over her broken arches and desecrated temples, but the literature of her proudest epoch is treasured by the world, and embedded in the classic heart of the race. Look, too at the age of the Medici—the glowing examples of England, Scotland and America—and what a demonstration have we of Lord Bacon's maxim, that "knowledge is power."

The history of the Goths, Scandinavians, Scythians and Celts, in their progressive developments, is but the consecutive revelation of the triumph of knowledge. The advancement of the world in the elements of civilization, is but the gravitation of mind towards its normal state. Each step taken towards the enlightenment of our race is prophetic of millennial glory. Each college reared is a bulwark of national strength.

No man, then, should be considered the friend of his country, and no organization the patron of its interests, that opposes educational efforts that are guarded by proper prudence. It becomes the duty of men in their individual character as citizens, much more as Christians, to do all in their power to forward any enterprize that is calculated in its consummation to strengthen the ramparts of the nation, and forward the general interests of its subjects.

Methodism in the friend of learning. We need no better proof of this proposition than to consider her origin, natal age, and founder. Aspersions have been cast upon Methodism by bloated sectarians, in the charge that she is based in ignorance and opposition to learning. Methodism was not born in a cave, or the "dark places of the earth," but had her origin in classic halls, among the patrons of literature. Her natal cool, is that of the proudest university of Europe. The age in which she was born was not that of superstition and ignorance, but it was the proudest era of British classics. Christianity was born in the age of Augustus. Methodism: in the reign of such brilliant essayists as Addison, Steele and Swift. Her founder, at twenty-three, was moderator of the classes, and Greek lecturer in Lincoln College. He could afterwards have sung latin odes of his own composition; said extensive prayers in Greek, and preached finished discourses in Hebrew. His brother Charles, "the sweet singer of Methodism," was also classically educated, and gifted with high poetic talent. The first Methodist class-meeting was composed of "Mr. John Wesley, fellow of Lincoln College; Mr. Charles Wesley, student of Christ Church; Mr. Morgan, Commoner of Christ Church, and Mr. Kirkman, of Merton College." Look for a moment at others of the fathers of Methodism. Where is a better archaeologist, and exegetical writer than Adam Clarke? Where so caustic a logician as John Fletcher? Where so eloquent a preacher as John Whitefield? Where more indefatigable evangelists than Asbury and Coke?

Methodism the patron of ignorance? What! She was born in a university, clothed in science, versed in literature, and reared with the highest order of culture. Methodism is the friend of education. The massive buildings of England's Oxford are monumental of the fact. Scores of schools and colleges in our own land, proclaim its truth; and now, the graceful towers of the "Southern University" begin to voice it.

The Southern University keeps up with the spirit of the times. The Alabama Conference several years ago proposed the institution of a first class university; Greensboro' was selected as its seat; an agent was sent out to labor for an endowment, aiming at a half a million of dollars. The success thus far has been unparalleled in the history of ecclesiastical colleges in the United States. The funds of the University now amount to about $300,000. This amount, though not equal to the aspirations of the friends of the University nor adequate to the carrying out of the entire design of its projectors, is a sufficient endowment to give ample confidence to the public mind as to its final success. Many, doubtless, have been deterred from embarking in the enterprize from a lack of confidence in its success; and hence, they have not been willing to peril their money in a doubtful undertaking. They have seen the folly of many similar enterprizes, whose ideas of an endowment aspired to but little—they have looked upon their starving condition, and heard the plaintive petitions of their agents, and have been unwilling to contribute to this, until it was on a sufficient basis to inspire confidence in a magnificent career. Men of large views projected the Southern University; and men of large means and liberal hearts have been carrying out the original design. A magnificent and convenient edifice has been erected at a cost of about $60,000. It is not equalled in the South, for beauty and adaptation to collegiate exercises. It is built, from corner stone to turret, of the best material; and will stand for ages a monument of Southern Methodist enterprize in the cause of liberal education. When the ten professors' houses are erected—and the steward's halls flank the main building, it will present an appearance attractive to the visitor—and be pointed at with pride by patron, professor, and student. Those educated here, will be proud to speak of it as their alma mater; and yearly it will be a Mecca, to which its alumni shall journey to pay their votive offerings at its shrine. But shall we stop here? Infidelity as to its success cannot now utter a croaking voice. It has funds already for $100,000 in buildings, and eight professors' chairs endowed liberally, at $25,000 each. The interest on the endowment, together with the perquisites, will secure the best of talent for its seperate departments of literature. Its success as a college is fixed; uncertainty in regard to this is among the things that have been. But we want a University. One that will take rank with Harvard, Yale, and the University of Virginia. One in which the preacher may be prepared, like a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, for the duties of the pulpit in an enlightened age, that he may feel confident as he draws the well mettled Damascus blade against the adversaries of orthodox truth, and be as ready to preach the gospel at Rome, amid philosophers and historians, as in some natal Tarsus. One, too, in which the advocate may be prepared for the bar—and the judge for the bench. One where the physician may learn to detect a fever, count the faltering pulse, and wait by the bedside of the afflicted. One where Southern teachers will be prepared to instruct Southern children without doubts as to their integrity to domestic institutions. Shall we have a first class University? To have it, we must secure half a million of dollars. What say the wealthy, generous sons and daughters of Methodism, to whom God has entrusted means competent for every noble and philanthropic enterprize? Other branches of the Christian church are actively engaged in the promotion of denominational educational enterprizes, and success is blessing their efforts. Shall we seek, in emulous rivalry, to place our university in its Classical, Biblical, Normal, Legal and Medical departments, on an unquestionable basis; or, shall we permit others to educate our young men for the learned professions, and thus ostracize them from us?

Many, who are able, and upon whom rests a weighty responsibility, have done nothing, and others but little compared with what they might do. If these would come to the aid of the institution, it would not be long until we might point with grateful emotions to a university of the first character, as a collossal representation of our appreciation of education, and an attestant witness of our faith in the mission of the Church, as an enlightening and converting agent. Brethren, unlock your repleto exchequers, and rejoice the heart of the Agent, Board, and Church—by an endowment of the remaining chairs. And then, when your head silently slumbers on a pillow of dust, generations yet unborn will pronounce benedictions on your memory—sprinkle your graves with grateful tears; you, being dead, shall speak through your munificence, and God will exalt you with his resurrection trumpet from your graves—thrilled with the plaudit—"Well done, good and faithful servants. Enter ye into the joys of your Lord." Then, shall heaven open wide its gates, to welcome you to rank among the nobility of God, and benefactors of your race, and co-workers with the Godhead in the purpose of eternal good.

THAT CLASS—COUNT AGAIN.

Mr. Editor: I have just received your issue of the 24th ult., and, as usual, have devoured its contents. The Advocate is always in demand, and hailed with joy by every member of the family. The "Children's Column" is particularly interesting to my little daughters, who are now able to read understandingly. The leading articles and editorials are, as they should be, calculated to instruct, build up, and establish the believer in the doctrines of the gospel, as understood and taught by the Methodists; and, I do not feel that I am selfish or sectarian in my views, when I claim for Methodism a sound gospel creed. Long may the Advocate remain, a tower of strength and usefulness to the church, and a witness to the world of the power of truth, to overturn and cast down all opposition, and triumph in the very face of its enemies. Its former success and present stability are aptly illustrative of this position. But, to my purpose.

An editorial, in the number referred to, under the caption of "the Alabama Conference," arrested my attention, and as I read, awakened memories of the past; the time when, and circumstances under which, I made my debut in the ministry, together with the many and trying scenes through which I have passed, and the changes that have taken place since then, all passed in review before me. But especially that large class of undergraduates, to which you referred—sixteen young men, all, save one, buoyant with hope, and full of promise to the Church. My acquaintance with and observation of them commenced at the Conference held in Mobile, when they were presented to that venerable man of God, Bishop Andrew, to receive the charge, and take upon them the obligations of the Christian ministry. A noble band, they were, strong and vigorous, "full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost," they manifested a knowing and therefore, commendable zeal for God and his cause. Ready to make any sacrifice that might be required of them; not even "counting their lives dear unto themselves, so that they might finish their course with joy, and the ministry which they had received of the Lord Jesus, to testify of the Gospel of the grace of God." They went forth from that Conference, having been recording to our time honored usage, distributed throughout the work—never all to meet again in this shadowy land. Giles P. Sparks, went up from his sorrowing charge, in Tuscaloosa, to join "The blood besprinkled bands,

On the eternal shore."

And the next year A. J. Hill, followed him to his glorious "Eden home." They have "fought the fight" of faith, and laid hold upon eternal life. But where are the fourteen? I would fain answer, scattered abroad throughout the thousands of our Israel, fighting the battles of the Lord. But I am admonished that "some have located;" still however, they may be, and I trust are engaged to some extent, in the good cause.

But why locate? Other reasons may have influenced them, but I venture the remark, that in almost every instance, the uncertain prospect of support for a rising family, has been the chief cause. If this be true, there is a great wrong somewhere that should be corrected. I do not take it upon me say where the wrong lies, whether with the preachers, or the people, or both—but that it exists is evident from the fact that good and useful ministers are frequently compelled to leave the work, and go to "serving tables." These things ought not so to be.

One of the number—but I will not mention the misfortunes of a brother, whose name, though under a cloud, is still dear to many, in whose heart he will live, when the great system of the universe itself, shall have been changed. May God restore unto him the joys of his salvation, and make him again a leader in Israel. If this should meet his eye, let him know that there are those who still remember him at a throne of grace.

Five yet remain in connection with the present Conference, and are doing good service. The editor of the Advocate, though belonging to another Conference, is still at his post; long may he remain, "and his shadow never grow less." There is yet another, whose name, "little and unknown," it matters not to tell; so that there are saved, at least, nearly half the original number—still in the regular work. Thirteen years have elapsed since the members of that class went forth, ordained as the ministers of God, during which time, death has been doing his toll work.

"Emptying rooms, to furnish tombs,
And moving kindred friends away."

And yet but two of that noble band have fallen. The accuser of our brethren, too, has been busy with his seductive arts and stratagems to ensnare, and yet, God be praised for his sustaining grace, a large majority of the members of that class, if not all of them—have kept them from the paths of the destroyer, and are now either beyond the reach of temptation, or still "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the saints," and for a home in heaven.

When thirteen years more shall have passed by who, of those now alive, will remain to record the triumphs of their departed classmates? Perhaps not one. And yet it is possible—though hardly probable—that they may all remain. But brethren, whether living or dying, let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, that when we fail, it may be but to rise, and join our former comrades in the skies. May God preserve us to the end, and finally grant us an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom be glory both now and forever.

THE VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

We learn from the Richmond Advocate, that this body closed its annual session at or after 3 o'clock, on Saturday morning, the 4th inst. A more harmonious and quiet session has not occurred in its history. The session was a laborious one, not unusually protracted, considering the amount of business necessary to so large a body. The loss of the second day, spent in participation with the citizens of Portsmouth, as a day of Thanksgiving, and the time given to the consideration of our publishing interests, resulting in the formation of the Virginia Conference Book and Tract Society, added to the length of the session. These omitted, and they are not usual, and the Conference would have possibly adjourned one or two days earlier. Bishop Kavanaugh, who was with us for the first time, presided over the body to its entire satisfaction. He is an amiable Christian gentleman, and a good Bishop. It was not a mere form that prompted the vote of thanks for the fair and able manner in which he conducted the business of the session. The appointments, we believe, are generally regarded as judicious and discriminating, and are as nearly a success, so far as the satisfaction of the ministers is concerned, as is usual in such cases. On several subjects brought under the consideration of the Conference, giving enlargement to our system of operations, and greater development and permanency to our denominational institutions, we should like to speak at large. But the short interval after our return before the paper goes to press precludes any thing of the kind. Great changes have been made among the ministers. New men have been brought into the stations and districts, and old men set afloat in the general work.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted—as a plan for lay co-operation.

Whereas, It is deemed highly important that this Conference should take a closer oversight than it has done heretofore of all the leading interests of the Church within its bounds, both with the view of devising the best plans for their advancement, and of bringing our people more fully up to their support by spreading among them accurate and valuable information.

Whereas, It is believed that the method heretofore adopted in the appointment of the committees, whose duty it is to consider and report upon these great interests of the Church, is not the best, therefore,

Resolved, That in future the following plan be adopted in the constitution and appointment of the leading committees of the Conference.

1. Resolved, That at each session of this Conference, a chairman shall be appointed to preside over a committee of the whole on each of the following subjects: Missions and Bible Cause, Education, Sunday Schools, Publishing Interests, Temperance, Church Property. Each chairman shall hold his office until the close of the ensuing annual session of the Conference.

2. Resolved, That the members of each station and circuit within the bounds of this Conference be, and are hereby requested, to appoint, not later than the third Quarterly Meeting, if practicable, a delegate and alternate to represent them in the above named committees, and the official members of the Church are specially requested to co-operate in securing the appointment of such representatives.

3. Resolved, That the chairman, whose duty it is to preside in the committee on each of the several subjects named above, shall, when the Conference resolves itself into committee of the whole, call a committee of the whole, on the special subject over which he is appointed to preside, in the afternoon of some day of the annual session of the Conference, and the committee shall adjourn from time to time to such an hour as shall not interfere with the business of the Conference.

4. Resolved, That it shall be the duty of each chairman during the year, to seek all the information in his power, respecting the matters committed to him, and submit it in a report to the committee at the first meeting over which he presides.

5. Resolved, That the committee of the whole, after such consideration of the matters submitted to them as may be deemed necessary, shall report to the Conference.

6. Resolved, That the Conference, with the view of bringing as many of its members as possible into the work, shall avoid as far as may be, the placing of the same person as chairman of the committee on two different subjects.

7. Resolved, That in constituting sub-committees, the same person shall not be placed on two committees at the same time, and the members of the several committees shall be elected from the different districts. The following are the

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1858.

THE CHRISTIAN PRESS—NOW IS THE TIME FOR ACTION.

Editors of Church papers, could it be avoided, should not leave their offices on business tours. It puts everything "out of course." Correspondents out of patience, communications accumulated "beyond measure"—notes, notices, notifications, etc., intended for the editor's special observation, not seen in time—and the editor himself unfitted for steady work in the harness for about a month after he gets home. But, we are at the desk once more, full of thankfulness for cordial greetings, and hearty promises, received on our late tour. Will the preachers begin, at once, to help us? Begin with the year. The Western Advocate says:

The greatest of all human energies exerted at the present time is the power of the press. Its assistance is thought to be indispensable in every important enterprise. Whatever important project is set on foot—whatever important doctrine is to be promulgated—whatever great enterprise is to be carried forward, the power and influence of the press are justly considered among the things of the very first importance. He who should now seek to control public opinion otherwise than through the public press, would be regarded as very stupid, and entirely destitute of enlightened enterprise. For every one who may be reached by the voice a thousand may be reached by the pen.

How should these considerations affect the Christian church! The press is a tremendous power; but it is a power for evil as well as for good. It is a power for falsehood as well as for truth. It will advocate the wrong as readily as the right. It is only when the spirit of truth and purity breathes the breath of life upon the press that it becomes a power for good. Then its power for usefulness is beyond all human estimation.

Such a power the christian press aims to be. Such a power to a good extent we believe it is. If this is so, how can any truly enlightened christian be indifferent as to the power exerted by this instrumentality? It is our duty to do all the good we can. If we can do more good by encouraging a wholesome literature than by neglecting to do so, it is our solemn duty to act accordingly; and how can we as christians answer to God for the proper improvement of the talents committed to our care if we neglect this one? "He that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Every truth uttered by the religious press is God's minister for good to our race.

Now is the time to put these thoughts into practical operation. We commend ourselves to your consciences, brethren, in the fear of God. We labor night and day to bring wholesome truth to bear upon the public mind. Just as our circulation is extended is the power of our sheet increased. If we could reach twice as many minds as we now do, who can estimate the additional good that would thus be accomplished? Will you help us, and thereby increase the power of our sheet for good? Reader, will you spend a little time in endeavoring to extend our circulation? Say a good word for the paper. Show it to some friend who does not take a religious paper. The traveling preachers every where are authorized agents.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The session just closed was held at Woodville, a pleasant interior town, twenty-eight miles east from the Mississippi river at Bayou Sara. We reached it by railroad from the latter place. This is an old Conference, and occupies a territory noted for mental, moral, and material resources. It is a country of great wealth. The weather was bad part of the time, but most of the preachers were in their places. Four, if our recollection be not at fault, had died since the last meeting. Suitable addresses were made, impromptu, by suitable men, as their names were successively announced—many tears were shed—a hallowed influence pervaded the body—and it was evident that the preachers of the Mississippi Conference loved each other as brethren, in life and in death.

For the first time, we saw, at this Conference, the regular introduction of "lay co-operation," according to the provision of the Discipline, made at the last General Conference. We were delighted. It worked like a charm. A layman had been elected by the Quarterly Conferences of most of the charges, and quite a number were present, though not as many as there should have been. This is the only lame limb of the system—the difficulty of getting the laymen to attend. The afternoons were spent in Committee of the whole, in lay-session, and laymen and preachers mingled heartily and independently in the discussion of all those subjects which, under the old plan, are referred to special committees of preachers. All the preachers having participated in the discussions in committee of the whole, and having also had the additional advantage of the counsel of the laymen, the reports from committee were rarely ever discussed in Conference, and always accepted. Much time and tedious speech-making, in Conference, were saved thereby. The more the plan is worked, the better it will work. One feature of its working in Mississippi deserves special notice. The laymen not only spoke and voted in committee, but had the right of speaking to the reports in Conference, if discussion arose. Some of the best speeches we ever heard at Conference were made by them. We trust ever hereafter to hear the views of our most devoted and intelligent laymen in all our Conferences.

The Mississippi Conference is fortunate in having quite a large proportion of talented, accomplished, and influential preachers. Some of the most useful men in the Southern Church are in that Conference. And a large body of young men, some of several years standing, and some of recent entrance, give promise of rapid increase in ministerial power and usefulness in Mississippi.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate was unanimously adopted as the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, and resolutions were passed expressive of the desire, in conjunction with the other patronizing Conferences, to raise the subscription list to at least ten thousand during the coming year. So be it. As much as severe indisposition would allow, we enjoyed the session exceedingly. The preachers received us most heartily, and promised, individually and collectively, the most vigorous support to the paper. May God preserve and bless us all, and bring us to meet again in the spirit of the Gospel of Christ.

The Secretary, Rev. H. J. Harris, has promised to furnish all the proceedings suitable for publication, which will appear in due time. The citizens of Woodville, notwithstanding a disastrous fire a few weeks before, entertained the Conference with a hearty hospitality which left pleasant memories of them in the minds of the preachers.

TO THE PREACHERS.

If any of our brethern of the itinerancy fail to get the Advocate, they will please write us immediately, informing us of the failure, and giving the names of both their former and present post-offices. We trust they will send us lists of all the post-offices in their respective charges, that we may send them our accounts, at the beginning of the year. Brethren, be prompt in this matter. It is of more importance to us than you can imagine. Let all write us.

Communications will receive attention as rapidly as possible.

OUR CLASS.

In an editorial some time since, in reference to the class admitted on trial in the Alabama Conference at the session of 1843-4, held at Columbus, Mississippi, of which we were a member, we made some mistakes, from incorrect information. Rev. C. H. E. Newton, whom we stated to be among the dead, was re-admitted at the recent session of the Pacific Conference. Rev. Josiah Barker was also a member of the class. We had overlooked his name from the fact that, because of family affliction, he had fallen into a later class. At the Mississippi Conference we were pleased to meet still another member, Rev. B. B. Whittington, who is doing good service, and worthily sustaining the honor of the class. It was the first large class ever admitted into the Alabama Conference. Fifteen years ago this class of sixteen entered upon the itinerant course together. Five—Bliss, Heard, Ramsey, Barker, Calloway—are yet members of the Alabama Conference, and leading men. The writer has just become a member of the Louisiana Conference, after ten years' service in the Alabama Conference, and five in the East Texas Conference. Whittington is in the Mississippi, and Newton in the Pacific Conference.

At the recent session of the Alabama Conference, a meeting of the class was called. It took place at the house of Hon. J. J. Beauchamp. An upper room was furnished. It was at dinner-time, and three seats on each hand of the gentleman presiding at the table were politely reserved by Mrs. Beauchamp. As soon as all were in the upper room, alone, and the door shut, one asked the question: "How long, brethren, since we entered the itinerancy?" "Fifteen years," was the answer. Bursting into tears, which, by a sort of contagion, moistened all eyes, Barker repeated the lines:

What troubles have we seen!
What conflicts have we passed!
* * * * * *
* * * * * *
But out of all the Lord
Hath brought us by his love,
And still He doth His help afford,
And hides our life above.

The following is the report of the Secretary of the meeting.

The Conference Class of 1843-4, met in Macon Mississippi, November 30th, 1858, at the residence of the Hon. J. J. Beauchamp.

Members present, C. C. Gillespie, T. Y. Ramsey, O. R. Blue, C. C. Calloway, Josiah Barker and James A. Heard.

C. C. Gillespie was called to the Chair, and James A. Heard appointed Secretary.

On motoin by James A. Heard, it was agreed that as a Class we erect a suitable monument over the grave of our lamented brother Giles P. Sparks, who died in Tuskaloosa Alabama, 1848; and that we request the Presiding Elder of Tuskaloosa District, to superintend the erection, and draw on us for the amount necessary for the same.

On motion by O. R. Blue, it was agreed that a Committee of three be appointed to prepare an inscription for said monument—brethern Gillespie, Barker and Callway, were appointed said Committee.

On motion, by J. Barker, it was agreed that we pledge ourselves, that whenever a member shall pass from among the living, we will erect a like monument to his memory.

On motion, the meeting adjourned Sine Die.

C. C. Gillespie, Chairman.

James A. Heard, Secretary.

THE ENGINEER OF THE UNIVERSE.

One of the most remarkable comets ever visible has dashed by us in a blaze of surpassing glory, and that, too, almost, as it were, within speaking distance. This illustrious wanderer is said to have crossed the track of Venus only one week before her arrival at the same point in her course; and yet, with a velocity of thirty-six miles a second, a week was ample sufficient for all practical purposes of safety, though the tail of the comet was more than five millions of miles in length. Such facts in astronomy clearly show that the Engineer of the Universe knows infinitely well how to adjust his time-table so as to prevent collisions. As this heavenly body passed us, what sublime ideas did it drop into our thoughts touching the immensity of God's works! When it was here before, no man knoweth. When it will be here again is equally uncertain. Perhaps it was the first voyage of the kind, sent out by the hand of God, on the errand of measuring space, after the solar system was fitted up, and the morning stars may have first sung together on its departure, and this may be its first return to report, in part, the extent of creation; and before it will come again, these heavens themselves may be folded up, and all changed. A new heaven and a new earth may long have been the order of things before it shall look out again upon this little spot called earth. With a speed of one hundred and twenty-nine thousand six hundred miles per hour, near its perihelion, who can comprehend the space which would give it room to travel a thousand years? Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Surely such a specimen, indicating, perhaps faintly, the extent of creation, as has swept by us in 1858, is too rich to be repeated to the same generation. We are grateful that God has so ordered it within the period of our earthly lives.

THE SPLIT IN THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Delegates of the Northern and Western conferences of the Methodist Protestant church met last month in Springfield, Ohio, and withdrew themselves from all official association with their brethren in the Southern States. The full proceedings are not yet before us.

We clip the following from an exchange. There is an amusing breadth of sarcasm in the heading, that is not undeserved:

"Just Men made Perfect.—For some two or three years past, certain preachers and laymen of the Methodist Protestant church, living in the Northern and Western States, being troubled concerning the sin of slavery, have been 'agitating.' A convention was called, which has been in session at Springfield, Ohio, and on Saturday last the following resolution was adopted by a vote of nineteen to two:

"Resolved, That indisputable facts, the inductions of sound logic, the dictates of christian prudence, and enlightened sense of our duty to God and man, justify and warrant this convention, in the name of the several annual conferences herein represented, to now declare all official connection, co-operation, and official fellowship with and between said conferences, and such conferences and churches within the Methodist Protestant Association as practice or tolerate slave-holding and slave-trading, as specified in memorial to General conference, to be now and for ever suspended.

"Provision was afterwards made for the compilation of a new hymn book in conjunction with the Wesleyan denomination, and committees appointed to take steps for union with the Wesleyans, and to choose between Cincinnati and Pittsburg as a location for the "Methodist Protestant" newspaper."

Hon. Thos. H. Benton said: "My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I have never touched it from that time to the present day. She asked me not to game, and I have never gamed, and I cannot tell who is losing or who is winning in games that can be played. She admonished me, too, against hard drinking; and whatever capacity for endurance I have at present, and whatever usefulness I may attain in life, I attribute to having complied with her pious and correct wishes. When I was seven years of age, she asked me not to drink, and a resolution then formed made me a teetotaler and a sober man, and that I have adhered to it through all time I owe to my mother.

Cost of Agents.—It appears from the last Annual Report of the American Bible Society, that its clerks, bookkeepers, secretaries, agents, etc., cost, during the past year, the sum of $83,232 14, or more than twenty-one per cent of its entire receipts.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Before we could make our way from the Mississippi Conference to New Orleans, the Louisiana Conference was in the second day of its session. Our only consolation was, that we were not behind the Bishop. Rev. Robert J. Harp had been elected President, pro. tem., and the regular business was being pushed forward in good order. As Bishop Pierce had transferred our membership from the East Texas Conference to this body, we had more than a usual desire to see it and become acquainted with its members.

We have never seen a Conference which more agreeably surprised us. It is composed almost altogether of young men. We saw but two gray-heads in the entire body, and they had young faces. But a better trained, more clerical-looking, more business-like, or more orderly body, we have never seen. There is less disparity of personal appearance than we have ever before seen in a similar assembly. It is a fine looking body of young ministerial gentlemen. It certainly promises a bright and prosperous future. It is small, too small, in numbers, but it is filling up with preachers of the best class. It has the wealthiest territory in the Southern Church, which is yet in its infancy, so far as religious and ecclesiastical development is concerned. Its preachers are well paid, and the superannuates, widows and orphans, are paid their full allowance—a thing unparelled in the Southern Church, if not in American Methodism. The "lay co-operation" plan here had its origin, and works without friction. At least twenty more preachers are needed, and no better opening can be found. But inferior preachers are not needed.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Illness and haste to reach the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, prevented due notice of the session of this body. It was most pleasantly held in Macon, Miss.—a tier of the Mississippi counties on the east, belonging to the Alabama Conference. It was a full session of a very large body. It is the largest Conference we have ever seen. It would be unwieldy, but for its admirable training. Visitors from other Conferences expressed themselves in terms of enthusiastic admiration of its numbers, talents, urbanity and usefulness. Its increase in its number of its preachers is wonderful. Every year its class admitted on trial is large, embracing the very best young men, mentally and otherwise, in the State. And the spirit of permanency in ministerial life, is cultivated to the highest possible degree. Unnecessary location is ruled a sin by its clerical ethics. No better college in the great universe of the itinerancy, for the training of young preachers, can be found, than the Alabama Conference. With her present ratio of increase, in preachers, members, missionary collections, educational institutions, and pulpit ability, what will she be in another score of years! God continue and increase her prosperity!

ROME IN NASHVILLE.

There has been some trouble and a general breaking up, says the Nashville Advocate, among the Papists in our midst. An outsider can scarcely get a glimpse of the foundation facts of it. One Father Schacht, of Edgefield, our trans-Cumberland village, has gone to Rome, to lay complaint at head-quarters against his deposition by his Bishop. The church he built over there, we hear, is for sale, and the Methodists are talking of buying it for a new charge to be organized.

The Sisters of charity have abandoned their close quarters—a house on the corner of Cedar and Summer streets—and it has been sold for debt. On their departure, certain sympathyzing citizens got up a little demonstration for them. The correspondence was published in the city papers. The Sisters reply to the parting token that their "grateful tears," etc. Latterly, the Bishop is out in a card:

"SISTERS OF CHARITY.

"Messrs. Editors:—Notwithstanding the tears of regret, etc., expressed in a correspondence which appeared in the Gazette of Sunday morning last, I beg leave to say that the Sisters of Charity who have left Nashville, and those preparing to follow them, have done so of their own accord, in opposition to on invitation, which I gave them some months since, to remain in my diocese.

"In addition to this, allow me to say, that four Sisters, formerly members of the same community, have now charge of the State Hospital, with the approbation of the Medical Faculty, and who are equally as efficient and zealous in the care of invalids and orphans as those who are leaving us; and who, with the assistance of Divine Providence, will, I feel assured, prove to be real sisters of charity. Richard P. Miles.

"Nashville, December 7."

Pleasant.—A note from the commission-house of J. F. Wyche & Co. was laid on our table a few mornings since, informing us that a fine turkey, sent by Mrs. Ann W. Peebles, of Attakapas, was awaiting the call of the editor of a certain paper published hereabouts. We trust the good lady may be blessed with all imaginable comforts and prosperity, and that her poultry-yard may flourish, free from thieves, biped or quadruped, and undisturbed by reptiles and insects, or any thing that hurts or diminishes turkeys. Turkeys are no longer "high-church." Methodists say "turkey" to their preachers, now-a-days. The "good time" is "coming."

Quite Pleasant.—A pleasant lady of our acquaintance, in whose welfare a certain Methodist editor feels more interest than in his own, received information a few days since that about one hundred dollars' worth of very useful silver utensils were at her disposal, at a certain number on Canal Street—a compliment to her, in consequence of her husband's pulpit services for some months past. Rather equivocal, but quite pleasant notwithstanding. We shall always have, on many accounts, pleasant memories of that pulpit. May its present occupant have his head "crowned with living fire."

The New York Churchman, repelling an attack of Harper's Weekly on the "confessional," says: "We are not aware that there is more than one well organized system of 'confessional' among the Protestant sects of the day. That exists among the Methodists, and has not, so far as our information extends, been productive of a large aggregate of iniquity."

Methodists will be surprised, if not amused, at this construction of their class meetings. The leader of the class is a layman; there is nothing whatever in the proceedings of the class-meeting corresponding to the confessional—no inquisition about particular sins, etc., but narratives of christian experience, and exhortations and instructions respecting the christian life.

SOUTH-WESTERN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

The following resolutions were passed at the recent session of the Louisiana Conference. Similar resolutions were passed at the late session of the Mississippi Conference. And the Alabama Conference had resolutions of the same sort ready, but they were overlooked in the hurry of business. Here they are. They need no explanation.

Whereas, Many of our people have been induced to aid the South Western Sunday School Union at New Orleans, under the misapprehension that our Church has some interest in or connection with said concern, therefore,

Resolved, 1. That neither the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, nor the Louisiana Conference, has any connection with or interest in the South Western Sunday School Union.

Resolved, 2. That we disapprove of the introduction of its Agents into our pulpits, in their capacity as such.

Resolved, 3. That these resolutions apply also to the American Tract Society and its Agents.

P. M. Goodwyn,
R. Randle.

Signs of the Farmers in Northern Ohio and on the borders of Indiana, have commenced the breeding and raising deer as they do sheep, and they bring them to market; hence the plentitude of venison.

PERSONAL.

Bishop Paine.

All the conferences we were permitted to attend during the present winter—Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana—were presided over by Bishop Paine. His presidency is preeminently dignified and conservative. An excellent spiritual influence was exercised by him at all these conferences. The preachers were universally pleased with him. His conferences being closely crowded together, not allowing him an hour's rest between them, his labors were necessarily arduous and wearisome. But his patience and industry failed not, and we are glad to say that he closed his episcopal tour in better health than when he commenced it. The Bishop seemed to be in the enjoyment of a large measure of the sanctifying and comforting grace of the Spirit of his heavenly Master. Long may he live to go in and out before us in the same spirit of grace and wisdom!

Some of our Bishops.

Our office, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of December 2d, was cheered by the presence of the venerable senior Bishop on Friday, 25th ult., and in our arm-chair, close to a cozy fire, he sat and gave us a most entertaining and instructive hour's talk. The Church will infer from this, what we are happy to state more directly, that the Bishop's health has very considerably improved. He is not able to write letters, but if the river rises soon enough we think it likely he will attend the session of the Louisiana Conference in New Orleans the last of December. Bishop Early has recently been quite sick. The exposure of western travel was too much for his advanced years.

Bishop Kavanaugh had the following question recently propounded to him at an Annual Conference: "Can a preacher, not afflicted in his own person, be for any other reason placed on the supernumerary list?" The Bishop submitted his decision in writing to the effect that he could not. Thos. L. Hoyle thereupon was located at his own request. Family affliction prevented him from continuing on the effective list.

Dr. T. O. Summers, D. D.

Dr. Summers, though worn by arduous labors, and burdened by personal and family affliction, was at his Conference—Alabama—and engaged in its duties with his accustomed zeal, and conservative influence. His talents, learning, industry, and piety, are well known and appreciated by the church and country; but his conservatism is not, as it deserves. He can never be a partizan; and if a Conference, where he is a member, ever becomes divided into parties, it will not be his fault. Dr. Summers steadily grows in the esteem and love of the church.

Bishop Pierce.

We learn from the Texas Christian Advocate that Bishop Pierce preached two discourses in Galveston, on his way home, to the satisfaction and profit of the hearers. The peculiarity of the sermons was the combination of a high intellectual character with the best practical plainness. We could but ask ourselves how this thing was accomplished. Certainly, it is the great want of the preaching of the day. It is the result, we suppose, of a large combination of important elements. Physical and mental vigor; assiduous cultivation; and a hearty consecration to the ministry for the sake of the glory of God, rather than with a view to the honor which cometh from men. There is no plainer, more fearless and searching preacher than Bishop Pierce; yet there is no more popular.

Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D.

The eloquent Agent of the "Great Central Paper, The Church Evangelist," was at the Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana Conferences, and probably at the Georgia Conference. He is a notable man, wherever he goes, and cannot be forgotten by those who have once seen him. The three conferences we attended passed resolutions recommending the paper, and the Alabama and Mississippi conferences made all their Agents ex-officio agents of the church Evangelist endowment fund. At the Alabama conference the Doctor made an exuberantly eloquent missionary speech, to the great delight of the audience.

Rev. B. M. Drake, D. D.

Dr. Drake, though suffering from the effects of two or three attacks of fever, was able to be at the Mississippi Conference. Though feeble in body, he was not feeble in goodly influence, nor in the hold he has upon the respect and affections of his brethren. He is beginning to be an old man. A long, laborious, and useful life is behind him. But his large bright eye, his noble figure, and polished manners, are still pleasant to behold, and his piety and zeal are unabated. A noble specimen of the Methodist preachers of the olden time is Dr. Drake. May God restore him to his wonted physical vigor.

Rev. Edward Stevenson, D. D.

We were glad to receive, a day or two since, a letter from our old and honored friend, now President of Russellville Female College, Kentucky—the place formerly filled by the present editor of the Texas Advocate. We wish him the greatest happiness and the largest success. The Church owes him much. His toil, anxiety, and success, as the founder of our Publishing House, are unappreciated by but few. We sincerely believe that his watchful caution saved our infant concern from untimely bankruptcy. He was the very man for the time and place.

Rev. L. M. Lee, D. D.

Dr. Lee, after a long, able and popular editorship of the Richmond Christian Advocate, returns to the regular work, having been, at the recent session of the Virginia Conference, appointed to the Norfolk District. No more pungent pen than his has been, in many years, employed in Methodist editorship. We sincerely regret to lose him from our editorial fraternity. He will be sure to give a good account of himself in his new field. An urbane gentleman, an able preacher, and a devoted christian—any charge may well delight in his pastoral oversight.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire, D. D.

Our worthy predecessor, now editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was with his brethren of the Louisiana Conference, at their recent session in New Orleans. Some sharp-shooting took place about things said and done in the General Conference, which was, however, conducted in a dignified and pleasant manner, and was concluded by a resolution "cordially inviting him to continue his membership among us." We heard the Doctor preach a characteristically excellent discourse to an immense audience, on Sunday, in the First Presbyterian Church. His paper is giving high satisfaction to the Church at large, and should be circulated throughout our Connection.

Rev. Jas. L. Chapman.

This learned divine, whom we have known and esteemed from the date of his admission into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was at the Louisiana Conference, of which he is now a member. His labors have been highly useful, the past year, at Shreveport and vicinity, and at the request of many, he is returned to the same region the present year. He has been preaching in New Orleans with acceptance. We expect to be able to favor the readers of the Advocate with some interesting articles from his pen.

Tuscaloosa Female College.

We call attention to the advertisement of this institution, to be found in this paper. We cannot better recommend it than by saying that Rev. J. M. Bonnell is President, and that Rev. F. M. Grace is a member of the Faculty. Tuskaloosa is a delightful city, and a most eligible location for a Female College. We are truly glad that we have one there, and trust it will receive the patronage it deserves.

Rev. Charles Taylor, D. D.

We had the pleasure of meeting the Sunday-school Secretary at the Louisiana Conference. The Doctor is a complete man, physically, mentally, and spiritually. His address before the Conference, in behalf of the Sunday-school cause, was a model in its way. Surely the preachers who listened to him cannot neglect the children and the Sunday-schools hereafter. We sincerely think he is in his true vocation, and that he should continue in it. More fruit of his labors will appear, hereafter, than he now anticipates.

Rev. Jefferson Hamilton, D. D.

Dr. Hamilton, in consequence of painful, though not dangerous illness, was not able to attend the Alabama Conference. His health is not yet restored. He was appointed one of the Agents of the Alabama Conference Depositary. We trust soon to hear that his physical man is sufficiently recuperated to enable him to enter upon his work with that energy and zeal so characteristic of him.

His presence was earnestly desired at the Conference, and his illness was much deplored by his brethren.

Rev. S. G. Starks.

At the Mississippi Conference we met the President of State Female College, at Memphis, Tenn., and also had him with us at the Louisiana Conference. He is laboriously engaged in the establishment of a female institution worthy of the country, and especially of the beautiful and enterprising city of Memphis. His advertisement will be found in another column. He is an experienced and popular teacher, and will no doubt satisfy those who patronize his institution.

Rev. B. F. Lurrabee.

We enjoyed the society of the Principal of the Columbus (Miss.) Female Institute, at the Alabama Conference, and also had the pleasure of a visit a few days since. His institution is in a flourishing condition, and Columbus is a very suitable location for it. His advertisement is in the appropriate column.

Rev. W. M. Wightman, D. D.

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Southern University, at Macon, Miss., during the session of the Alabama Conference, Dr. Wightman was elected President of that Institution, which is to open with next Autumn. Dr. Wightman will be welcomed to Alabama, and the post he is called to fill is superior to any similar office in the Southern Church. We must say that we trust he will accept, but we must also say, that we sympathize with Wofford, of which he is now President.

Rev. P. P. Neely, D. D.

Dr. Neely was appointed, for the present year, one of the Agents of the Alabama Conference Depository, to be located at Mobile. He was Tract Agent during the past year, and traveled and preached extensively in the bounds of the Conference. He is in a most appropriate office. One of the most eloquent preachers in the South, there is a general desire to hear him, and he is able to accomplish much good outside of his peculiar work, of which he is a most successful Agent.

Rev. R. Abbey.

The Financial Secretary was with us at the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. He is a most indefatigable man. To make speeches, to settle accounts, to write letters for the different Advocates, to recommend the "Plan," and the "Genealogical Bible," are his meat and drink. He, and Dr. McFerrin, have attended most of the conferences. Such representatives of the Publishing House are needed at all Conference sessions.

Rev. Leonidas Rosser, D. D.

Dr. Rosser, now takes the editorship of the Richmond Christian Advocate, in place of Dr. Lee. We have no fears as to his success. His past history, and the fruits of his ministerial and literary labors, are sufficient evidences of his fitness for his new post. We trust to see the old Richmond "flourish like the palm-tree," and grow like the cedars of Lebanon in his hands. He is a devoted Methodist preacher, and while his charity will never fail, the enemies of the truth will obtain little mercy at his hands.

Generous.

A Mr. Davis, of Laurel Hill, Miss., called on us a day or two since, and informed us that he had seventy-five dollars, which he wished to donate to the Protestant Orphan's Home, in the Fourth District, and handed us the amount for that purpose. It will be forth-coming at the next meeting of the Lady Managers. Let the example find imitators.

SOUTHETN METHODIST QUARTERLY.

The number for January, 1859, (No. 1, Vol. XIII.,) is on its way to the most distant patrons, and a rich treat is in reserve for them.

Art. 1. Is a running review of the Biographical Sketches of Eminent Itinerants. Bishop Asbury is the name chiefly dwelt on. Considering the ordination and the spirit and life of this, the first Protestant Bishop in America, the writer announces this trenchant conclusion: "Methodist preachers certainly have no need to be disturbed about their ordination: they are certainly in the true scriptural succession. Yet we have known some Methodist preachers who professed to get greatly troubled in spirit for fear the right sort of hands had not been laid on their heads, and who ultimately sought greater security by obtaining reconsecration in the Church. We have narrowly observed this class of men, and have never yet known one of them whose change was not fairly traceable to either deficiency of reasoning power, or an obvious desire and hope of gaining more respectable position, or easier work, or better pay; nor have we ever known one of them who increased in holiness or usefulness after his change. But we have said enough on this topic, and will only add that, he who is not satisfied with the call of the Holy Ghost and the ordination received in the scriptural, apostolic succession of Wesleyan Methodism, will not likely be of any very great benefit to the Church in any department."

Bishop Asbury, during the forty-five years of his ministry in this country, delivered not less than sixteen thousand four hundred and twenty-five sermons, beside lectures and exhortations innumerable; he travelled during the same time about two hundred and seventy thousand miles, mostly on horseback, and on the worst of roads; he sat in not less that two hundred and twenty four Annual Conferences, and ordained more than four thousand ministers.

Hereupon is put in a word for his successors. The "we" gives some clue to the writer:

"We have sometimes heard the example of Asbury and his associates contrasted with the character and doings of our modern Bishops, quite to the disadvantage of the latter. Now, so far as we are individually concerned, we have no disposition to claim any sort of equality with our fathers in talents, or labors, or sufferings; yet that some of the present Board of Bishops possess the same spirit of zeal and self-sacrifice, and the same willingness to do or to suffer which animated Asbury and McKendree, we have not the least doubt. There is no use for a Methodist Bishop to go on horseback or in a sulky now, when everybody else goes by steam, and when the Bishop can reach more points, and do so more comfortably and cheaply, than in the old way. Nor did the Bishops in the olden time, after all, do so much more work than their modern descendants do annually. Perhaps Bishop Asbury visited more Annual Conferences than we do; but presiding in an Annual Conference then was a much lighter task than it is now. When we first visited an Annual Conference, the most we had to do was to examine the characters of the preachers, take the numbers, attend to the finances, (a very small business about those times,) read the appointments, and go home. We had no schools or colleges, no Tract, Missionary, or Sunday-school Societies to manage. We had not a dozen associations whose complicated machinery requires several days to adjust and keep in proper order. Now we have so many things before us at our Conferences that it is impossible to do any thing well, without a longer time than we can usually bestow on any one Conference. And then, as to stationing preachers in the early times, most of the preachers were single men, whose removal from post to pillar could be accomplished without much difficulty; but how is it now? The removal of a preacher in these days involves very often the affliction of a wife and half-a-dozen children. This is quite a different affair from stationing young men with no incumbrance.

"But there is another point of difference. Bishop Asbury was regarded with almost boundless reverence by the early preachers: his word was law; and when the old gentleman had repeatedly prayed over his plan, and it was completed, it was generally received as all right, and as being, in some sort, the work of God's providence: so, as a general thing, the preachers received it, and usually went to their work cheerfully. But the Bishops of this day are regarded not so much in the light of fathers as of older brethren. We could not now, if we would, do as Bishop Asbury might do in his day; nor could Bishop Asbury, if now living, do as he did in those days. The oft-repeated saying, that power is constantly steuling from the many to the few, is reversed in reference to us. The Bishops of the Methodist Church have less power by far than they had forty years ago; and it might be very appropriately said that power has been constantly flowing from the few to the many; and it is no doubt right enough that it should be so. In the early days of the Church it required just such an administration as was that of our fathers. Then we were in childhood: now the Church has reached her manhood. It is proper that there should be a more general diffusion of power among the preachers and the laity. For our part, we have no fear of either, so long as we mutually, preachers and people, sustain the simplicity and purity of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

Art. 2 is a resume of the Educational movement in the Methodist Church, begun forty years ago, based upon Report No. 2 of the Committee on Education, adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, May, 1858."

The writer is familiar with the subject, both in its practical and historical aspects. From the Cokesbury College he brings us to the present ones. Bishop Asbury was the first College Agent. The design was for "learning and religion to go hand in hand." Let us keep to that. An outline of the regulations for Cokesbury is given, with this remark: "The College would have broken down under over-legislation from without, if it had not burned down." Which suggested this, the solution of half our fathers Boards of trustees, read, mark, and inwardly digest it:

"No greater evil can befall a college than to have a pragmatical board of trustees, who assume to manage all its internal economy, and are ready to 'discipline' the Faculty for presuming to think themselves capable of managing the charge committed to them. If the Faculty be the men they should be, a few rules, and large discretion left to them, constitute the only security for a well-managed institution."

How Conference Colleges are often got up and go down, is told:

"Our people are generally considered wide-awake to their pecuniary interests, and it takes no long time to see that where pupils—either boys or girls—can be congregated, trade is increased, families attracted, and property rises in value. Thus, many of these misnamed colleges have been established upon pretty much such calculations as in other days preceded the erection of manufactories: the motive about as exalted—the hopes for the future of about the same character.

"To all this we might not object, perhaps, as having a right to interfere with the money-making plans of any community, had not the name of the Church been connected with far too many of these abortions. The Church led the way in erecting cheap colleges, and she is looked upon as an excellent foster-mother for all such weaklings. After a community commits itself in an enterprise of this sort, and is able to make a glowing statement of what it is about to do, the college must be offered, forsooth, to the patronage of the Conference! It may be made to appear that the very existence of Methodism among that people depends upon that college being taken under the wing of the Church. To refuse, is to offend beyond hope of reconciliation. Methodist preachers have no homes. Where the lot of any one of them to be cast next year! Who can tell? It may be among this very people; and can he go, if he has used his influence to defeat their cherished plans, and hope for a cordial reception? And if a Conference becomes sponsor for a new college; and what it wants again, the sponsor, not the authors of its being is looked to for succor, and too often it dwindles, or dies outright, because this cannot be had. Therefore it is that the report says wisely, 'Your committee express their profound conviction that colleginto institutions have been sufficiently multiplied for the wants of the Church; and they might have added, unless they were better.'"

Colleges ought to be enterprised like marriages, advisedly, discreetly, and in the fear of God." Application ought to lie over fully a year, and a committee appointed to visit and report. The philosophy of endowments is given, and many hard and bitterly true things are said. The article should be continued, for it is not complete; for after forty years in this great and terrible wilderness, we are not "out of the woods."

Art. 3. Is a scholarly paper on Euripides and Sophocles, comparing these two "coryphei of ancient, and perhaps also of modern, tragedy."

Art. 4. G. C. M. Roberts, of Baltimore, gives some account of the Paintines, Mr. Embury's connection with them, and of his emigration to this country. This is the more interesting because it fixes the date of his arrival in New York five years earlier than has generally been supposed. The "Introduction of Methodism into America" is its title.

Art. 5. The recent History of Civilization in England, by Henry Thomas Buckle, is reviewed by the pen of "J." of Alabama. We gave a sample of it a few weeks ago. It buckles down Mr. Buckle.

Art. 6. Parties and Party-spirit in America. The writer is hopeful, and rather sophomoric. His belief is the masses goes ahead of ours. Any good measure, whether brought out by a minority or a majority, will succeed finally. Our country is favorable to the cultivation of party-spirit. So he thinks, and in this last we agree with him:

"'Party-spirit in America may be regarded, per se, as the great element to which is due our present high political position among the nations of the earth; and it is now fast paving the way to the highest possible elevation in civilization and religion, and will ultimately crown us with glory."

Art. 7. On the most important and dryest of subjects—Psychology.

Then a table of Brief Reviews and Literary Miscellany, by the Editor, recherche in style and matter.

It will be seen that the themes are mostly fresh, current, and weighty and the discussions such as we can have only in the Quarterly. There cannot be a doubt of its support, if our Quarterly's merits are to determine that question. Now is the season to subscribe and get his number, the first of the new volume. THE GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: This magnificent Conference began its session at Columbus, Georgia, on Wednesday, December the 15th. From the Texas Conference, by dint of very hard traveling, Bishop Pierce reached that city just before daylight, on the morning of the day appointed for the opening of the Session.

Twenty-six young men were received on trial, besides several re-admissions, swelling the number of preachers in this overgrown Conference to more than two hundred. Bishop Pierce found it very difficult to persuade some of them to be transferred to other Conferences, where they are greatly needed—where the fields are inviting, and where, as in your own Louisiana, for example, twenty preachers, at least, are now absolutely needed to supply the urgent demands of your work. He intimated that they seemed called to preach only in Georgia, and could go nowhere else. Still, this noble old Conference is doing a grand and glorious work. In the Sunday-school cause especially it stands, so far as I know, as Saul the son of Kish stood in Israel—head and shoulders above all her sister Conferences; if the prominence assigned to that enterprise, in her annual sessions—if the densely-crowded audience at the anniversary of the Sunday-school Society on Thursday night, and a liberal collection, be any indication of the amount of interest felt on this important subject.

Being compelled to leave on Friday morning, in order to reach your own Conference before its adjournment, can give you no further items of the session.

Dr. McFerrin wrote that he would be there on Friday night.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The twenty-sixth anniversary of this Society was held during the session of Conference in Macon, Mississippi, November 27, 1858. The President, the Rev. J. Hutchinson, occupied the chair, and the exercises were opened with the usual devotions by Bishop Paine. The reports of the Treasurer and Secretary were read and adopted. An address was delivered by C. K. Marshall, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference; after which, on motion of the Secretary, it was Resolved, That the thanks of the Society be and are hereby tendered to the Rev. Dr. Marshall for his eloquent and appropriate address; and that we will redouble our diligence in promoting the interests of the missionary cause agreeably to its suggestions and counsels.

On motion of the Rev. M. S. Andrews,

Resolved, That we will endeavor to raise at least $35,000 the ensuing year, and that the Mission Committee be requested to assess the several charges in the Conference accordingly.

There was no collection—that being betrod by a resolution of the Society last year. The members, however, paid in their asnual subscriptions; after which the officers were erected for the ensuing year, viz:

J. J. Hutchinson, President; J. T. Henrd, Vice President; T. O. Summers, Secretary; E. J. Hamill, Treasurer; J. M. Jessleps, F. G. Ferguson, T. Y. Ramsey, D. Hunenn; and C. C. Calloway, Managers.

The Treasurer's report shows that the revenue of the Society last year was between $32,000 and $33,000. The Secretary's report is as follows:

Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the Alabama Conference Missionary Society.—At the last session of the Alabama Conference, forty-four missions were recognized within its bounds. From the reports of the missionaries we condense the following interesting particulars:

1. State Street Colored Mission, Mobile, was served by J. McBryde, who reports 350 received on probation; 12 total membership, 991; baptized, 106 adults, 106 children; 200 Sunday-school children; $1000 received. It is quite prosperous.

2. Mobile German Mission, was served by C. F. Quellmalz, who reports 19 in full connection, 5 on trial; happened, 25; congregation small and unpromising.

3. Little Zion Colored Mission, Mobile, was served by A. Adams, who reports 175 members, 83 on trial, 25 catechumens; $200 78 received. It is reported in good condition.

4. Asaola Colored Mission was served by J. Williamson, who reports 271 members, 27 on probation, 7 died, 209 catechized, 1050 preached to, 55 removed, 11 children baptized, 3 churches. A house for the missionary has been secured. The missionary regrets that the mission work is not more concentrated by the erection of chapels for contiguous plantations.

5. Dayton Colored Mission was served by J. C. Huckabee, who reports 15 preaching pinces, 341 members, 7 probationers, 50 adults and 35 children baptized, 150 catechumens; $550 received. It is prosperous and improving.

6. Prairie Bluff Colored Mission was supplied by J. Beverly, who reports 107 children catechized, $370 received. It is a new mission, and bids fair to be prosperous; the patrons intend building chapels, and many of the ladies co-operate with the missionary in the instruction of the children. Two white congregations, one promiscuous colored congregation, and five plantations are served.

7. Cottonwood Colored Mission was served by W. P. Harrison, in connection with Uniontown. He reports 1 appointment, 12 members, 3 probationers, and thinks it might to be separated from Uniontown Station, as the patrons desire.

Warsaw Colored Mission was served, in connection with Warsaw Circuit, by W. C. Hearn, who reports 69 members, 22 probationers, 700 preached to and catechized, 8 appointments, $150 received. It can be enlarged.

9. Wiltow Pond Colored Mission was supplied by John Owsoso, who reports 13 plantations, 7 preaching places, 1 white and 75 colored members, 500 preached to, 120 catechumens, $100 received. The people on some of the plantations prefer other Churches, but the patrons wish them to be served by our ministers.

10. Eutaw colored Mission was served by J. M. Patton, who reports 10 on probation, 3 members, 50 catechized.

11. Columbus Colored Mission was served by G Shaeffer, who reports it prosperous: 114 added, 100 catechumens, 93 members, 71 on probation.

12. Plymouth Colored Mission was supplied by L. J. Scholar, who reports 18 plantations, 13 preaching places, 1000 preached to, 150 members, 50 on trial, 300 catechumens, 67 children and 16 adults baptized; the Lord's supper administered to every Society; $350 received from the patrons and $11 from the colored people. On five plantations the people are under Baptist influence, but their owners wish them served by our ministers. The missionary pleads earnestly for the erection of chapels for the convenience of contiguous plantations—Messrs. Billups and Cocke have erected such—and also for the support of missionaries by the planters. He speaks in glowing terms of the beneficial effects of the mission work among the colored people and their owners.

13. Plum Creek Colored Mission was saved by E. Calloway, who reports 4 appointments, 302 members, 58 on trial, 28 children and 19 adults baptized; $340 received. It is in a good condition.

14. Prairie Hill Colored Mission was served, in connection with Prairie Hill Circuit, by S. H. Gos, who reports 45 members, 33 probationers, 450 preached to, 135 catechumens; $95 received. Many besides have been preached to and catechized at the circuit churches. There is a disposition to erect chapels for contiguous plantations.

15. German Creek colored Mission was supplied by A. B. Ramey, who reports 13 appointments, 1,240 preached to, 177 members, 5 on trial, 53 baptised, 200 catechumens, 40 conversions, $300 received. It is increasing in interest.

16. Greensboro' Colored Mission was supplied by J. DuBois, who reports 10 plantations, four places of worship, 400 hearers, 180 members, 30 joined, 15 infants; and 1 adult baptized; $200 will be received.

17. Prairie Creek Colored Mission was served by J. W. McCann, who reports 72 probationers 400 members, 12 preaching pinces, 1,000 preached to and catechized. New chapels are promised. The Mission is prosperous.

18. Cahnin River Mission was served by Rufus W. Coons, who reports 65 whites on probation, 130 white members; $48 70 received. An ordnined minister is wanted.

19. Hancock Mission was served by C. L. Dobbs, who reports 15 appointments, 279 white members, 86 probationers, 22 infants and 21 adults baptized, 9 Sabbath-schools, 300 scholars, 2 churches built.

20. Pikeville Mission was served by J. M. Ginn, who reports 279 white and 5 colored members, 54 whites on trial, 65 received this year, 15 adults and 32 infants baptized, 5 Sunday-schools, 21 teachers, 125 scholars; $20 received. It is prosperous.

21. Warrior Mission was served by R. Nicholson, who reports 15 appointments, 252 white, and 7 colored members, 65 white probationers, 20 adults and 16 children baptized, 7 Sunday-schools, 154 scholars; $71 35 received.

22. Little River Mission was served by H. L. Selman, who reports 7 appointments, 140 white members, 80 probationers, 12 adults and 7 children baptized, 4 Sunday-schools, 140 scholars; $46 60 received.

23. Coosa Mission was served by W. N. Wilson, who reports 103 white members, 41 probationers, 2 colored members, 1 Sunday-school; $36 50 received.

24. Murbly Valley Mission was served, in connection with Wewokaville, by E. McManus and W. K. Towles.

25. Arbacoocha Mission was to have been served by J. W. Mabry, but his health failing, J. Lassiter, was employed in his place. He reports 285 white, and 6 colored members, 153 white and 2 colored probationers, 3 Sunday-schools, 75 scholars, baptized 25; collected $108.

26. Cubaha Colored Mission was served by G. Garrett, who reports 3 preaching places, 1 good church, 11 conversions, 12 adults and 20 children baptized; $535 received. It was somewhat prosperous, and may be enlarged.

27. Shelby Coal Mining mission was supplied by J. T. Talley, who reports 5 appolutments, 17 members, 1 Sunday-school, 25 scholars; $227 collected on the mission, which is not prosperous.

28. Montgomery colored mission was served by B. S. Williams, who reports 512 members, 120 probationers, 230 having been received on trial during the year; 90 children and 95 adults baptized. It is prosperous, and will sustain itself.

29. Catoma colored mission was served by J. W. Brown, who reports 10 white and 90 colored members, 500 preached to. The patrons desire its continuance. It is prosperous.

30. Andrew colored Mission was served by J. W. Rush, who reports 112 members, 37 probationers, 190 catechumen, 611 hearers; $325 received.

31. Dadeville colored mission was supplied by B F Blan, who reports 1000 preached to, 400 catechized, 50 received on trial, 18 in full connection, 9 baptized. The colored people highly appreciate the services of the missionary, and have paid $16 toward his support. Some of the patrons desire its continuance.

32. Glennville Colored Mission was served by F. H. Wardlaw, who reports 11 appointments, 300 catechumens, above 2,500 preached to. It is improving, and the patrons desire its continuance.

33. Villula Colored Mission was supplied by J. W. Jordan, who reports 101 probationers, 195 members, 200 catechumens; $512 received.

34. Barbour Colored Mission was supplied by M. L. Oliver, who report 8 appointments, 189 members, 46 on trial, 203 catechumens, 2 adults and 60 children baptized, 600 preached to, one church built this year; $130 received.

35. Chunnenuggee Colored Mission was served by W. B. Adams, who reports 13 appointments, 1 church, 41 children, 14 adults baptized, 2500 hearers. It is prosperous.

36. Perote Colored Mission was supplied by J. W. Crossley, who reports 7 appointments, one of which is for whites, 87 colored members, 38 received on trial, 5 baptized, 95 catechized, 400 preached to, 150 received, $5 45 from the colored people.

37. Ohio colored mission was served by L. Patterson, who reports 92 members, of whom 15 have been received this year, 145 preached to, 22 catechized, $85 received. It is promising.

38. St. Andrew's Bay mission was served by W. T. H. Connerly, who reports 4 appointments, 3 churches, 3 Sunday-schools, 24 white and 12 colored members, 25 white and 7 colored on probation. It is improving.

39. Big Swamp colored mission was served by Asa Skinner, who reports 14 appointments, 16 plantations, 181 members, 100 on trial, 131 received on trial this year, 268 catechumens, 9 adults, 97 children baptized, $534 received. The patrons wish it to be made self-sustaining.

40. Walton mission has 109 white and 17 colored members, 19 white probationers.

41. Pleasant Hill colored mission was served by P. R. McCrary, who reports 1100 people preached to, 272 members, 250 catechumens, 66 children, 20 white baptized, 84 received into the church, $125 received, and more expected. An additional missionary is demanded. The work is viewed with favor by the patrons.

42. Claiborne colored mission was served by N. Gillis, who reports 5 appointments, 247 members, 70 probationers, 54 adults and 2 children baptized, 1100 preached to, $165 received. The patrons desire its continuance.

43. Yellow River Mission was served in connection with Milton, by J. B. Ralph and W. Shockley.

44. Gainstown Mission was served by J. P. Jones, who makes no report.

45. Camden colored mission was organized this year by E. Hearn, who reports 6 appointments for colored and 2 for whites, 600 colored in attendance, 200 colored members, $111 35. The patrons will pay more next year if served.

46. McGower colored mission was organized this year by W. H. Rilpy, who reports 800 preached to, 11 members, 55 probationers, 178 catechumens, $260 received. It is promising.

47. Calabee colored mission has been organized this year, and served by Dow Perry, who reports 4 appointments, 274 members, 78 probationers. Within the limits of Tuskegee Circuit $239, 10 has been collected for the mission.

We do not propose to make an extended review of the operations of the Church during the present year in the great enterprise it has undertaken, the conversion of the world, nor to enter into any elaborate argument to prove that the work must be achieved, and for its achievement greater efforts must be put forth than have been witnessed since the apostolic age. And yet, were we to do this, the service thus performed might not be considered ill-advised or inopportune. Indeed, it would seem that this is the very time to survey the fields which are so white unto the harvest, and to exhibit the considerations which demand a multiplication of laborers, and an increase of activity in their evangelical work.

This year 1858 has been truly a year of wonders. We may, if we please, speak of the Atlantic Telegraph as a failure; but one thing is certain, it has been laid, and messages have been transmitted from one hemisphere to another, along the ocean depths, by its mysterious wires. The lightning has been launched from east to west, and back again from west to east. The old world and the new have shaken hands by its miraculous intervention; and the earliest has been given of that predicted and happy period when the nations shall be united under the benign government of the Prince of peace. Were that line conscious of its own communications, we might suppose that after transmitting the royal and republican greetings, no very great matter apart from the occasion, and the astounding intelligence that the Celestial Empire was thrown open to the Western Powers, its invidious wall no longer excluding the ambassadors of the King of heaven, it determined not to descend to the desecrating topics of cotton and corn, but henceforth and for ever to remain silent—like the door in Ezeziel's temple by which the Prince entered, which was never afterward opened to one of his subjects. The Memnonian wire was touched by a ray of the Sun of righteousness, and made vocal by the touch. Its message, indeed, spoke of peace as guaranteeing trade and commerce; but what is all this compared with the guaranty of preaching the glorious gospel of the blessed God to the four hundred millions of that vast empire, heretofore closed and barricaded against its accredited agents?

To increase our wonder, as an almost simultaneous event, the Emperor of Russia issues his ukase granting permission to circulate the Bible through his extended dominions, repealing the laws by which his predecessors had interdicted the circulation of that blessed volume. To show that he was not influenced by a latitudinarian or sinister policy in this movement, he has taken steps to develop the crude civilization of his empire, and has appropriated money out of his own purse to give his subjects the oracles of God.

Still further, this has taken place at a time when even the head of the Mohammedan power has repealed the laws by which his subjects were restricted from freedom of opinion and worship; and a Christian may now worship God through the meditation of his Son, and propagate his opinions without let or hindrance in the Turkish empire, and a Turk may publicly renounce the crescent for the cross.

Once more: even in India, since the Sepoy barbarities which shocked the world have ceased, and the causes of this fearful rebellion have been traced out, it has come to light that the Hindoos, even the Brahmins themselves, are beginning to entertain ideas concerning the excellence of the Christnin religion, and by their acquaintance with occidental civilization, art, philosophy, science, are forced to see the necessity of moulding up their old religion, or substituting for it another, viz., Christianity; as but few of them are prepared to do without any religion at all. The measures which have been adopted to reduce the rebellious provinces to peace, and to restore and modify British rule in India, have brought these interesting and encouraging facts to light. Dr. Butler, the American Methodist Missionary in India, whose life was miraculously preserved at the time of the bloody mutiny, and others besides, think that the prospect for the evangelization of India was never before so promising as it is at present.

Here let us pause. Nearly all the Missionary Societies that have Missions in the East, report an awakened interest among the people. Additions have been made to our infant Mission in China, and our missionaries are calling long and loud for more laborers. We want more men for China: we want men for Japan, which has also unlocked her doubled barred gates for the legates of the skies, as well as those of the Western Powers. Men are wanted for Burgaria and other parts of the East; men are wanted for Central America, New Granada, and other parts of the West. The Romish Church, with unusual activity, is raising means and sending men by squadrons into China, and into almost all the world besides. The Emperor of the French, stigmatized as he may be as an infidel and a libertine, acts in character as "the eldest son of the Church," and presents his missionary offering at the Papal shrine: he will honor the draft which his Holiness may make on France for the conversion of China, to an extent which may well open the eyes of the Protestant world.

Meanwhile, what are we doing under these marvellous and inspiring circumstances? It is humiliating to ascertain that we have a less missionary revenue to report than we had a year ago, and that we have not another man to send to the foreign field! The commercial reverses of last year, it may be granted, fell upon this year; and other undertakings, not antagonistic to the missionary cause, but indirectly promotive of it, have been more immediately engaging our attention; while we have not altogether neglected our domestic missions, especially to "the servile progeny of Ham." This is true; but had we the proper missionary spirit, we could not let the work stand still, much less retrograde, in such a year of wonders as this, no matter if it was preceded by one of financial convulsions, no matter what other enterprise might solicit and receive attention.

THOMAS O. SUMMERS, Secretary.

Macon, Miss., Nov. 27, 1858.

REVIVAL AT JEFFERSON CITY.

DECEMBER 22d, 1858.

Mr. Editor: The meetings held in our new Church, in this city, have been continued with increasing interest, during the Session of the Conference every night, to a respectable and intelligent congregation. A little nucleus of humble souls, have gathered around its hallowed sanctuary, where the bright and morning star has shed its divine radiance, and the glorious shekinah overshadowed us.

A deep and serious attention has been given in an urgent manner to the word of life, and the altar of prayer surrounded by penitents, some of whom have emerged from nature's darkness, into the marvellous light of the Gospel; the most of them were attached to the Sunday-school, which is in a most prosperous condition, under the superintendence of Rev. Mr. Parker, a local preacher, who deserves the praise of all the churches, for his indefatigable labors and untiring zeal. This School opens in the perspective, a fair prospect for aggressive movements of the Church of Christ in this benighted region. Indeed, there is no Missionary Station in the environs of New Orleans, of greater importance, or deeper interest than this of Jefferson City. This beautiful little Church sends up its Protestant spire, in an atmosphere of transparent brightness, where its clear sounding bell sends forth its cheering and musical note, to call into the house of prayer. The Altar was crowded last night, and the smiles of Jesus were seen reflected upon the countenances of several, bowed before the throne, mourning his love to know; some united with our Church—and we hope, and trust, that this is only a beginning of a work, whose fruits will be seen to ripen for an abundant harvest.

A HUNDRED FIRES IN CHINA.

"I WANT TO KINDLE A HUNDRED FIRES IN CHINA!" What a thought! "A hundred fires in China!!" But how may it be done? The man who used this expression, was none other than the Rev. Simpson Shepherd, a local minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; who, in view of the termination of his life, and he died soon after, bequeathed one hundred Dollars, to be sent to China to purchase one hundred Bibles for gratuitous distribution, by the Missionaries, among the Chinese. The money has been paid over by the Rev. J. A. Goodwyn, and is off this morning, for China, in a draft on London, sent to the Rev. J. W. Lambuth.

God grant, that many a family through its instrumentality may, in China, be brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus!

What an example for others.

T. C. THORNTON.

New Orleans, Dec. 24, 1858.

How easily it could be done.—Passing through the Agent's room, Friday morning last, says the Nashville Advocate, we were shown a letter from Rev. J. B. Cottrell, enclosing $75 for periodicals published at the Book concern. There were thirty-nine subscribers to the Home Circle, and four for the Quarterly—all at the small village station of Livingston, Ala. How soon and how easily, judging by the rule of proportion, could the Home Circle and the Quarterly be quadrupled in their circulation!

Liberal Bequest.—Rev. David Young, one of the oldest M. E. preachers in Ohio, died at Zanesville last week. He bequeathed, by his will $12,000 to build a new house for the Second-street Methodist Episcopal church in that city, with free seats. One thousand dollars to the Ohio Wesleyan University. One thousand dollars to the Bible Society; fifteen hundred dollars to the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society; and from five to ten thousand dollars to build another Methodist Episcopal church in Zanesville.

High Life.—A gentleman in New York informed the editor of the Fayetteville Observer recently that he paid $1500 for a pew in Dr. Alexander's (Presbyterian) Church, and that besides, it was subjected to a ground rent of $80 a year.

The Very Latest Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

The Cunard steamer Asia, which left Liverpool on the 11th inst. brings three days later news. The Broker's Circular reports that the Cotton market had declined 1-16d. on Middling Orleans, and ¼d. on Middling Uplands during the week, and that fair qualities were unchanged. The sales of the week amounted to 42,000 bales. Fair Orleans is quoted at 7 5-16, Middling Orleans 6¾, do Mobile 6¾d, and the market closed firm. The stock on hand was 337,000 bales. The imports during the week amount to 50,000 bales; the quantity at sea from American ports to 114,000 bales. In London the demand for money was falling off and rates were easier. The bullion in the Bank of England had increased £150,000. The American Stocks were active, and had advanced.

Havre, Dec. 6.—The cottoo market is dull and has declined. The advices by the last steamer depressed the market. Sales for two days, 1300 bales. Middling Orleans is quoted at 99f.

French African Emigration System.—It is reported that the French Commission, appointed to inquire into and report on the subject, will recommend a continuance of the African emigration system.

The news from India, China and Australia, by the overland mail, is unimportant.

Arrests in Ireland.—Arrests have been made near Cork, of persons accused of being connected wish American filibusters.

New Atlantic Telegraph Cable.—It was expected that the British Government would propose a grant of £500,000, for a new Atlantic Telegraph Cable.

St. Louis, Dec. 27.—The Santa Fe mail has arrived at Independence. The Navajo war was suspended, that the terms of a treaty might be determined on. A thirty days armistice, for this purpose, had been granted. Advices from Fort Defiance, to the 21st ult., represented that Col. Miles had pursued the Indians to their fastness successfully, and that Capt. Valdez, of the spies, had been badly wounded.

The notorious Montgomery is committing depredations in Missouri on the Kansas border, and old is asked from the Governor to apprehend him.

Tragedies in New York.—The New York Times says: Among the Coroners' inquests, there is one upon the body of Hugh M. Luke, the unfortunate fireman who was killed at the Harlem Railroad Depot fire; another upon Goll who was killed by Forrest in West Broadway; a third, upon the body of an unknown German, who is supposed to have died from violence; a fourth upon Miss Adno Morrow, who killed herself for love; a fifth upon Mrs. Stinson, once a fashionable boarding-house keeper, but who, after many reverses of fortune, sank into the depths of poverty and degradation, and finally committed suicide; and a sixth upon Bernard Gilligan, an employee of the Manhattan Gas Company, who was thrown from his wagon and killed.

LOCAL.

A Scene in the Cars.—A merry Christmas gathering was found in the Carrollton cars yesterday evening. Without, the rain came down in sullen mist; the dull, leaden clouds obscuring day-light while the sun was yet far above the horizon, gave every object a most lugubrious character. But neither the rain, nor wind, nor the misty gloom of the day had any effect upon the spirits of the party who attracted our observation.

It was a party of negroes on their way to town to enjoy Christmas. A darkey, with grizzled locks, was playing upon a fiddle bearing the marks of long use, a Virginia breakdown, to the music of which a party of his fellow servants were dancing—the heel and toe beating the time upon the floor of the car.

As the dancers performed their part with a spirit that showed their heart was in their sport, another group at regular intervals, came in with a species of vocal chorus:

"Christmas comes only one a year.
Yo ho! yo ho!
We'll keep it while it is here.
Yo ho! yo ho!"

This scene of boisterous mirth and negro minstrelsy was enacted in the car especially devoted to servants, but the sound of enjoyment penetrated back to other apartments of the train, and attracted a crowd of interested spectators.

An Englishman present, who was not familiar with Southern life, looked on with peculiar interest. He watched the strange dance of the stalwart boy, who apparently never took his heels from the floor, but whose legs, moving in a species of convulsive jerks, producing a rapping in perfect consonance with the rude air, almost as mysterious as that produced by the spirits; and the more active pirouettes of another equally muscular form of darkness, that seemed to echo the floor-beating of the other; and with manifest surprise he exclaimed—"In all my travels, I have never seen such a scene as this."

Nor do we think similar mirth and enjoyment could be found among the sons of toil of any other country. Yet this is a scene common to every homestead in the South this Christmas holiday. With the birth of the day the quarters of every plantation begin to bustle with life; the sound of innocent revelry commences; and all day and during another night the strains of the violin and the excitement of the dance have been kept up, the master and mistress and children of their household participating in the rustic sports of their servants and contributing to their good cheer. COMMERCIAL.

Tuesday Evening, December 28, 1858.

The following table exhibits the ruling prices in our Cotton market this evening.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	7 @ 8	Good Middling	—@—
Ordinary	8¼@ 8¾	Middling Fair	—@—
Good Ordinary	10¼@10¾	Fair	—@—
Low Middling	10¾@11	Good Fair	—@—
Middling	11¼@12⅛	Good and Fine	—@—

The following summary, copied from the New Orleans Price Current, of 25th inst., furnishes the annexed statement of the week's business. The operations of the week have been but to a moderate extent in the general market, though it will be seen that Sugar and Molasses continue to move off freely, with a good degree of steadiness in prices. In our leading staple, Cotton, a check has been encountered through adverse European advices, and dealers have been compelled to yield somewhat in prices in order to continue sales. Tobacco remains inactive and depressed and the operations in most articles of Western Produce continue to be confined chiefly to limited parcels for home consumption.....At a late hour on Thursday evening, Liverpool dates to 9th inst. were received. The Liverpool cotton market is reported to have declined 1 16d. for Middling Orleans; which are quoted at 6¾d. Manchester advices continue favorable, the demand being good, and prices firm.....The river has risen 3 feet 10 inches within the week, and is now 6 feet 2 inches below high water mark.....The sales of the three first days of the week were 19,500 bales, at a decline of ⅛@⅜c. On Wednesday a fair business was transacted, the sales amounting to 8000, on Thursday 9000, and on Friday about 12,000 bales were disposed of; the total sales of the week amount to 48,500; the receipts to 76,710; increase in receipts as compared with last year, 072,138 bales.

Sugar—The sales of the week amount to about 13,000 hhds.; we quote for inferior and refining, 3½@4; common to good common, 4¼@5; fair to fully fair, 5⅛@5¾; prime to choice, 6@6¾; centrifugal and clarified, 5¾@8; Refined, 8½@9 ₱ lb.

Molasses—The sales of the week are about 17,500 bbls; the quotations being for inferior and fermenting, 25@27; primo to choice, 27@28; in hhds. 31½@33c ₱ gallon.

Flour—The sales of the week have reached about 11,000 bbls. at $5@5 12½ for superfine Indiana and Ohio bbls; $5 50 for fancy, etc., $5 50@8 00 for extra; and $4 25@4 50 for unbranded.

Grain—The supply of Corn is light, and the market exhibits more firmness—prices range from 75@80c ₱ bushel for yellow and white. Oats are scarce at 70@78 and 80c ₱ bushel, for new to primo old. Wheat arrives slowly, there have been but few transactions at $1 10@1 15 for White.

Pork—The transactions in Mess have been at $18@18 50 ₱ bbl.

Beef—Prime Mess and favorite breeds, are selling at $14@$16.

Bacon—Sales at for shoulders 7@7¼; ribbed sides 9¾@10, clear sides 10@10¼c, and hams from 9¾@13c ₱ lb according to quality.

Lard—we quote at 11¼@12c ₱ lb, tierces and kegs.

Butter—Western, 9@11; Roll, 22@24c ₱ lb.

Coffee—We quote 10½@11c for fair to good fair, 11¼@11½ for prime.

Live Stock—The supply is ample, and the market easy. We quote: Beef—Western, 7½@9c, Texas, $0@35, according to quality; calves and yearlings, $5@11; Hogs 8@8¼c ₱ lb; Sheep $4@5; Cows $30@75 ₱ head.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"Suffer the Little Children to come unto Me."

HOME AGAIN.

Good morning, little readers, good morning! How do you all do? The editor has been away from the Advocate office for a month. He has been attending the Conferences. He attended the Alabama Conference first, at Macon, Mississippi. Then he came home to New Orleans, and had only time to eat one dinner with his wife and little ones, before starting for the Mississippi Conference, at Woodville, Mississippi. When that was over, he hurried down to New Orleans again, where the Louisiana Conference was holding in the second day of its session. And now that is over, the Editor again takes his seat to write to the children.

FIVE HUNDRED PREACHERS.

At these Conferences, little readers, you would be astonished at the number of preachers. In all, in the last month, we have seen about five hundred of them. When you get to Conference, here they come—on steamboat and railroad, on horseback, and in buggies. Some of them old preachers, and some young; some of them large, and some small; some of them handsome, some not so much so; some of them well-dressed, and some otherwise; some with black eyes, and some with blue, some with gray, and some with hazel. They have all been working for God, and for the salvation of souls. Have they established any Sunday Schools in your country, little readers? Has your preacher ever talked to you about the salvation of your soul? If they have done neither of these things, you must talk to them about it. Tell them they ought to do better.

NOTHING.

I asked a lad what he was doing;
"Nothing, good Sir," said he to me.
"By nothing well and long pursuing,
"Nothing," said I "you'll surely be."

I asked a lad what he was thinking;
"Nothing," quoth he, "I do declare."
"Many," said, I "in taverns drinking,
By idle minds were carried there."

There's nothing great, there's nothing wise,
Which idle hands and minds supply;
Those who all thought and toil despise,
Have nothings live, and nothings die.

A thousand noughts are not a feather,
When in a sum they are all brought;
A thousand idle lads together,
Are still but nothings joined to naught.

And yet of merit they will boast,
And sometimes pompous seem and haughty;
But still 'tis ever plain to most,
That nothing boys are mostly naughty.

JACK AND HIS MEAL-BAG.

Tom mill was doing a great business that day, when Jack and David Jamieson rode up with their bag of corn to be ground. They lived on a small farm five miles off the main roads, and were therefore not sorry at the prospect of waiting several hours for their grist. It gave them a chance of seeing something of the liveliness and bustle of "The Corner," as that part of the village was called where the tavern, store, and mill stood. They ran about here and there, and saw and heard a great deal.

At last, a heavy shower coming on, they went back to the mill to eat their lunch and see when their turn came. The miller's son and the squire's son were engaged in a brisk talk, which took Jack's attention. David went to look after the corn. The miller's son was urging upon the squire's son the importance of finding what truth the Bible enjoined, which the squire's son parried by saying, it was no matter what a man believed, provided he's sincere." The rattling off hand tone of the young man pleased Jack, and he wished he could talk so. "Wouldn't he shut up his grandsire? Yes, that he would." "No matter what a man believes, provided he's sincere," said Jack to himself, bridling up, and bracing his conscience against the godly conversation of his relations. He'd fix 'em now, he said, with a cant of his head.

It was not until late in the afternoon that the boy's grist was ready; when the old mare was brought out of the shed, the bag hoisted on her back, and Jack and David both mounted her—bag, boys, and mare homeward-bound. "You've got a longer ride ahead than I wish you had, boys," said the miller, casting his eyes towards a black cloud which was rising and darkening the western sky. "There's plenty of water up there for my mill."

The mare set briskly off, and was soon lost to sight among the windings of the forest road. But the gloom gathered faster than the horse trotted, and it was quite dark when they reached a fork in the road, where it might make a very considerable difference which path they took home. One was the travelled road. This way there was a good bridge over Bounding brook, a mountain stream, which was often dangerously swelled by the spring rains. It was the safest, though the longest way home. The other was a wood path through the Pines, often taken in good weather by the farmers living on the east side of the town, to shorten the distance to the corner. In this road Bounding brook was crossed by fording.

"Father told us to be sure and take the travelled road, if 'twas late," said David. "Going to," said Jack; and the mare stopped at the fork, as if to let the boys be sure which to take. In fact, Jack was a little confused. The windings of the road, with nothing but woods on each side, and of course no distinct landmarks to govern him; the gloom of the night hiding what objects might have served to direct him; together with his small acquaintance with the road, did puzzle the boy, although Jack, being the elder of the two, with a dash of pride about him, would not own it. As the mare stopped, he came to the conclusion and whipped up. "All right," he cried.

"Are you sure?" asked David. "This way, I know," answered Jack. "I don't know," said David; "let me jump off and run down to that light yonder and ask; There must be a cabin there, and folks." "O, we can't stop for all that," said Jack. "I honestly believe this is the travelled road, David, and that's enough; can't you trust me?" "But your honestly believing it don't make it so," muttered David. "I haven't a doubt of it, Dave; you be still," cried Jack angrily. "I think we ought to ask so as to be sure," persisted David. But Jack whipped up, and poor David's fears and words went to the winds, as gust after gust of the coming shower roared through the forest, and Jack urged the mare to all the speed which her heavy load would allow, on and on through the dark woods. Jack was well pleased with the [illegible] he had hastily decided about the way; and the further he went, the more and more confirmed was he that it was the right way.

Presently the roarings of Bounding brook arose above the rustlings of the woods. A switch over the mare's haunches, and "We shall be over the bridge in a jiffy," cried Jack; "then, old fellow, what'll you say?" David privately muttered, "He'd like to feel himself over," when a few more centers, and—Jack, David, meal and mare were floundering in the raging waters of the swollen stream, pitch dark, the storm on them, and miles from human help. The first few minutes of horrible surprise it were in vain to paint. Jack at last found himself ashored on a log of driftwood, the icy waters breaking over him, and the bridle still fast in his hand. "David!" he shouted at the top of his voice. "The Lord have mercy," cried David, "I'm somewhere." The meal! ah, that was making a pudding in some wild eddy of the bounding brook far below.

"No matter what a fellow believes, provided he's sincere," cried poor Jack, throughly drenched and humbled. It's the biggest lie the devil ever got up. It is matter. Being right is the main thing. Sincerity don't save a fellow from the tremendous consequences of being wrong, that's flat. Then what's the use of a fellow's sincerity? It can't get him out of the scrape; he's got to take it. Lord help us. Didn't I honestly believe I was on the bridge of the travelled road, when I was like going to perdition in the find of the wood path? Lord help us!" And the woeful disasters of that night completely and forever cured poor Jack of the popular error, which has plunged many a poor soul in the wilder surges of unbelief and irreligion. [Child's Paper.

LITTLE BOY AND INFIDEL SHOEMAKER.

A LITTLE boy who loved the Savior was one Sabbath-day passing by the shop of an infidel shoemaker, who, not content with breaking the rest of this holy day by his work, amused himself as he sat at his bench by singing profane and ribald songs. When the little boy went home he told his father and asked for a tract to give the blasphemer; but the father replied that it would be of no use, as many efforts had already been put forth without the smallest success, and that the last time a tract had been offered him the shoemaker had attempted an assault upon the giver.

"Never mind, father," said the child, "give me a tract about Sabbath-breaking, and I will drop it at the door." It was done, and when sweeping out the shop the shoemaker picked up the tract, and without looking at it threw it, with other waste paper, under his counter. Another was put in the same place the next day and shared the same fate, and likewise a third and a fourth also, not one of which had been even glanced at by him for whose benefit they were intended.

On the next Sabbath morning in soling a pair of shoes, having occasion to use some paper for filling up the false soles, he drew from their hiding places under the counter sundry refuse bits, among which were the tracts. As he spread them out on his last, his eyes fell on the words, remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. With a gesture of impatience he turned the tract over, when lo, as if written with the point of a diamond, stood out in bold relief, the emphatic denunciation, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all the words of the law to do them." I, the Lord, have spoken it."

"Pshaw," he said, "who is this Lord? I do not believe in his existence; and why should I obey it?" Then wishing to shut out from sight the unpleasing words, he caught up another and spread it over the first; but his eye fell on this passage, "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God," and by a strange impulse, he went on to read the reasons why men try to persuade themselves there is no God; as he read, conscience whispered "It is true;" and the Spirit of God carried to his heart its message of mingled wrath and mercy, till he was driven in anguish to the feet of Jesus, and found joy and peace in believing in him.

SKETCHES AND NARRATIVES.

Shipwreck of the Jeanie Johnson:

The Jeanie Johnson sailed from Quebeck for Hull, with a cargo of pine lumber on the 5th of Oct.; on the 21st a terrible gale struck her, and she began to make water; that day she filled, the bulwarks were washed away, and on the 31st she was abandoned. The following is a portion of the Captain's

NARRATIVE:

All hands now determined to take to the main rigging, as they did not know the moment the vessel might go down. My wife was in bed in the cabin, with her child, and I came to her and told her that we "must all take to the main rigging." She was very much affected by this news, but said she would go. So great was the danger that she had no time to put any clothes on her, scarcely, with the exception of a coat and one or two other loose garments. The night was not very cold at this time. We gathered up what bread we could, as some of it had been to the windward side of the vessel, where it escaped being spoiled by sea-water. We also took up a round of salt beef, some raw potatoes, and a ham of bacon. We tried to get some fresh water, but found that all the casks containing it had been washed overboard, except those in the forward part of the vessel, near the forecastle, which we could not get near on account of the heavy seas that were now always rolling uninterruptedly over the vessel. We were, consequently, without water. We secured ourselves in the maintop with canvas and ropes, which served us for shelter also. We could not sleep any, scarcely, that night. At seven o'clock the next morning, 23d, we saw a sail to leeward; she was also a bark, and she passed within a mile of us. We managed to set a signal of distress, but the bark passed us without taking any notice of it, and we supposed that he did not see it. The storm continued to rage violently, and we were in continual danger, expecting the mainmast to go over the ship's side. The 23d was spent in a miserable manner by the whole of us. Our clothes were wet. We could not stretch ourselves, but were all huddled together without room to stir. Some of the men went down to the top of the deck-house for the purpose of stretching their legs. My child was quiet, sometimes slept a little, and occasionally cried for a drink, which he could not get. I cannot say that my wife was more frightened than any of the rest of us, or that she said more about the danger. We kept our flag of distress flying now continually, but no vessel hove in sight after the bark passed until the 25th. On the 23d we all began to feel the want of fresh water. Every part of the vessel, except the upper part of the cabin and the masts, was always under water. On the night of the 23d some of the men slept on the roof of the cabin, and every night afterward till we were rescued. On the 24th, at noon, we saw a brig to leeward of us pass to the westward; but she did not notice us. I sometimes managed to get down from the rigging to stretch my limbs; but my wife never came down from the time she went up but once, when she tried to take a sleep in the cabin. This was on the sixth day after she went up to the maintopmast. She no sooner lay down, however, than a large sea came over the stern of the ship, washing into the cabin, and sweeping away the bed she was sleeping on, and drenching herself and the child with water. She then went up to the rigging again, and never came down afterward till the vessel came along to rescue us. On the night of the 24th our rudder was unshipped by a heavy sea, which also carried away the counter under it, and the ship was thenceforward unmanagable, and tossed round and round by the wind and waves. The want of water was greatly felt by every one on board now. On the 25th some light showers fell, but they were dashed about by the force and fury of the wind that we could not catch them in the sails, and were glad to receive some drops which fell from the rigging into our mouths, though they tasted strongly of salt and tar. This was the first supply of water we received; and before we got it we were nearly exhausted for the want of it. My wife's lips were almost parched, and I was ready to faint myself from weakness. The water made me sick; and when the rain was over we were nearly as thirsty as ever. On the 26th we had another supply of rain, which we drank in the same way as the first we got. This water was better than the other—not so brackish, and more of it. We were relieved by this supply considerably. We could not eat the salt beef lest it would produce thirst, and we were frequently obliged to slice the raw potatoes and eat them, that their juice might wet our mouths. We also got small pieces of lead into our mouths, and kept chewing them to keep our mouths cool; and we fancied that this allayed our thirst in some measure. The weather continued much the same way as I have described it; the wind blowing from the same point that it had been blowing from all along, until the evening of the 27th, when the hurricane shifted to the north, and we had intense cold.

We were now exhausted for want of proper sleep or a place to stretch ourselves; and this unfavorable change in the wind almost drove the men to despair. My wife was now the greatest sufferer. She could not stretch her limbs at all, and was nearly famished by cold and thirst. My child was also suffering very much from the same causes, and cried a good deal. The wind continued in the same point until the 30th and 31st, and the weather continued cold. On the 30th some snow, hail, and rain fell. We caught some of the hail, and relieved our thirst more than we had hitherto been able to do. About 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 31st we espied a sail to windward; she bore down on us, and passed under our stern after five o'clock. She proved to be the Dutch bark Sophie Elizabeth, Captain Vanderbeef, from Amsterdam, bound to New York. The captain then came to leeward, and hove his vessel to close by us. He then spoke us, thus: 'Have you any boats?' 'We have not.' He then lowered his quarter-boat and sent her over to us. Five of us got into her, and she returned to the Sophie Elizabeth again. There was a very heavy sea running at the time, and it was with great peril that the boat could live She then made twn other trips and took the remainder of us off: and it was after six o'clock in the evening when we were all safely on board and the vessel again on her course. When we left the wreck she was much in the same condition as when her rudder became unshipped, and she was tossed about in all directions. We could scarcely move when we were rescued; but we met with great kindness from the captain and crew of the Sophie Elizabeth. I could not bear anything to touch my feet for several days, and even to-day my boots cause me some pain. The limbs of every one of us became so sore that we could not walk the deck of the vessel for the first two or three days. My wife and child were very bad when they were taken off the wreck, and my wife could not stretch her limbs for some days. They are both now almost recovered, but still delicate from the effects of their sufferings. I will always feel deeply grateful to the captain and crew who rescued me and my wife and child from the condition we were in on board the wreck."

Japan and the Japanese.—

The Newark (N. J.) Advertiser, publishes the annexed interesting letter from a correspondent on board the U. S. steam frigate Minnesota, dated Nnugasaki, Japan, September 1, 1856: We have been three weeks at this place, and I am delighted with the Japanese. It is very pleasant to see such clean, intellectual looking fellows after spending so much time among the disgusting Chinsmen; and their country too is beautiful—high land, covered with fine forests and terraced fields, surrounds us on all sides, and back in a pleasant valley lies the neat city of Nangasaki. We arrived here on the 11th of August, and found the Powhatan had arrived a few hours before us from Simoda.

The Japanese seem to me the happiest race of people in the world. It is a treat for us to walk through the clean streets of Nangasaki, and look in the shops, and on their bright and intellectual faces. The pretty little half dressed children run out, hold out their hands for "bonton cassi," (give me button,) and when they get one they seem so delighted, and laugh so much like home-children, that I feel disposed to cut off all the buttons of my coat to give them. And their bazaars are wonderful. Such a profusion of superb Japanese work that one cannot decide what to buy.

I send you a specimen of their paper money which was issued for the use of foreigners. Their gold and silver coins are exceedingly hard to get hold of. The enclosed piece of paper is worth about two cents. It surprises me to find how much foreign intercourse has already improved the Japanese. They are certainly learning very fast. In the harbor is lying a Japanese man-of-war steamer presented to the government by the Dutch, but manned and worked at sea by the natives alone. And on an interior lake I understand there is a steam vessel built by the Japanese throughout, including the machinery.

At the Dutch machine shop at Nangasaki, the natives are the best workmen, and I am told that their quickness and skill are wonderful. They readily acquire all the new improvements in the art of war. I showed a fellow who came on board a Sharpe's rifle, thinking of course that it would be a subject of great curiosity and wonder to him; he looked at it and examined it closely, and inquired if that was a Minnie rifle. I then showed him a patent musket; he examined it critically as before, and then went through the whole manual of arms as perfectly and soldierly as any of our marine guard could have done.

I must not forget to tell you something about the "Feast of Lanterns," which we were fortunate enough to witness. It is a feast in honor of the dead. For three days all business is suspended. In the evenings, all the graveyards on the hillsides are illuminated by candles in different colored lanterns, hung by thousands on the shrubs and trees. The graveyards are the most beautiful parts of the city, and very extensive, reaching from the termination of the city on the hill sides nearly to their summits. In the evening of the feast, just as the moon was rising above the hills to the northward, the sides of the hills to the southward were bathed in a soft glow of fire, and now and then a rocket would shoot up from the midst, producing a beautiful effect.

The second day seemed to be the principal one of the feast. On the evening of that day, small fancifully decorated boats were pushed off from the shore, each containing one or more lanterns, a small quantity of choice food, a bottle of "sakec," and a slip of paper with the sailing directions of the little vessel. Of the number of these boats that sent out alone upon the waters I cannot attempt to make an estimate, though I know there must have been thousands.

These boats are expected to meet the departed friends in some unknown place, and supply them with food for their long journey to some land of bliss. One of these little messengers came floating so near our ship that we picked it up to satisfy our curiosity. It was made of closely bound straw, and in it were pretty little porcelain dishes, filled with presents, etc., and a bottle of sakee. On a strip of paper was written the name of the deceased, and "Steer to the Southward." After reading the sailing directions, we immediately launched the craft again, for lear the poor fellow might be pining for her arrival. But I fear many a lost one fainted on his long journey, if he depended alone on his vessel's cargo, for next morning the harbor was covered with wrecked boats.

The simple faith which can thus send gifts of love to departed friends, trusting in some unseen power to guide them safely on the waters to their mysterious destination, and the loving care which adorns the graves of the dead, show, I think, that the minds and the hearts of the people are far above those of the Chinese, who as a general thing manifest little regard for their dead, throwing them in the river just as they die, or burying them carelessly just below the surface of the ground.

LECTURE ON AMERICANISM.

CARL SCHURZ, in his lecture on Americanism, says: I intend to speak of America as the great representative of the spirit of the age. And when I use the word Americanism, I do not mean the narrow and poor policy which certain men apply to certain political questions, but the ideal nature of the country, of this people, and of their institutions.

It is one of the earliest recollections of my boyhood, that one summer night our whole village was astir in consequence of an uncommon occurrence. I say our village, for I was born in a small hamlet not far from the beautiful spot whre the Rhine rolls his waters out of the wonderful gate of the Seven Mountains, and meanders with majestic tranquility through one of the most glorious valleys of the world. That night our neighbors were pressing around a few wagons covered with linen sheets, and loaded with household utensils and boxes and trunks, to their utmost capacity. One of our neighboring families were moving far away across a great water, and it was said that they would never again return. And I was silent; tears strickling down the weather-beaten cheeks, and the hands of tough peasants firmly pressing each other, and some of the men and women hardly able to speak when they nodded to one another a last farewell. At last, the train got into motion; they gave three cheers for America! and then, in the first gray dawn of the morning, I saw them away over the hill until they disappeared in the shadow of the forest. And I heard many a man say, how happy he would be if he was able to go with them to that great and free, new country. That was the first time I heard of America, and my childish imagination took possession of a land, covered, partly with majestic trees, partly with flowery prairies, immeasurable to the eye, and intersected with large rivers and broad lakes—a land where everybody could do what he thought best, and where nobody was poor, because everybody was free.

And later, when I was old enough to read descriptions of this country, and books on American history fell into my hands, the off-spring of my imagination acquired the colors of reality, and I began to exercise my brain with the thought, what man might be and become where left perfectly free to himself. And still later, when ripening into manhood, I looked up from my school books into the stir and noise of the world, and the trumpet tones of struggling humanity struck my ear and thrilled my heart, and I saw my nation shake their chains in order to burst them, and I heard a gigantic, universal shout for Liberty rising up to the skies; and, at last, after having struggled manfully and drenched the earth of Father-land with the blood of thousands of noble beings, I saw that nation crushed down again, not only by overwhelming armies, but by the lead weight of customs and institutions, and notions, and prejudices, which past centuries hesped upon her shoulders, and which a moment of enthusiasm, however sublime, could not destroy—then I consoled an almost despondent heart with the idea of a youthful people, and of original institutions, clearing the way for an untrammeled development of the ideal nature of man. Then I turned my eyes instinctively across the Atlantic Ocean, and America, and Americanism, as I fancied it, became to me the last depository of the hopes of all true friends of Humanity.
